PROSPECTUS.

This Society is now completely registered, and prepared to transact all the usual business of Life Assurance.

It is based upon a principle which will combine the benefits of Mutual Assurance with the guarantee of a Subscribed Capital of ONE MILLION STERLING.

Whilst perfect security is thus given, the number and character of the Shareholders (consisting of nearly 500 Members of the Legal Profession), will command a large amount of business, and consequent advantages will arise to the Assured.

Tables of Premiums have been prepared expressly for this Office, by F. G. P. NEISON, Esq. F.L.S., calculated on the nearest approximation to the real law of mortality.

These Tables will be found to afford peculiar encouragement to the assurance of young lives. They embrace participating and non-participating scales.

In the participating class, the Assured will be entitled to have one-fifth of the profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of addition to the sum assured, or by deduction of premium, as the parties may elect. No deduction will be made from such profits for interest of capital, or for a guarantee fund.

The Premiums may be paid half-yearly or annually, or by a single payment.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by writing to the Secretary.

The Directors meet on Thursdays at Two o'clock; but Assurances may be effected on any day, by applying between the hours of Ten and Four, at the Offices of the Society, where Prospectuses and all other requisite information may be obtained.

CHARLES JOHN GILL,

57, Chancery-lane.

Secretary.

GALVANISM.—Invalids are solicited to send to Mr. HALSE, of 5, PELHAM CRESCENT, BROMPTON, LONDON, for his PAMPHLET ON MEDICAL GALVANISM, which will be forwarded free on receipt of Two Postage Stamps. They will be astonished at its contents. In it will be found the particulars of cures in cases of Asthma, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Tic-douloureux, Paralysis, Spinal Complaints, Headaches, deficiency of Nervous Energy, Liver Complaints, General Debility, Indigestion, Stiff Joints, all sorts of Nervous disorders, &c. Mr. Halse's method of applying the Galvanic Fluid is quite free from all unpleasant sensation; in fact, it is rather pleasurable than otherwise, and many ladies are exceedingly fond of it. It quickly causes the patient to do without medicine. Terms, One Guinea per week.

"Galvanism.—We hold it a positive duty to call attention to the extraordinary cures lately effected by Mr. Halse, of Pelham-crescent, Brompton, London, by the means of Galvanism. A detail of these may be seen in a clever pamphlet on the subject, lately published by the practitioner himself; but we are enabled to corroborate the most essential part of these statements, by the fact of having ourselves undergone the operation, the process of which is no way disagreeable, while the effect is equally astonishing and complete. In Asthma, more especially, the powers of Galvanism, properly applied, are wonderful."—Court Journal.

"Galvanism.—The Science of Galvanism appears to be now brought to great perfection; for we are given to understand that it can be administered to mere infants, without producing the least inconvenience to them. Mr. Halse, of Pelham-crescent, Brompton, is the gentleman to whom the public are indebted for this improvement in the Galvanic Apparatus; in short, Mr. Halse may be considered the Medical Galvanist of the metropolis. Like most other men of talent, however, he has opponents and imitators; but what reasonable person, who feels desirous of trying the remedial powers of Galvanism, would think of resorting to any imitator, when Mr. Halse can himself be applied to?"—Weekly Chronicle.

"Galvanism.—Our readers may have noticed several extracts we have given from Mr. Halse's Pamphlets on Medical Galvanism. We have reason to believe, that every one stated in the pamphlet is perfectly true, whether they certainly are; for a short time since we called on Mr. Halse, and were introduced by him to a gentleman who was undergoing the operation. The patient informed us that it was not at all an unpleasant sensation; indeed, we felt it ourselves, and there was not the least unpleasantness about it. This gentleman's case was Paralysis; and he had been so long that before he came to Mr. Halse, one leg had become away to a mere skeleton, 'but now,' said he, 'you perceive, it is both stout and healthy.' Such, indeed, was the case. If we can judge by the number of patients Mr. Halse has, we should say he is making some very wonderful cures."—Shipping and Mercantile Gazette.

HALSE'S PORTABLE GALVANIC APPARATUS.—Mr. W. H. Halse, of 5, Pelham-crescent, Brompton, London, is now ready to supply patients with his PATENT PORTABLE APPARATUS. It is constructed on a simple plan, that the most unscientific can manage it; and it renders it far superior to all other galvanic apparatus, in that it will remain in action for several weeks without least trouble. It is constructed on precisely the same principle as the ones he uses at Pelham-crescent; and it galvanizes between 40 and 50 patients every day, it may well supposed that he has brought the galvanic apparatus to great perfection. Price 10 guineas, the cash is required on the order. Medical advice will be given how to apply it. N.B.—By inclosing two postage stamps to Mr. Halse, pamphlet on galvanism will be forwarded post-free.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

April 30 and July 29, 1845; April 23, 1846.

Re MARTIN, Ex parte SANDAU.Form of warrant of commitment in bankruptcy—Jurisdiction—Costs—Practice in Bankruptcy.

The petition of appeal in this case of Mr. Van Sandau was, that the order of the chief judge of the Court of Review, by which Mr. Van Sandau had been ordered to pay certain costs and was restrained from proceeding in an action against Messrs. Turner and Hensman, might be discharged or varied. The principal question turned upon the form of the order of the Court of Review. The action at law had been allowed to proceed to the trial of a demurrer, and the rest of the motion stood over. The judgment of the Queen's Bench upon the demurrer had been in favour of the plaintiff. That decision had been made upon a point of pleading, by reason of the absence of certain averments in the demurrer, and the real questions still remained undecided.

Bagshawe and Roll, for the petitioner, Mr. Van Sandau, then argued that the warrant on which the petitioner had been committed was a simple sending to prison, without any finding as a substantive fact that a contempt had been committed; that such an order was irregular, and ought to be set aside. That the Order of the 3rd February, 1844, directed that the petitioner should stand committed, &c. until further order, and that he should pay the costs, charges, and expenses of Messrs. Turner and Hensman; that the direction to pay costs, charges, and expenses was contrary to the principles of the Court when exercising a criminal jurisdiction. The party subjected to punishment for a contempt of Court cannot be fined for the benefit of a third party. Even if the other parts of the order could be sustained, that part of it which directs Mr. Van Sandau to pay charges, and expenses, is wrong.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The usual course is to commit the party for contempt, and when he comes to ask for his discharge, then the Court imposes terms.

Bagshawe.—Green v. Elgie. The warrant was signed by G. Rose, J. but there was no seal to the warrant.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Do they affix the seal of the Court to an order of an individual judge? One judge may also act as an individual judge, and not as the Court of Review. "By the Court" is the usual way, with the seal of the Court affixed. Does the Act say under the seal of the Court?

Bagshawe.—No. There is another conclusive objection: the Act says the Court must sit in public; this was not done in public, for Sir Geo. Rose was sitting in his private room while the Court of Review was at the same time sitting in public.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the original order is vicious, all the consequential orders are bad.

Roll.—The judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench decides none of the points in question. He cited Leathem v. Charnock's case, and Long Wellesley's case.

VOL. VII. No. 163.

Swanston, Kenyon Parker, and Simon, for the respondents.—The respondents had informed the Court by supplemental petition of what had been done at law.

Bagshawe objected that the supplemental petition, which prayed that it might come on for hearing at the same time with the petition, and that Mr. Van Sandau might be restrained from proceeding with his action, could not be heard as an original petition. The Court of Review could alone hear original petitions in bankruptcy. (Ex parte Penson; Ex parte Lowe, 1 Deacon & Chitty; Ex parte Langston, 1 Rose, 26; Re Gardner, 1 V. & B. 45, 1 Rose, 377.) There was nothing in the prayer of the petition which shewed it to be supplemental.

Swanston.—We now come to restrain further proceedings for damages. We could not, in the present state of the proceedings, go to the Court of Review.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If I had disposed of no part of the case, could this have come on by original petition? I have disposed of part of the case entirely: am I not in the same position as if the petition had not originally contained that part of which I have disposed? It is as if that part of the petition was struck out; the rest remains to be disposed of. What right does that give to present a cross-petition? It was assumed the Court of Queen's Bench would decide the question of law on the first order. The rest of the case is before me. The respondents' petition must be dismissed, with costs.

Swanston then proceeded to argue the case of the respondents on the original petition, and contended that there was a sufficient constructive adjudication of contempt in the warrant of commitment. In the case of a commitment in this court for the breach of an injunction, there is no adjudication.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What is a contempt may admit of various conclusions. If the order be to pay money on a certain day, it is sufficient that the money is not paid. The Court does not adjudge that the money is not paid, the thing speaks for itself. But that does not apply to a committal for contempt. The practice of this Court may have been too loose; because this Court does not allow the interference of any other jurisdiction. In the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, on a committal for contempt, you must very be careful, because the jurisdiction is not final.

Swanston.—The Court of Review has jurisdiction to grant injunction. (Ex parte Lund, 6 Ves. 781; Ex parte Stevens, 11 Ves. 24; Re Cockerell, 16 Ves. 451; Ex parte Reffey, 19 Ves. 468; Re Elgie; Dicus v. Lord Brougham, 6 Carrington & Payne; Ex parte Hardy, Buch. 24; Ex parte Cowan, 3 Barnes & Alderson; Ex parte Higgins, 1 Glyn & Jameson, 122; Ex parte Glossop, 3 Glyn & Jameson, 268; Kirkpatrick v. Dennet, 1 Simon & Stuart, 408; Flower v. Herbert, 2 Ves. sen. 326.)

Bagshawe, in reply.

At the conclusion of the argument,

The LORD CHANCELLOR suggested that the action for trespass by Mr. Van Sandau against Messrs. Turner and Hensman should be abandoned, and on that being done, consented to decide the whole question at issue between the parties, including the right to bring an action, and the costs of the various proceedings. That suggestion having been acceded to by the parties, the question was argued on the 29th of July, 1845, by one counsel of the common law bar on each side.

Humfrey, for Messrs. Turner and Hensman, contended that, under the circumstances, no action of trespass would lie, and that, therefore, his clients were not bound to pay any of the expenses of the proceedings by Mr. Van Sandau, after the demurrer. An important feature in the case was, that Mr. Van Sandau had put himself voluntarily into custody. He was not taken by the officer, he went and surrendered himself; and being in custody upon such a surrender, he could not treat even the officer who took him as a trespasser, much less the persons upon whose petition the Court of Bankruptcy made the order for his commitment. The person, however, who put the Court in motion was not the person to be proceeded against, although it was clearly proved that the Court had been wrong in presuming the order on which the warrant issued, or in issuing a warrant that had turned out to be bad in point of form. That question was set at rest by the case of West v. Small (3 Mee. & Wel. 314). The case of Green v. Elgie (14 Law J.) was also a decision on the subject.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—What has been done by Messrs. Turner and Hensman with respect to the warrant, or the execution of the warrant?

Humfrey.—Nothing. They had paid the fees of the court in the same manner as every sailor is compelled to pay, but in other respects they did nothing. The warrant was signed by the judge and handed to the registrar, who passed it to the messenger. For any thing that appeared, Messrs. Turner and Hensman never read it nor saw it. The case of Hodger v. Harding, before Lord Denman, was also a much stronger one than the present; and the case of Watson v. Bowdell (4 Law T. 87) was stronger still. On the authority of these cases, he contended that the attorneys were not responsible for putting the Court in motion, and that when the Court was put in motion, they were not responsible for any thing that took place upon or after the execution of the warrant, unless malice was brought home to them; and that the surrender of Mr. Van Sandau being a voluntary one, without hostile caption, he had no locus standi, and no right to complain of any of the proceedings. Messrs. Turner and Hensman were, therefore, not liable for any of the costs except those of the demurrer, for which, as a piece of pleading declared to be bad by the Court of Queen's Bench, they must pay those costs; but that is independent of the general costs.

Cleasby, for Mr. Van Sandau.—The point of voluntary surrender failed the other side altogether, even on their own statement. The order was made for the discharge of Mr. Van Sandau on the payment of costs to Turner and Hensman, and he was therefore taken into custody and retained in it at their suit and instigation. The only question was, whether the action for trespass commenced by Van Sandau on the payment of costs was a degree of active interference which he conceived would fully justify such an action, independent of all the other points of the case. The matter of Green v. Elgie did not bear out the position of the other side, that the person who put the Court in motion was not liable for the consequences of that proceeding. No case had been produced, no case could be produced, in which it was laid down that the person who put the Court in motion was not liable when it turned out that the proceedings of the Court could not be sustained. The case of Barker v. Braham (3 Wilson, 368) was an authority on that point that could not be disputed. In the present case, Messrs. Turner and Hensman bespoke the order, and paid for it, and paid also for the warrant, and then charged these payments in the bill of costs to Mr. Van Sandau.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I wish to know clearly how that was.

Bagshawe stated that, according to his recollection of what took place before Sir George Rose, there never had been the most remote idea of considering the imprisonment under the warrant as any thing but a hostile proceeding.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I take the facts to be in this form; that Messrs. Turner and Hensman took the objection that Mr. Van Sandau was in custody, and that being so, they objected to his discharge until the costs were paid.

Bagshawe.—That was so. There was no question that all was done at their instigation, and that Mr. Van Sandau was not allowed to go at large until he paid a deposit for the costs.

Cleasby.—The case of Codrington v. Lloyd (8 Adol. & Ellis, 448) is an authority quite inconsistent with the principle contended for on the other side, that the person who put the Court in motion, and failed, he was as much responsible for his acts, unless on the proof of malice. On the contrary, when a person puts the proceedings of the Court in motion, and fails, was responsible for it as if the process on which he acted had never had legal existence. The case of the commitment by a magistrate had no application to the question under consideration; because, if the magistrate proceeded wrongfully, the sufferer had his remedy against him personally, but in the case of Mr. Van Sandau, the illegal act had been done through the means of a judge of a court of record. The only person to be proceeded against was the person who put the Court in motion; and in an action of trespass he was clearly liable, and was bound to pay the costs.

Humfrey, in reply.—If the action of trespass had been brought against the person so acting, he might have been liable; but that person so acting was the tipstaff, and Messrs. Turner and Hensman had nothing to do with it. The imprisonment was the act of the Court.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The present is a more favourable case than Westwood v. Small. The question decided there was, that if the magistrate does an act not authorised, the party on whose complaint the act was done is not liable if he does nothing actively. Here the party applies for an order for a warrant, the Court does the act, the warrant is void. The question is, what Turner and Hensman did under that void warrant. The question in this case will be, whether I am satisfied the party wrongly acting in assisting the execution of a void warrant is a trespasser.

April 23, 1846.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I shall this morning give judgment on the whole of the points at issue. An arrangement has been entered into between the parties to the petition, that all the matters and differences between them, including also the action at law for damages, should be left to my decision, as a means of putting a stop to all future litigation, and finally arranging all their disputes. The first point, then, for the consideration of the Court under these circumstances, is the validity of the order of commitment of the 4th of February, 1844. Although I consider the form of order used by Lord Cottenham in Charlton's case to be more proper and correct, yet I cannot take it on myself, in the face of so many precedents of the other form, to discharge the order made against Mr. Van Sandau as insufficient and invalid. The second objection to the order is, that it directs the payment of the costs of application for the commitment. It certainly is not usual in cases of commitment for contempt to direct that the person committed should pay the costs. Undoubtedly the ordinary course is to confine the order to a mere commitment, and when the party applies to be discharged, the Court has the opportunity of considering if it is proper to direct payment of costs as the price and condition of liberation from confinement. In the present case, however, the Court of Review has full jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the petition, and there is no doubt it has a right to adjudicate on the question of costs in respect to the order of commitment, by the general authority with which it is invested. The third objection taken by Mr. Van Sandau is, that the order has not been confined to the mere payment of the costs of the application, but that it also includes all charges and expenses. I am of opinion that the order cannot be extended quite so far as that, and in that respect I must, therefore, direct it to be varied, by striking out the words "charges and expenses." If Mr. Van Sandau insists on a taxation of the costs, then there must be a new order; but if he does not, then the order in other respects will stand confirmed. The next point of objection is the order of the 8th of February, 1844. That order is founded on an application to vary the minutes of the former order. As the minutes are no longer in operation, and the order has been passed, there is no reason now to disturb the order, or those of the 2nd and 17th of the same month. I now come to the consideration of the form of the warrant under which Mr. Van Sandau was arrested on the 19th of February. It appears that, by some mistake, the original warrant was not sealed with the seal of the Court, but with the seal of the judge who presided. This is a violation of the 31st of the rules and orders in Bankruptcy of the 11th of January, 1842, which require that the processes of the Court should issue under the seal of the Court. Without, therefore, entering into any elaborate examination of the various other objections urged against the warrant, I am of opinion that the defect in the seal rendered that warrant invalid. When Mr. Van Sandau applied to have the warrant discharged on the ground of its invalidity, the Court made two orders, both dated on the 21st of February. One of these orders was a conditional one, the other absolute. Considering that Mr. Van Sandau has been apprehended on an insufficient warrant, the conditional order must be of course discharged, the other order remaining, as a matter of course. The consequence of discharging the conditional order will be, that Mr. Van Sandau must receive back the costs of that order. The only remaining question related to the action pending in the Court of Queen's Bench. I think that in the action Mr. Van Sandau would have been entitled to a verdict against Messrs. Turner and Hensman on the issue joined in a plea of not guilty; but, looking at the circumstances of the case, and advertent to the fact that the action could only have been maintained in consequence of a mere defect in the course of proceeding, I think that very moderate damages ought to satisfy the justice of the case. Looking at all these circumstances, I feel bound to assess the damages at the sum of 10l. on the whole of the record. With respect to the costs of that action, I direct them to be taxed by the taxing-master of the Court of Bankruptcy in the same way as they would have been taxed by the taxing-officer of the Court of Queen's Bench.

ROLLS COURT.

GLENDINNING v. GLENDINNING.

Will—Construction—Description.

The word "money" may comprehend stock, &c. in the public funds, and need not be confined to money properly so called. Therefore, where a testator left his wife the interest of his money and the use of his goods for life, and at her death bequeathed several legacies, and, lastly, gave the remainder of his property to his brothers and sisters, it was held that the wife took a life interest in stock in the funds, &c.

James Glendinning by his will bequeathed to his wife the interest of his money and the use of his goods for her life, and at her death his will was that 200l. should be given to the Lord's poor of Salem Chapel-court, Wardour-street, Soho, &c. The residue and remainder of his property he gave to be equally divided among his brothers and sisters; his wardrobe to be divided among his brothers. The testator died in 1843, and it being supposed that the widow was only entitled to the interest of the money (about 50l.) in hand at his death and to the use of the furniture in the house, the rest of the property was claimed by the brothers and sisters. Mrs. Glendinning accordingly renounced probate, having, as was supposed, little or no interest, and a brother and sister of the testator took out administration, and proceeded to divide the property, chiefly consisting of stock in the funds. The widow being better advised as to her rights, filed the present bill, and the accounts being ordered to be taken, the Master made his report, and the question now was as to the rights of the parties.

C. P. Cooper (with him Shebbeare) contended that Mrs. Glendinning was entitled to a life interest in the stock, &c. and that the residue of the testator's property was only given over at her death, and was only then payable in the same manner as the pecuniary legacies. (Rogers v. Thomas, 2 Keen, 8; Dowson v. Gaskoin, 2 Keen, 14; Kendall v. Kendall, 4 Russ. 360.)

Kindersley (with him Campbell), contra, contended that "money," per se, only carried money, and not investments, unless in a case where there was no residuary gift, and that the use of the goods meant merely the use of the furniture. The gift of the money and the use of the goods were immediate, and so also was that of the residue. It was said the money was of very little amount; but that is no more an argument than if it were great, and the state of the property at the date of the will is never referred to in aid of the construction. (Gosden v. Dotterill, 1 Myl. & K. 56.)

Cooper, in reply, was not heard.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—It is necessary to give such a meaning to the words of the will as will make the context consistent. The testator meant to dispose of the whole of his property, and he uses the words "money," "goods," "wardrobe," and the general word "property." He gives the interest of his money, not the money itself, and the use of his goods, to his wife for life, and at her death he gave certain legacies. The remainder of his property he bequeaths to his brothers and sisters. What does he mean by the remainder of his property? Is it the remainder at the death of his wife or at his own? After that he gives his wardrobe; and, therefore, it was not to be in the remainder, and the wife was not to have it. It is quite clear and consistent in ordinary language to talk of money in the funds, and even in many other cases you find "money" used to express far more than mere money, as in the Roman law, the word "pecunia" passed property of all kinds. I think the widow takes a life estate in the whole property.

EARL OF MORNINGTON v. SMITH.

Practice—114th of the New Orders—Dismissing bill for want of prosecution—Undertaking to file replication—Time.

After the expiration of the time under the 114th of the New Orders, the defendant is entitled to the order to dismiss, unless the plaintiff shews that he has used due diligence, or files, or will undertake to file, a replication, and, in the latter case, only a short time will be allowed.

Chandless, in this case, applied on the 26th of February last, on the part of the defendant, Smith, for an order to dismiss the plaintiff's bill as against him, for want of prosecution, the time allowed under the 114th Order having expired.

Blozam opposed the motion, but had nothing to offer by way of excuse.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The time having expired, the defendant is entitled to the order as to himself, and the question is, have you used proper diligence? You may have time to shew cause, but the plaintiff cannot be allowed to delay by playing with another defendant under his control. Have you any thing to say, or will you let the motion stand over for the purpose of explaining the delay? You may do so, or you may file, or undertake to file, a replication.

Blozam asked that the question should stand over till the next seal, for the purpose of filing an affidavit to explain.

Chandless now moved again to dismiss, and stated that the affidavit put in did not much help the plaintiff's case. It was filed by Stephen Lancaster Lucena, the new solicitor, and it was merely to the effect that no answer could as yet be got from the defendant Cutts.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—That will not do.

Blozam.—Then we will undertake to file a replication in the usual time.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—A short time only can be allowed to file a replication.—I give you a fortnight.

FORD v. BRYANT.

Practice—Examination of witness—Breach of trust—Notice.

A decree for an account having been made in an administration suit, instituted by certain residuary legatees against the executor, &c. a claim was carried in before the Master by another residuary legatee, a defendant, on a bond executed by the testator in the cause in his lifetime, and settled for the benefit of this defendant; but the bond having been assigned by the husband of this defendant to a third party, to satisfy the creditors of the husband, he obtained part-payment thereof from the executor of the testator, who swore he had no notice of the other claim. Application was then made to the Court for leave to examine the executor upon interrogatories before the Master on the question of notice, and the application was refused, because the object was to charge the executor with a breach of trust, and that could only be done by proceedings regularly instituted for that purpose, and not before the Master under a decree for an account in an administration suit.

This was a motion on behalf of the defendants, Mrs. Holder and her children, who claimed to be beneficially interested in a bond executed by the testator in the cause, for liberty to examine Samuel Bryant, the executor and a co-defendant on interrogatories before the Master. The plaintiffs, as well as some of the defendants, it appeared, were residuary legatees under the will of John Kekewich, the testator in the cause, who died on the 3rd of March, 1843; and a suit having been instituted for the administration of his estate, a decree was made that the accounts should be taken, the debts ascertained, &c. in the usual way. The testator, it appeared, had executed a bond for 2,000l. payable after his death, in favour of his daughter Esther, the wife of John Rose Holder, and this bond had, on the 4th of February, 1830, been assigned to trustees on trust for Mrs. Holder's separate use for life, and then for the children. The bond, however, had subsequently got into the hands of Mr. Holder, by some means or other, on the occasion, as was alleged, of the appointment of new trustees, and he assigned it to Charles Townend, on trust to discharge the debts due to him (Holder's) creditors; and Townend having bought them all up for the sum of 850l. that sum was repaid him by Bryant, the executor, out of the moneys in from the testator's estate on the bond; so that when the trustees of the settlement took in a charge for 2,000l. before the Master, under the decree, as against the testator's estate, they were told that Bryant had already paid 850l. to another claimant; and though the assignment to him was subsequent to the settlement, his claim was nevertheless preferable, because Bryant had no notice of the settlement. The claim was accordingly dismissed, the whole question turning upon Bryant's having notice of the settlement when he paid the 850l. to Townend; and application was now made to the Court on behalf of the parties beneficially interested under the settlement for leave to examine Bryant on interrogatories as to this point, the Master having refused to examine him.

Stinton, for the motion, contended that it was necessary to make a special application, and that a simple order was not enough. [THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—What do you want to examine him for?] To ascertain whether he had notice of the settlement at the time he made the payment. [THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—And then to charge him with a breach of trust, and so come down upon him to repay the 850l.] Our case is that of a creditor, and we are desirous of establishing our claim. The bond got into the hands of Mr. Holder on a change of trustee, but how we do not know; and we think the settlement must have come to the knowledge of Bryant. As to the necessity of a special application, the following cases may be cited:—Simmons v. Galtby (13 Ves. 262); Franklyn v. Colquhoun (16 Ves. 218); Purcell v. Macnamara (17 Ves. 434).

Bagshawe, for the executor, —Mr. Bryant swears he had no notice of the settlement, and that he had notice from Townend of the assignment of the bond to him, and that he paid Townend accordingly the sum of 850l. in respect of the debts bought up after the assignment. The trustees of the settlement are not parties, and the application is made only by Mrs. Holder and her children, the cestui que trust; and what is now sought by this motion is to try the question in a way in which there is no means of binding the trustees; the proceedings ought to be by bill.

Toller, for the plaintiffs.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—This is the case of a bill filed by residuary legatees against the executor and other residuary legatees; and a decree has been made for an account, but nothing more. Now, in the course of the proceedings in the Master's office, the trustees of the settlement came in and alleged a claim for a debt to them of 2,000l. but the executor said it was not due, for he paid 850l. part thereof, and the question is, whether that payment is to be allowed. The testator, about the time of the marriage of his daughter, gave her a bond for 2,000l. payable after his death, and this bond was assigned to trustees for the benefit of her and her children. The bond afterwards got into the possession of Holder, how it is not known, and he assigned it to Townend for the purpose of discharging his debts. Bryant being applied to by Townend, on the death of the testator, to pay it, did accordingly pay it, as to what to the extent of 850l. That is the case, as to what occurred in the Master's office. But it is said Bryant paid it, knowing it ought to go to the trustees of the settlement, and this motion is made by the cestui que trust under the settlement, who are also residuary legatees, for leave to examine the executor on interrogatories as to whether he had notice or not. It is expressly denied by Bryant and Townend that they had notice; and the question is, whether in this case Bryant is to be charged when notice of the settlement has not been brought home to him. A defendant may sometimes be examined by a co-defendant, but in such a case as this, involving a breach of trust, any proceeding that is taken must be by bill. The question is as to notice, and that must be determined in a regular suit; it is not the course of proceeding in this Court to act otherwise in the case of a breach of trust, as this is. I refuse the motion, with costs.

Stimson asked that the costs should be costs in the cause.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—No; they must come out of their own part of the residue.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

March 20 and 21.

GEORGE GURNEY.

Power of appointment, fraudulent exercise of.

Issues directed to ascertain the due execution of a deed of appointment, and whether it was executed with a fraudulent intention, the child in whose favour the appointment was made having survived its birth but a few months, and the deed not having been produced until the life interest in the property had ceased, and many years after the alleged execution of the deed.

Dorothy Wakeham, by her will, dated the 10th of November, 1804, bequeathed to trustees the sum of 500l. Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, upon trust to receive and apply the dividends thereof for the benefit of Thomas Wakeham Richardson during the term of his natural life, and from and immediately after his decease, upon trust to transfer and make over the said Bank Annuities unto, between, or amongst all and every his child and children equally, if more than one, share and share alike; and if there should be but one such child, then the whole to such one child; the shares of sons to be transferred at their respective ages of twenty-one years, and of daughters at their respective ages of twenty-one years, or days of marriage, which should first happen after the death of the said Thomas Wakeham Richardson, and to be and be considered as vested interests at those ages or times respectively, and be transmissible as such to the representatives of the same children, notwithstanding their deaths afterwards in the lifetime of the said T. W. Richardson; and after bequeathing certain life interests, and giving special directions concerning certain portions of her property, and the investment of the residue of her personal estate, the testatrix directed that her trustees should, after the marriage of Louisa Elizabeth Brett, with the consent of John Brett, her father, if she should marry in his lifetime, or the decease of the said John Brett, which should first happen, permit and suffer the said L. E. Brett and her assigns during her life, to have, receive, and take one moiety of the interest, dividends, and proceeds of all such stocks and funds, for her and their own use and benefit; and after her decease, should assign the said moiety unto, between, and amongst all and every or such one or more of the children of the said L. E. Brett, at such age or ages, day or days, and times, and in such parts, shares, and proportions, with such maintenance in the meantime until the assignment or transfer thereof respectively, and in such manner and form as she should at any time or times, by any deed or deeds, writing or writings, with or without power of revocation, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses, or by her last will and testament (executed as thereby required), should direct or appoint; and, subject to such direction or appointment, should assign the same unto, between, and among the said children in equal shares, at the same respective ages and times as the said testatrix had thereinbefore declared in her bequest in favour of the children of the said T. W. Richardson; and such shares to vest at the same ages and times as the shares of the said children of the said T. W. Richardson in the Bank Annuities thereinbefore bequeathed in trust for them. The testatrix died on the 15th of July, 1815, leaving surviving her Louisa Elizabeth Brett, who, on the 19th of May, 1817, was married to Mr. George Gee, a solicitor, and the plaintiff in this cause. John Brett, the father, died on the 23rd of June, 1816; John Brett Gee, the only issue of this marriage, was born on the 8th of February, 1818. By a deed dated the 6th of March, 1818, under the hand and seal of Mrs. Gee, she, after reciting the power of appointment, directed and appointed all the moiety of the stocks or funds (to the dividends of which she was entitled for her life) unto and to the sole use and benefit of her son, John Brett Gee, his executors, administrators, and assigns; and she declared that it should be lawful for her at any time or times thereafter, by any writing or writings under her hand and seal, to revoke, alter, or make void the same deed. The deed purported to have been executed in the presence of Captain Overend, who died in 1825, and the plaintiff; it was written on unstamped paper, and was not stamped until 1845. John Brett Gee died on the 22nd of July, 1818, leaving the plaintiff his sole next of kin. Mrs. Gee died on the 15th of February, 1842, without having revoked or altered the deed of the 6th of March, 1818. In 1845 the plaintiff took out letters of administration to his son, John Brett Gee, and as his representative he filed this bill, claiming to be entitled to the moiety appointed by Mrs. Gee in favour of John Brett Gee by the deed of the 6th of March, 1818. The deed not having been produced until after Mrs. Gee's death, a doubt was raised as to its authenticity, and also whether the deed, if authentic, had not, under the circumstances of the case, been executed with a fraudulent intention.

Russell and Speed, for the plaintiff.

Hodgson and Chandless, for the principal defendants.

W. M. James, for the trustees.

Cole, for another defendant.

The following cases were cited:—Lord Hinchinbrooke v. Seymour (1 Bro. Ch. Ca. 395); M'Queen v. Farquhar (11 Ves. 479); Wright v. Lanson (2 Mee. & Wels. 739); Rutledge v. Rutledge (in the House of Lords); Jackson v. Butcher (before the Vice-Chancellor of England); and Edgeworth v. Edgeworth (1 Beattie).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Whether I should have thought this deed essentially and necessarily bad, if there had been a clause for maintenance in the will, or if any issue of the child dying under twenty-one, and leaving issue, would have taken, it is not requisite or material that I should give any opinion. There is not any clause for maintenance, and, as I read the will, in the absence of any appointment, neither the child dying under twenty-one leaving issue, nor any issue of that child, could have taken. Bearing in mind these circumstances, whether necessary or unnecessary, but bearing in mind their existence, I cannot venture to say that this deed is necessarily and essentially bad. It may possibly be good. But there are circumstances belonging to the case which render it absolutely impossible for me to act for or against the deed, without the assistance of a jury. The issues must be, as I apprehend, four in number. First, whether the deed was executed by Mrs. Gee in the lifetime of the infant appointee? Secondly, whether the deed was, as to the sealing and delivery thereof by Mrs. Gee, attested by two credible witnesses in the lifetime of the infant? Thirdly, whether the deed was fairly obtained from Mrs. Gee? And, fourthly, whether the deed was executed by Mrs. Gee with a fraudulent intention? I cannot act for or against the deed without that trial, unless either of the parties will confess these issues. As they do not, I must have them tried. The plaintiff is to be the plaintiff at law, and at his request let him be examined for himself, and the defendant may cross-examine him. All the exhibits must be in court at the trial, to be produced, saving just exceptions.

JONES v. CRESWICK.

Practice—Master's certificate.

Where the Master had granted a certificate for a commission to examine witnesses, a motion that the certificate might be discharged or taken off the file was held to be regular.

This was a motion that certain orders for a commission to examine witnesses might be discharged, and that the certificate of the Master made in the causes, on which the said orders were grounded, might be discharged or taken off the file. The principal question discussed was as to the regularity of the motion in seeking to take the Master's certificate off the file instead of excepting to it.

Swanton and F. Bayley, in support of the motion, cited Paxton v. Douglas (16 Ves. 244); Chennell v. Martin (4 Sim. 340); Jones v. Powell (1 Sim. 387); Chalk v. Thompson (4 Sim. 350); Kemp v. Wade (2 Keen, 686); Stubbs v. Molinoux (4 Bea. 546); Chaffin v. Wills (1 Dick. 377); and Wispenny v. Courtney (5 Sim. 554).

Russell and Chandless contended that the proper mode of proceeding against the Master's certificate was by exception. They cited Moore v. Langford (6 Sim. 323).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The authority of Lord Hardwicke, as it is to be collected from Mr. Dickens's printed report and his manuscript note-book, and from the report-book of the day, renders it not necessary for me to decide the proper form of proceeding, but affords me sufficient apology or support in following my own opinion, which agrees with that of his lordship.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

February 11 and 14, and April 27.

SOLOMON B. LAWSON.

Libel—Pleading.

A letter published in the papers not specifically referring to the plaintiff, or any particular individual, cannot be declared on as a libel upon the plaintiff, by the help of averments, alleging facts which tend to show that the matter complained of in the letter really was something done in the course of the plaintiff's trade and occupation.

Where a second letter is published upon the same subject, but not containing anything libellous taken by itself, but which may be libellous taken with the first, a count which only sets out the first letter in substance, and avers that the second was written of and concerning, amongst other things, the first letter, is bad in arrest of judgment.

This was an action for libel for the publication of the two letters set out at length in the judgment. A verdict was found for the plaintiff. In Easter Term last (5 Law T. 49), Shee, Serjt. had obtained a rule nisi in arrest of judgment, against which

M. Chambers, Q.C. Bull, Q.C. and James, shewed cause (February 11).—The jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff, if it be possible to apply the libel stated to the plaintiff, then the Court will uphold the verdict. It is not sufficient for the defendant to show that it may not apply to the plaintiff, but that it cannot. The second letter, when examined, is a substantive libel, and the first only introductory matter as far as the second count is concerned. The following cases were cited:—Gutsole v. Mathers (1 M. & W. 495); Fleetwood v. Kerr (Cro. Jac. 557); Goldstein v. Foss (6 B. & C. 154); Fisher v. Clement (10 B. & C. 472); Hughes v. Rees (4 M. & W. 204); Sweetapple v. Jesse (5 B. & Ad. 27); Stephen on Pleading; Com. Dig. Plead. E. 18, 19, Defamation, D. 26, 27; Gompertz v. Levy (9 A. & E. 283); Cooke v. Cox (3 M. & S. 110); Starkie on Libel, 1, 387.)

Shee, Serjt. and Peacock (February 14), in support of the rule, argued that the letters as set out could not possibly refer to the plaintiff, referring to many of the same authorities, and also to Cro. Jac. 126; R. v. Aldert (Sayer, 280); R. v. Horne (Cowp. 682; Roll's Abridgment, 1, 81). They also contended that the second letter was so far connected with the first, that, without it, it would not be understood, and that, therefore, the first letter should have been set out in terms, and not merely in substance. (Zenobia v. Astell, 6 T. R. 162.)

Cur. adv. vult.

On Monday, the 27th of April, the Court delivered

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—This was an action for libel. The declaration contains two counts. A general verdict was found for the plaintiff, and a motion was made in arrest of judgment. The first count states that the plaintiff was a merchant carrying on business at St. Helena, and that he was employed by captains of vessels touching at the island to supply those vessels with water; and it specified the manner in which that was done, and that the captain of a vessel called the Moffatt applied to the plaintiff for water, and was supplied out of a wooden tank, and the defendant published a libel in the form of a letter, which is as follows:—

“TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

“SIR,—The following shocking occurrence deserves to be made known, as it may be the means of saving the lives of passengers from India. The ship Moffatt arrived from Bombay on Saturday, and the passengers landed in almost a dying state. It appears from a statement made by two of the sufferers, who are officers in the army, and are come home on sick leave, that they were all tolerably well up to their arrival at St. Helena, where, as is customary, they took on board fresh water; and in a few days after leaving that island, they were all seized with violent pains and vomiting, which continued daily up to their arrival in England; their gums became black, and the under part of the tongue black. No one, not even the doctor, who equally suffered with the captain and his wife, could account for it; but there is no doubt but their illness was caused by the water, and it appears the water is run into a copper tank at St. Helena, from which the casks are filled alongside. There is no doubt, therefore, that the poison is imbibed from this copper tank, and it behoves the authorities immediately to order its removal, and replace it with an iron one. I saw the two young officers this day, suffering the most dreadful agony. I should be glad to hear from the passengers of other ships from India whether they have been like sufferers by the St. Helena water, in order that a proper representation may be laid before Government, which there is no doubt the captain and owners of the Moffatt will feel it necessary to do. I find in your paper to-day not less than thirty-seven vessels announced as having put into St. Helena.”

Meaning and intending that the plaintiff had been guilty of selling, conveying, and supplying bad and unwholesome water to the ship Moffatt; and the objection to this count is, that although the imputation, if applied to the plaintiff and his trade, would be clearly actionable, yet there is no imputation upon the plaintiff or any other individual whatsoever. In the course of the argument many cases were cited for the purpose of shewing the object and use of the preliminary allegation and the proper office of the innuendo. We do not, however, feel it necessary to enter into a detailed examination of those cases, because it was properly admitted in argument that the introductory averment does explain the terms employed, and that no innuendo was necessary, except the last above set out, and that really involves the whole question, if that be contained in the alleged libel; yet if it is capable of receiving the interpretation put on it by that innuendo, there is no fault in the count for not having the explanatory averment to fix and point it out; but, generally, if the words written or spoken cannot apply to the individual plaintiff, no previous averment or subsequent innuendo can help to give the words the application they have not, and that is the reason why the words should be set out, as observed by Lord Abinger, in giving the judgment of the Court in the case of Gulsole v. Mathers (1 M. & W. 495). "It ought to appear," he says, "on the face of the declaration, by the words or signs themselves, that they are sufficient to support such averments or innuendos as may be necessary to apply to the subject that they may bear the interpretation put upon them, and present the injury which is charged to have resulted from them." Supposing the words to be, "a murderer was committed in A's house last night," and there was no introduction to mean that A had committed the said murder, it would not be helped by the finding of the jury; but the Court must see that the words do not and cannot mean it, and would arrest the judgment. The question, therefore, is, whether the alleged libel has any reference to any individual. In the commencement it is said, "The statement is made by two of the sufferers on board the Moffatt, that they had taken in water at St. Helena; the sickness begins after that, and there is no doubt the illness was occasioned by the water; and it appears that the water is run into a copper tank at St. Helena, from which the casks are filled alongside. There is no doubt, therefore, that the poison is imbibed in the copper tank, and it behoves the authorities immediately to order its removal, and replace it with an iron one." The obvious impression on reading this statement is, that the tank was on shore to which the ships came to be filled, and also that the authorities, meaning something opposed to an individual, are called upon to interfere, and that the tank belongs to the authorities. Supposing, however—which is, perhaps, assuming a good deal—that the tank may be on board a vessel fitted up to supply others with water, and that the authorities are called upon to put down a nuisance belonging to some individual, still the question is, what individual is meant? None is pointed out; there is nothing to shew that the plaintiff even had a schooner with tanks to supply ships with water at St. Helena; it is uncertain what number of persons may be at St. Helena similarly situated, to all of whom the observation would equally apply, and to none in particular; we think, therefore, there is nothing in the letter to warrant the innuendo applying the misconduct to the plaintiff, and that the count cannot be sustained.

The second count sets out in substance the letter already observed upon, and then the following letter, in his verbis—

"SAINT HELENA WATER.

"TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

"SIR,—I beg leave to correct an error I was led into regarding the passengers by the ship Moffatt, from Bombay, being poisoned by the water supplied at St. Helena from a copper tank. I stated the tank belonged to Government. This is an error. The copper tank is fitted up in a small schooner belonging to Mr. Solomon, which runs alongside the ships as they arrive, to supply them with water. Captains of ships homeward bound will therefore do well to be warned of the fatal consequences that may result from taking in water that has probably been lying some days in a copper tank, the evil effects of which they can ascertain by inquiring of the captain, doctor, or owner of the Moffatt. The doctors pronounce it to be a decided case of poison."

The question upon that second count is, whether the two letters together constitute the libel, or whether the second letter, per se, could be considered the libel, and the first only introductory matter. Upon the former supposition we are not aware that it was attempted to support the count, nor do we think it was possible to do so in the face of such numerous and unvarying authorities. In addition to the cases already cited, we may briefly advert to some others. In Cook v. Cox (3 M. & Sel. 110), judgment was arrested in an action for slander because the words themselves were not set out. In Wood v. Brown (6 Taunton), the declaration was held bad on general demurrer, for not setting out the libel; and lastly, not to waste time by unnecessary citation, in Wright v. Clements (3 B. & Ald. 503), judgment was arrested for the like defect, the libel being set out as here, "in substance as follows, that is to say." The learned judges there distinguished substance from the tenor, observing that "tenor" had acquired a technical sense, and implies the libel is set out in hæc verba, and Mr. Justice Holroyd compares the case of libel to that of an indictment for forgery, in which it is well known the forged instrument must be described as it is, as it would be still but for the recent statute, 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 123. Then are the two letters identical, and is the first by the reference made part and parcel of the second? Now the second letter is averred to be published, inter alia, of and concerning the first. The second letter begins by correcting an error the writer was led into in his former statement, which can only mean the statement in the first letter; the error is then said to be in stating that the tank belonged to the government. But what tank? It must be the tank to which such mischievous consequences are attributed in the first letter; it then asserts that the tank is fitted up in the schooner of the plaintiff, and it cautions captains homeward bound against taking in water which has probably been long lying in the copper tank, and again reverts to the effect on the Moffatt, but not in the same terms. In the first letter the symptoms are minutely described to lead to the conclusion that the copper tank produced the sickness, none of which particulars are to be found in the second, although it ends with the doctor's pronouncing it a decided case of poison. It was asked by the learned counsel for the defendant, whether, if a justification had been attempted, it would have been sufficient to confine it to the second letter; this perhaps may be considered as an illustration rather than an advancement of the argument, because the answer must depend on this, whether the second letter can be considered as independent of the first, as a substantive libel, which is the whole question. Without pronouncing any opinion whether in any particular case of libel it be sufficient to state the substance as opposed to the tenor of any writing, although introductory only, we think the second letter is so far connected and identified with it, that the first ought to have been set out, and that for the want of that the second count is bad, and judgment therefore must be arrested.

GILLET v. WHITMARSH.
Variance.

To an action upon a promissory note for 150l. by payee against the maker, the defendant pleaded that one T. W. was indebted to the plaintiff in 3,000l. and that it was agreed, between the plaintiff, T. W. and defendant, that plaintiff should accept 1,500l. in satisfaction, and that he should not enforce his debt against T. W.; that the note was given in part payment of the 1,500l. and that plaintiff afterwards procured against T. W.'s estate, so that the consideration had failed. At the trial the agreement proved was, that on payment of 350l. down, the giving of this note for 150l. and a bond of the defendant and another for 1,000l. T. W. should be released.

Held, upon motion for new trial, a fatal variance. Held also, upon motion non obstante veredicto, that the plea was good.

Assumpsit upon promissory note for 150l. by payee against maker. The substance of the plea is stated in the marginal note and the judgment. The jury found for the defendant. A rule had been obtained for a new trial, or for judgment non obstante veredicto, against which

Nor. 9.—The Solicitor-General and Lush shewed cause.—The proof was that the 1,500l. was to be paid, 1,000l. by bond, 350l. in cash, and 150l. by this note. The substantial defence is, that, as a part of the agreement, the note should be given, and the jury have found it was. As to the motion non obstante, the plea is not the payment of a less sum in satisfaction of a greater, but that the consideration has failed. This proof may be given, whether the agreement was a writing or not, and the allegation of it being in writing is unnecessary. (Wells v. Hopkins, 5 M. & W. 7.) Then the proof of the debt against the estate caused a diminution of the estate, and was contrary to the conditions upon which the defendant had become liable as surety.

Attorney-General and Hoggins, contra.—There was no proof of the agreement as stated, nor did the plaintiff claim contrary to it. The proof against the estate was not a breach. The agreement is not alleged to have been in writing, which is necessary to alter the terms of a negotiable instrument. (Adams v. Wordley, 1 M. & W. 374; Abbott v. Hendricks, 1 M. & G. 791).

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—The declaration states, that the defendants, together with one Thomas Whitmarsh, who had become a bankrupt, gave a promissory note, dated in 1842, for payment to the plaintiff or order, twelve months after date, of 150l. with interest. To this the defendant, Whitmarsh, pleaded that one Thomas Whitmarsh was indebted to the plaintiff in 3,000l. and upwards; and that it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant, and the said Thomas Whitmarsh, that the plaintiff should accept 1,500l. in satisfaction of the debt. In consideration of the premises, and that the plaintiff would accept 1,500l. in satisfaction, the defendant made the promissory note mentioned in the declaration, and delivered it to the plaintiff in part payment of the said sum of 1,500l. and that it was agreed that the plaintiff should not enforce, claim, or demand payment of the original debt, and that the defendant made the note upon those terms, and for no other consideration; that Thomas Whitmarsh, after the note was made, and before it became due, became bankrupt, and that the plaintiff, in violation of the agreement, proved under the commission for the original debt of 1,500l. and that the note thereby became void. The plaintiff replied de injuria, and upon the trial the jury found a verdict for the defendant; but a motion was made for a new trial, on the ground that the evidence did not support the plea as to the terms on which the note was stated to have been given; and we are of opinion that it did not, and the rule should be absolute for a new trial. The plea states the agreement to have been that the plaintiff should accept 1,500l. in satisfaction of his claim; that the defendant should give a promissory note in part payment of the 1,500l.; and that the plaintiff should not enforce, or attempt to enforce, or in any way claim or demand, payment of the original debt of 3,000l. The evidence, however, was, that on his giving 350l. down, 150l. by this note, and the bond of himself and another for 1,000l., Thomas Whitmarsh should be released. A bond executed in November, after the note was given, was confirmatory of the evidence that such were the terms of the arrangement. There was, therefore, a most material variance between the agreement stated by the plea, and the agreement stated at the trial. The agreement stated by the plea was, that the plaintiff would accept 1,500l. in satisfaction of his claim, and that the defendant gave the note in part payment, and that the plaintiff would not enforce, or attempt to enforce, payment; but the agreement proved was, that upon payment of 350l. down, 150l. by promissory note, and 1,000l. by bond, Thomas Whitmarsh should be discharged, making it his release of the bankrupt. In furtherance of these conditions, and subsequent to the making of the note, 350l. were paid down, a bond for 1,000l. was given as well as this note—a most material variance indeed. The rule was for a new trial, or judgment for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto, but we think that the plea is not supported by the evidence; but though not bad upon the face of it, yet, upon the facts stated, it does not afford a defence to the action. The rule must, therefore, be made absolute for a new trial.

REG. v. JESSE HALL.
Criminal Information.

The Court will not interfere by granting a criminal information where the attacks complained of have been caused by the intemperate language in publication by the party complaining, although such publication arose from inquiries made in pursuance of his duty. Therefore where a clergyman had, in the course of inquiries as to certain charities in his parish, published pamphlets reflecting in no measured language upon the character of his opponents, the Court discharged a rule that he had obtained for a criminal information, in respect of certain attacks made upon him, by way of recrimination, but they intimated that if the attacks were renewed, a criminal information would be granted.

In Hilary Term the Solicitor-General shewed cause against a rule obtained on behalf of Dr. Molesworth, the rector of Rochdale, for a criminal information against the defendant for publishing a libel against him. The affidavits in answer shewed that in fact the applicant had brought the attack upon himself by publishing pamphlets impugning the character and conduct of influential dissenters in the parish. The Court then called upon the Attorney-General to support the rule.—It was then shewn that the original dispute had been about the administration of some charitable funds which it was the duty of Dr. Molesworth to inquire into, and it was contended that even admitting that there had been strong language used, there was no justification for the defendant's conduct. A suit in equity, and a private Act of Parliament had grown out of these disputes.

JUDGMENT.

May 7.—DENMAN, C. J.—This was a rule to leave to file a criminal information for a libel, obtained on the part of the Rev. Dr. Molesworth, rector of Rochdale. The matters complained of were of a gross nature, and undoubtedly calculated to impair the usefulness of a clergyman in his sacred office; but the cause shewn against the rule was substantially this, that he had in a great measure brought this attack on himself by his own conduct, having published cheap pamphlets of a controversial nature very seriously reflecting, and in no measured terms, on the character and motives of persons respected in station and high in authority, within his parish; openly challenging public discussion, and naturally leading to recrimination. When the Solicitor-General had convinced the Court that such facts existed, and Mr. Attorney proceeded to prove, by affidavits, that Dr. Molesworth had acted from laudable motives in commencing those inquiries, and that the state of parties in the parish was such as to make it inexpedient for those who held office in the parish which the defendant might be said to represent to obtain any triumph over them. On the first point he was entirely successful. We make no doubt that some interference with the affairs of the charity in question was absolutely necessary, and that the clergyman, in attempting to place them on a better footing, was fully exercising the duties of his office. But although we think this, we cannot measure the degree of impropriety in whatever he did, nor ought we to bestow extraordinary authority to him who, in the perfor-ance of very delicate functions, may have been led into expressions such as are shown in the publications in question. If that be so, that construction ought to have restrained the reverend gentleman from receding to such bitter and reproachful language; and we think it right to discharge this rule without any costs. We trust no such consequence as the Attorney-General described will follow, and we desire to avoid giving any triumph to either party. The conduct of those who have been acting against the reverend defendant does not receive justification, and they will very much misapprehend us if they infer that on any renewal of similar conduct we should consider our hands tied by the present judgment from any interference in the matter.

Rule discharged, without costs.

REG. V. MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF WARWICK.
Municipal Corporations Act—Borough funds.

A municipal corporation has no power to order payment out of the borough fund of expenses incurred in petitioning the Court of Chancery to interfere with the management of funds, and the appointment of trustees to property, which is not vested in the corporation, although the surplus of the rents and profits of the estates, after payment of certain charges therein, is applicable to the purposes of the borough.

Nor have they power to make an order for the payment of interest upon a bond, not bearing interest, given for compensation upon the loss of office, although the party entitled may have consented, upon payment of interest upon the amount secured, to wait for payment. The Court granted a rule for a certiorari to remove orders for the payment out of the borough fund of 100l. in respect of the first mentioned claim, and 8l. in respect of the second.

But they refused the rule for removing an order for payment of the expense of relining a pew in the church, which had been for a very long period occupied by the corporation, and which had been for a long time repaired by them.

The Attorney-General, Whitehurst, Q.C. and Hayes, shewed cause against a rule nisi obtained by the Solicitor-General for a certiorari to remove certain resolutions and orders made by the town council of Warwick. The 1st order was for payment, out of the borough fund, of 100l. to Mr. Tibbits, being a part of his bill of 800l. for costs and expenses incurred in certain Chancery proceedings taken under the direction of the corporation, in respect of certain estates called the Estates of Henry the Eighth, and the appointment of trustees thereto. (See the main facts, 6 Law T. 41.) The course adopted by the corporation was quite correct; for, notwithstanding they failed through a technical error, the Lord Chancellor ordered their costs to be paid. The proceedings were necessary by the corporation, for the surplus of these funds was applicable to borough purposes, and for several years they were unable to make a borough rate, because the trustees would give no information upon the subject. They acted throughout under the opinion of counsel. And as the estates belonged to the corporation, and the surplus was applicable to the borough purposes, they were justified in incurring bond fide expenses for the benefit and protection of the borough. This is the general rule as to the right of trustees to be repaid costs, and applies, whether the proceedings are ultimately successful or not. Attorney-General v. Norwich (1 Keen, 700). See, also, 2 Mylne & Cr. 406; Reg. v. Dartmouth (10 A. & E. 490.) [PATTESON, J.—What power is there given by the statute to pay legal expenses so incurred?] It must be taken under the general words of the 72nd section. 2nd. The next order is for the payment of 8l. for interest to Mr. Tibbits upon a sum of money due to him upon a compensation bond from the corporation. It would have been very inconvenient to the corporation to pay the amount of the bond; and upon Mr. Tibbits consenting to postpone suing the corporation upon the bond, interest was ordered to be paid thereon. It was competent for them, in the exercise of their discretion, to do this. 3rd. The last order is quite proper. The pew in question has been occupied by the corporation for a very long period, and has been repaired by them as long back as 1723. It appears that the new lining was necessary, and, but for it, repairs would have been necessary to the woodwork, and would have been much more expensive.

The Solicitor-General and Mellor, contra.—The history of the rise and fall of the parties in this borough is quite immaterial. The question is simply whether the town council had power to make these orders. Is it not a misapplication of the borough funds, which a rate-payer and burgess is entitled to question by certiorari? (1 Viet. c. 78, s. 44.) It is quite a mistake to suppose that these estates are in any way the property of the corporation. The corporation, as a corporation, never were entitled to them, and were not even cestui que trusts. The original grant, and the various schemes approved of in Chancery, all shew this. The trustees are now appointed by the Lord Chancellor, and they are to apply the surplus, if any, for charitable purposes, according to the original grant, "for good and useful purposes;" or, as it is now construed under the direction of the Court of Chancery, for the lighting, paving, and the police of the borough. The corporation had the superintendence originally, but not as a corporation; and by the 92nd section of the Municipal Corporation Act, all corporate property was transferred to the borough fund, subject only to certain payments of salaries, &c. This bill can in no way be brought within any of the objects mentioned in the 92nd section, unless it be held to be expenses necessarily incurred in carrying into operation that Act. But the very object was to obtain control over the borough funds, for different persons than those intended and appointed according to law. The 2nd order is also bad, for it is contrary to all principles as to charges upon inhabitants. By postponing the payment of the bond, the burden is thrown upon future rate payers, and there is no power under the statute to do this. The bond is not made to bear interest, but is for a gross sum only. The 3rd order, as to the pew, is also bad. The corporation cannot prescribe for the pew as of right (Byerly v. Windus, 5 B. & C. 1), and it cannot be necessary to be kept up. It may be that the majority, or all of the corporation are dissenters. There is no objection to the form of this rule. The certiorari may go, although the orders are only resolutions in the corporation minutes. (Reg. v. Litchfield, 4 Q. B. 893.)

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—I am of opinion that the order for the payment of the 100l. must be set aside. The expenses were incurred in respect of property which the corporation were not in any way possessed of or entitled to, and they cannot make an order upon the borough fund for the payment of such expenses. The second order as to the 8l. must also be set aside. The statute gives no authority to pay interest upon a compensation bond. The bond is to be given; if the creditor chooses to postpone his claim for payment, he may of course do so, but the town council cannot do so, for it would in effect be transferring the burden to other parties. The third order as to the pew may, I think, be supported. It may be conceded that it is not strictly their property, and that it is not absolutely necessary to the due performance of their duties. But the long habit and practice of using it is sufficient to authorize this expenditure for its maintenance.

PATTESON, J.—This 100l. was spent in order to get back into the hands of the corporation, if possible, what the law had taken away from them. The funds appear to be applicable to charitable purposes, and whether or not the trustees were rightfully appointed is not a matter of interest to the corporation. It is not a purpose for which money can be expended under the 92nd section. The order for the interest is also bad. There is no authority to make such order under the statute. Besides, the alleged postponement of payment is not obtained, for the parole agreement of Mr. Tibbits would not bar him from proceeding on the bond. The objection to the repair of the pew is not, I think, maintainable; giving the 92nd section a liberal construction, it might be said to be money expended for the maintenance of a corporation "building," for it is in their actual possession, although it may be they have no strict legal title to it.

WILLIAMS, J. and WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.
Certiorari, to remove the two orders, granted.

PAXTON V. THE GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Motion to set aside an award—When to be made—Practice.

An application to set aside an award, published in Term time, must be made within four days from its publication, in all cases where the reference is of a cause only by order of Nisi Prius. Upon the reference of a cause at Nisi Prius, the arbitrator awarded that the verdict entered for the plaintiff should stand, "unless the Court should order otherwise;" he then stated various questions for the opinion of the Court, and awarded that if the Court should be of a certain opinion, the verdict should be for the defendant on certain issues. The award was published on the 16th of November, 1844, and on the 25th of January, 1845, application was made to set aside the award, or to enter the verdict for the defendants upon the facts stated in the award:

Held, that the application to enter the verdict was in effect an application to set aside the award; and that it should have been made within four days from the publication of the award.

Debt, for work and labour, hire of goods and chattels, goods sold, money paid, and on an account stated. Pleas, except as to 1,300l. 1st. Never indebted; 2nd. Payment; 3rd. Set off, and, as to 1,300l. payment into Court.

The cause came on to be tried at Durham on the 18th Aug. 1842, before Lord Denman, C.J. when a verdict was found, by consent, for the plaintiff, damages 950,000l. subject to the award of Robert Ingham, esq. to whom "all matters in difference in this cause were referred." On the 13th November, 1844, the arbitrator made his award; which, after the usual introduction, proceeded thus:—"I do award that, unless the Court of Queen's Bench shall otherwise order, the verdict already entered for the plaintiff in this cause shall stand, but that the same shall be reduced to 432l. 6s. 9d. debt, and 1s. damages, and 40s. costs; and I determine for the plaintiff every issue joined in this cause, &c. And whereas I have been required by the plaintiff and the defendants, &c. to state certain points of law for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench, &c. I therefore proceed to state them accordingly. (The award then raised various questions of law, and concluded thus:—) And I do further award that if the Court shall be of opinion that any of the items which I have admitted to the credit of the said plaintiff or the said defendants respectively ought to be disallowed, or that any of the items which I have disallowed to the plaintiff and the defendants respectively ought to be admitted, and if the balance resulting from such corrected items in favour of the plaintiff shall exceed, or shall, save as after mentioned, fall short of the sum of 432l. 6s. 9d. at which sum I have assessed the debt due to the plaintiff as aforesaid, then I do award that the verdict already entered for the plaintiff shall stand, but that the same shall be reduced to such amount of debt as in the opinion of the Court shall be due to the plaintiff, with 1s. damages, instead of the amount of debt which I have awarded; but if the Court shall be of opinion, upon the point first raised, that this action is not maintainable for more than the sum paid into Court; or if the balance adjudged to be due to the plaintiff upon such corrected items shall be reduced by a sum larger than or equal to the said sum of 432l. 6s. 9d. then I do award that the general verdict entered for the plaintiff shall be set aside, and that a verdict shall be entered for the plaintiff on the first, and for the defendants on the second and third issues." (Dated 13th November 1844.)—On the 16th November the defendants received notice of the award; and on the 15th January, 1845, they moved for and obtained a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the award should not be set aside on various grounds:

1st. That the arbitrator had not sufficiently raised the questions which he was requested to raise by the parties.

2nd. That the award is inconsistent in awarding that the verdict is to be entered for the plaintiff on the first issue, notwithstanding the Court may be of opinion that the action is not maintainable for more than the money paid into Court; or why the verdict entered for the plaintiff should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendants on the second and third issues, on the ground that it appears by the award that there was no order in writing for the doing of the work, &c.; and further, that there was no certificate of the engineer of the company for or in respect of the same in pursuance of the contract, &c.; or why the verdict should not be entered for the defendants on all the issues, or on the second and third issues, on the ground that the action being in debt on indebitatus counts is not maintainable for more than the money paid into Court by reason of there having been a contract under seal between the parties, &c. and that the plaintiff ought to have declared upon the deed specially. On the same day the plaintiff obtained a cross rule, calling on the defendants to shew cause why all the issues should not be found for the plaintiff, and a verdict entered for the sum of 1,244l. 8s. 7d. with costs, &c. as allowed to the plaintiff by the award of the arbitrator.

Martin, Q. C. and Rew now shewed cause against the former rule for setting aside the award. There is a preliminary objection which is fatal to this application. The defendants have not complied with the rule of practice which requires a party, who seeks to set aside an award where the award is in the place of a verdict, and the arbitrator in the position of the jury, to come to the court within four days after its publication. All the authorities were very minutely examined by Coleridge, J. in Allenby v. Proudlock (4 Dowd. 54), and that is the rule of practice which was there laid down.

Sir F. Kelly, S. G. and Addison, contra.—The limitation of time is a matter in the discretion of the Court; and although in an ordinary case the Court will apply the usual rule, it will always consider the circumstances of each case, to see whether the rule is properly applicable to it. [Lord DENMAN, C. J. referred to Martin v. Burge (4 Ad. & Ell. 974); where Littledale, J. alluding to an objection there made, that the application to set aside the award had not been made within the first four days of the Term after the award was published, said: "For many years after I came to the bar, no objection of this kind was heard of. I do not think there is any such rule on the subject as the plaintiff would insist upon." That, at all events, confirms the view that there is no binding rule on the subject; and here, in the first place, the award was not made in vacation; so that if the principle upon which the rule rests is that the award is to be treated as standing in the place of a verdict, then the limitation of four days clearly cannot be insisted on: for as to actions tried in Term, the motion for a new trial may be made within four days from the return of the distinguis. In Allenby v. Proudlock, Coleridge, J. expressly decides that the limitation of the first four days in the Term after publication is confined to cases in which the arbitrator and the award stand in the place of the jury and the verdict; if so, it will not apply here; because this award necessitates an application to the Court. It is a special case raising questions for the consideration of the Court, and it is bad upon the face of it. In M'Arthur v. Campbell (5 B. & Ad. 518) no mention is made of any such rule as that now contended for; but, on the contrary, Parke, J. said, in answer to an observation, that the limitation imposed by the stat. 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 15, s. 2, did not apply to that case, "The Court adopts the provision of that statute as a rule in other cases;" and that statute gives the whole of the Term after publication of the award within which to move. Lastly, in this case, the rule is not merely to set aside the award, but to enter the verdict for the defendants, which would in effect be so far to confirm the award. [PATTERSON, J.—In Anderson v. Fuller (4 Mee. & W. 470) the Court of Exchequer expressly decided that when an arbitrator had awarded a certain sum, subject to be reduced to a smaller sum by the judgment of the Court upon facts stated, an application to enter a verdict for the smaller sum was an application to set aside the award.] That case is not applicable; because here the award altogether depends upon the opinion which the Court may form upon the facts stated. The plaintiff could not sign judgment upon this award as it stands. [PATTERSON, J.—Why not? It is an absolute award in favour of the plaintiff, unless you apply to set it aside. Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The plaintiff might go to the Master after the proper time for your application had elapsed, and sign judgment.] Supposing the rule had been drawn up merely for entering the verdict, could this objection have been taken then? The award is made in the country, the defendants had no notice of it until the 16th of November; and, if the publication dates from that time, it would have been impossible for them to have prepared their affidavits and moved the Court within four days.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is quite clear that some rule of limitation must be laid down. It is a part of the practice of the Court, which has been followed from a general persuasion of its existence, and from the year 1836, when Mr. Justice Littleton made the observation already referred to (in Martin v. Burge, 4 Ad. & Ell. 974), the rule has been to require applications like the present to be made within four days from the publication of the award. Mr. Justice Coleridge laid down the same rule in Allenby v. Proudlock (4 Dowl. 54); and Anderson v. Fuller (4 Mee. & W. 470) is a distinct authority to show that the rule of practice applies to a case like this. Mr. Addison argued that that case does not apply; because here the plaintiff could not enter up final judgment upon the award as it stands; but, first, that objection would be as good ten years hence as now; and secondly, the award is absolutely in favour of the plaintiff, though in a subsequent part it directs that, in case this Court should be of a certain opinion, the defendant should then have the verdict. As to the difficulty of preparing affidavits in time, that would apply to the rule limiting the time within which new trials may be moved in causes tried during Term; but there must be some general rule of limitation; we cannot examine into the particular circumstances of every case. Of course the real publication is the notice to the parties that the award is made, as was decided in M'Arthur v. Campbell, in this Court, and also in the Common Pleas (a).

PATTERSON, J.—Anderson v. Fuller is quite in point. Here the arbitrator awards that the verdict entered for the plaintiff shall stand, "unless this Court shall otherwise order;" then whose business is it to apply to the Court to order otherwise? Clearly not the plaintiff's; for he might endorse the postea with the amount awarded, and sign final judgment. The application, therefore, is in effect to set aside the award, and must be made within the time limited by the practice of the Court. That time is four days from the publication of the award, where a cause is referred by order of Nisi Prius; except where the order refers, not only the cause, but all matters in difference. Here, however, the reference was of the cause only; and the stricter rule therefore applies. I do not mean to say that if the parties had come to the Court on the 24th day of November, 1844, and had assigned special reasons for asking an extension of the time fixed by the practice of the Court, we might not have entertained that application, as we sometimes grant similar indulgence on special grounds in the case of moving to set aside a verdict; but here no reason whatever is given. (b)

Rule discharged without costs.

Ex parte THE OVERSEERS OF HEYOP.

Mandamus to justices and county treasurer to pay expenses incurred in maintaining lunatic pauper under invalid order.

Pashley moved for a rule calling on the justices of Radnorshire and the treasurer of that county to shew cause why they should not pay to the overseers of Heyop the sum of 50l. 12s. expended by them in support of a lunatic pauper, in obedience to an order of justices, since decided by this Court to be invalid. (6 Law T. 392; 2 New Sess. Cas. 270.) On the 13th Nov. 1843, an order was made by two justices of the county of Radnor, removing J. P. Wood, an insane pauper, to a licensed house at Shrewsbury, in the county of Salop; and on the 30th of the same month the same justices made an order upon the overseers of Heyop, in the county of Radnor, adjudging the settlement of the said pauper to be in that parish, and directing them to pay to the keeper of that licensed house a weekly sum from the date of the previous order. That order was appealed against, confirmed by the Sessions, subject to a case, and upon that case quashed by this Court. The case turns upon the 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, ss. 38, 41, and 42, upon which it is submitted, first, that until the settlement of an insane pauper is determined the liability to maintain him in an asylum is thrown upon the county (R. v. The Justices of Kent, 2 Q.B. 686); and, secondly, that after an order adjudging the settlement had been quashed, the settlement was undetermined. (R. v. Pisle, 4 Q.B. 711.) The settlement of this pauper has not been ascertained; and under sec. 42, two justices may at any time adjudge the settlement, and order the parish to repay the county the expenses of the last year, and to pay all future expenses. It is very doubtful whether the overseers of Heyop could maintain an action for money had and received against the county; and that being so, the Court will grant a mandamus. (R. v. The Hull and Selby Railway Company, 6 Q.B. 70; R. v. The Nottingham Old Waterworks Company, 6 Ad. & Ell. 355.) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The county treasurer could not pay any sum which he was not ordered by the justices to pay.] Probably not; therefore the mandamus must be directed to the justices also. Application was made to them at the sessions, but they thought they had no jurisdiction.

Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF NORBURY.

Jurat of an affidavit—Omission of the words, "before me."

The Court quashed a writ of certiorari, on the ground that the words "before me" were omitted from the jurat of the affidavit upon which the writ had been obtained.

Phillimore, on a former day in this Term (April 30), obtained a rule, calling on the prosecutor to shew cause why the writ of certiorari herein should not be quashed, on the ground that the jurat of the affidavit, on which the writ had issued, did not contain the words "before me."

Neale now shewed cause.—First, this rule must be discharged, because one of the affidavits upon which it is drawn up is so uncertain, that there could be no assignment of perjury upon it; and the Court may have granted the rule partly upon that affidavit. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Do you know of any instance in which one had affidavit has been held to invalidate a rule, though there are several other good affidavits disclosing ground enough for the rule?] It is impossible for the Court to say upon which of the affidavits the rule was granted. Secondly, the objection taken to the jurat of the affidavit on which the writ was obtained rests upon the case of R. v. Bloxham (1 Bitt. & Sym. M. C. 123; 1 New S. C. 370); but some doubt has been thrown upon that decision by a case of Empey v. King (14 L.J. Exch. N. S.); where that Court refused to treat as a nullity an affidavit sworn before Mr. Baron Alderson, which contained the same defect, the omission of the words "before me."

Phillimore.—The words in that case were "sworn at my chambers;" and that was stated to be the usual form.

Neale.—The jurat has been held to be no necessary part of an indictment for perjury (R. v. Embden, 9 East, 437; and in Ex parte Smith (2 Dowl. 607), the names of the deponents being omitted in the jurat, Patterson, J. said: "As that appears to be only an omission of my clerk, let a new jurat be written, and I will sign it." At most, therefore, the defect is only an irregularity, and is cured by lapse of time. (Reg. Gen. H. T. 2 Wm. 4, r. 33.) In R. v. Bloxham, eight months only had elapsed; but here two years had passed since the writ was obtained.

Phillimore, contra, was not called upon.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is not possible for us to overrule R. v. Bloxham, to which we have given all the authority we can give to any case; and the case in the Court of Exchequer is not inconsistent with it. In Ex parte Smith, my brother Patterson, seeing and knowing that the party had been regularly sworn, permitted a statement to that effect to be made; but in doing even that he now doubts whether he was right. Here, however, the authority to take the affidavit does not appear; it does not even appear that the party was legally sworn at all.

PATTERSON, J.—Eight months would cure an irregularity as well as two years; and, therefore, we cannot discharge this rule without overruling R. v. Bloxham. That case is clearly in point, and I am not prepared to overrule it.

Rule absolute.

HILMAN v. CHITTY.

Affidavits sworn in a previous stage of the cause may be used upon a subsequent application in the same cause.

Gray was proceeding to shew cause against a rule obtained by Ball, calling upon the plaintiff to stay proceedings in this action, upon the ground that the defendant had obtained a collusive and fraudulent settlement of the action. He proposed to use affidavits which had been sworn in a former stage of the cause, but not filed, and dated prior to the present rule; to which Ball objected, on the ground that they had not been filed.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. after consulting the Masters.—The affidavits may be used. Perjury could be assigned upon them.

The rule was afterwards made absolute.

Ex parte SIMONS.

Attachment—Orders under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 114. The affidavits for an attachment for disobedience is a rule of Court, by which payment of a sum of money was ordered to be made to A B, or his attorney, shewed that the attorney had applied for payment without success, and that he believed it remained unpaid, but did not expressly negative payment to A B.—Held sufficient.

An attachments will issue for disobedience to rule of Court under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

The right to move for an attachment is not waived by acceptance of a bill for the amount due, which is subsequently dishonoured.

Lush shewed cause against a rule nisi for attachment for disobedience to a rule of Court, relating to payment of a sum of money to A B, or his attorney. The affidavits are not sufficient, as they do not negative payment to A B. (Potter v. Back, 5 D.P.C. 876.) The application is too late. The rule of Court was made at the beginning of Michaelmas Term (Re v. Stretch, 4 D.P.C. 30.) It appears, also, that the applicant has taken an acceptance for the amount of the debt. It is true that it is unpaid, but he may have indorsed it away. It is also submitted that, since execution can issue upon these rules of Court, the remedy by attachment will not also be allowed.

V. Williams, contra.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. after consulting the Masters, overruled the objections, and said, the greater indulgence which has been given is no reason for the maintenance of the contempt.

Rule absolute, without any order as to the bill being given up.

MARCHANT v. LLOYD.

I O U—Sheriff's notes.

Quere, is an I O U any evidence of money lent? Quere, per WILLIAMS, J.—Whether the Court will allow affidavits to be filed as to what passed at a trial before the under-sheriff, to correct alleged omission of the sheriff, when he does, in fact, send his notes? But, in the absence of affidavits, the Court can look only to the notes.

Petersdorff shewed cause against a rule obtained by Pigott, to set aside a verdict for the defendant, and for a nonsuit. It was an action for money lent, and upon an account stated. An I O U was produced at the trial, and the objection was, that this was no evidence of money lent, and the particulars of demand excluded any reference to the account stated. The under-sheriff's notes, however, only stated leave for nonsuit, because I O U should have been specially declared on. An I O U is evidence of money lent. (Douglas v. Holme, 12 A. & E. 641.) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—That case only decided that where an I O U bearing no name is produced, it may be presumed to have been given to the party who produces it.] At any rate, the point does not arise here; for the only question upon the sheriff's notes is, whether the I O U should have been specially declared on, which it clearly cannot be.

Pigott, contra.—An I O U is not evidence of money lent any more than of work and labour done. He cited Story v. Atkins (Strange, 721) and many early cases as to promissory notes, and their effect before the statute of Anne. In Holme v. Douglas there was an account stated, as it appears from the brief.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The point does not arise here, as to the effect of an I O U. For aught that appears upon the sheriff's notes, it may have been received as evidence upon the account stated.

WILLIAMS, J.—Is there any authority for saying that this Court will receive affidavits to amend or add to the sheriff's notes?

Rule discharged.

WISE v. NEWTON.

Attorney's bill—Costs of taxation.

Newton, in person, moved for a rule nisi to review the taxation of the plaintiff's bill. After taxation, more than one-sixth had been struck off in respect of badness done while the plaintiff was uncertificated. The Master had, however, allowed the plaintiff the costs of taxation. (White v. Milner, 2 H. Bl. 357; Newton v. Harland, 9 D.P.C. 641) The defendant also claimed to set off against the plaintiff's bill fees which were due to the defendant, and which were alleged to have been received by the plaintiff from his clients.

(a) Musellbrook v. Dunkin (9 Bing. 605).

(b) No other judge was present during this day.

PATTESON, J.—Newton v. Harland is enough to entitle you to a rule nisi. Upon the other point, the rule will not be granted. It is quite clear that a barrister's fees are not the subject of an action, and therefore, not the subject of set-off.

Rule accordingly.

EVERSHED v. GROUND AND HARDY.

Writ of error—Waiver.

Where one of two defendants, after making a motion for new trial, withdrew the motion, upon finding that, in consequence of a motion by the other defendant, the plaintiff had consented to reduce the damages, the Court held that he could not subsequently bring a writ of error for an error in the jury process and findings.

Willes showed cause against a rule obtained by Humfrey, Q. C. to set aside the allowance of a writ of error in this case. A rule nisi for a new trial had been granted, at the motion of one of the defendants, unless the damages were reduced, which had been consented to by the counsel for the plaintiff. Subsequently Willes made a motion for a new trial on behalf of the other defendant; but on learning that the above consent had been given, the application was withdrawn. Subsequently this writ of error had been ruled out for an error in the jury process. It was contended, that there was clearly no waiver of the right to bring the writ of error.

Humfrey, Q. C. contra.

By the COURT.—The rule must be absolute.

Rule absolute.

PRICKETT v. GREATER.

Articles of the peace—Bond fides of committing magistrate—Notice of action.

A warrant of commitment for not finding sureties of the peace is bad, if it does not state the time for which sureties are to be found.

Semble, Willes v. Bridger, 2 B. & Ald. 278, is a binding authority that such warrant would be good, although it did not state the amount for which sureties are to be found.

A justice of the peace who commits upon an illegal warrant is liable in an action for false imprisonment, whether he acted bond fide or not.

A notice of action which states the imprisonment to have been in the common goal at M. and that a writ of summons will be issued for that imprisonment, is a sufficient notice of the cause of action.

This was an action of trespass for false imprisonment, under a warrant of commitment for not finding sureties of the peace. The alleged defects in the warrant were, that it omitted to state the sum for which sureties were to be found and the time. At the trial, the learned judge, Mr. Baron Platt, left it to the jury to say whether the defendant, as a magistrate, had acted bond fide. A motion for a new trial had been obtained by Godson for a misdirection. A point upon the warrant and notice had also been reserved for the defendant.

Whately, Q. C. and Greaves (May 9), in shewing cause, contended that the warrant was good, being according to old precedents, citing 20 Edw. 4 (fol. 40, b); Lambard's Eirenarcha (p. 85); Dalton (c. 118); West's Symbolography; Fitzherbert's Justice; Willes v. Richards (2 B. & Ald. 279); Foster's case (5 Par. Rep. 59). It was also contended that the defendant had acted as a judge of record, and was therefore not liable. It was contended that the notice was insufficient for not shewing what action would be brought, or where the imprisonment had taken place.

Godson, Q. C. and Carrington (May 11), in support of the rule.—Should time be mentioned in the warrant? If not, it will, or at least may, amount to imprisonment for life. Yet in Res v. Barnes (1 T. R. 696), it was doubted whether even the Court of Queen's Bench could bind for more than one year. And as they have no discretion to alter the terms imposed by justices, it is essential that these should be distinct. (Res v. Holloway, 2 D. P. C. 125.) All the recent authorities and forms require that the time and sums should be specified. (Re Downey, 15 L. J. 129, M. C.; Archbold, Just. 2, 455.) Old authorities and precedents are not to be followed when they clash with general principles, and are inconsistent with liberty. By old precedents general warrants were supported, and even the use of the torture. No less than three lord chief justices, five lord chancellors, within a very short period, issued warrants for torture, and the last order is in the autograph of William the Third (10 State Trials, 753). But looking at these very authorities, they will not support this covenant. The 20th Edw. 4 has no bearing upon the subject. Lambard's Eirenarcha is a warrant of the reign of James the First, which does not appear to have been followed, and which could not now be supported. Dalton is only a citation of Lambard. West's Symbolography refers to a commitment after conviction for having threatened the life of the Master of the Rolls. In Willes v. Bridger (2 B. & Ald.) the point was not taken. Then the notice is perfectly good; it is as follows:—

"Sir,—You having, on or about the 14th day of March last, as one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said borough of Monmouth, caused me to be apprehended and unlawfully committed to a certain common goal or prison in the borough of Monmouth aforesaid, and to be there imprisoned, and kept and detained in prison there, without any reasonable or probable cause whatsoever, for a long space of time, to wit, from the said 14th day of March last to the 9th day of August then and next following, I do, therefore, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, hereby give you notice that I shall, at or soon after the expiration of one calendar month from the time of your being served with this notice, cause a writ of summons to be sued out of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench at Westminster, against you, at my suit, for the said imprisonment, and shall proceed against you thereupon according to law. Dated this 4th day of December, 1843.—J. PRICKETT."

The place of imprisonment is defined,—the common goal at Monmouth; the time during which the plaintiff was kept there; the form of action, if it be necessary, is sufficiently pointed out by the writ of summons "for the said imprisonment." (Martins v. Uppecher, 3 Q. B. 663; Jackson v. Fytche, 14 M. & W. 381.) The Court intimated that it was unnecessary to argue as to the liability of the magistrate.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I am of opinion that this is a power which, as it is large, so it ought to be scrupulously exercised. We are not bound to respect ancient precedents when they appear to be contrary to all principle and illegal, as has been observed in the cases of torture and general warrants. If, however, we find in later times that the question has been fully considered and decided, such decision is deserving of all respect. Willes v. Bridger is such a decision that it is not necessary to state the amount. But in this warrant the time is altogether undefined. No precedent of such a warrant in recent times can be found, and it is plain that a commitment upon such a warrant may be for life. It is impossible for us not to see that such a security could not be required by any circumstances; and if the person is poor, and be unable to obtain sureties, he must of necessity under this warrant be detained for life. When a limited time is fixed, at the expiration of that time, if there is the same ground for apprehension, he might be committed again; but a warrant like this is plainly unnecessary, and may lead to most violent and unjust oppression; it is therefore bad. The notice is sufficient. The nature of the plaintiff's complaint fully appears; it is for an imprisonment, and the place and time are also specified. Nor is there any difference, as suggested by Mr. Greaves, between "imprisoned" and "caused to be imprisoned." We are all agreed that bond fides will not justify a magistrate who commits an illegal act. We came to that opinion recently, after a very full consideration. Indeed it is manifest that this is so; for otherwise hardly any of the numerous actions that have been brought would have ever been heard of.

PATTESON and WILLIAMS, JJ. concurred.

Rule absolute for new trial.

DOE dem. BOWLEY v. BARNES.

Overseers—Ejectment.

In an action of ejectment brought by parish officers, proof that they have acted as parish officers is sufficient, without proof of their actual appointment.

Ejectment by parish officers. Verdict for lessors of the plaintiff, with leave to the defendant to enter a nonsuit, if the Court should think that proof of their appointment was necessary in addition to proof of their having acted. A rule nisi had been obtained accordingly, against which Whitehurst, Q. C. and Flowers, shewed cause.—The general rule is, that proof of persons acting in an official capacity is sufficient. In Berrymann v. Wise (4 T. R. 366) proof that the plaintiff libelled was an attorney was held not necessary, as he had acted as an attorney, and Buller, J. then referred to the instances of peace-officers, constables, and justices. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—That case is distinguishable, because the defendant had libelled the plaintiff as an attorney, and could not, therefore, turn round and say he was not.] There are numerous other authorities. (Cannell v. Curtis, 2 B. N. C. 228; Buller v. Ford, C. & M. 662; McGahy v. Alston, 2 M. & W. 206.) Even in criminal cases, proof of acting as a constable is sufficient to make a party who resists liable. (Res v. Gordon, 1 Leach, 315.) So also as to persons acting as commissioners for taking affidavits. (Marshall v. Lamb, 5 Q. B. 115.) The 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, does not render proof of appointment necessary.

Humfrey, Q. C. contra.—This is an action to recover possession of land, which the lessors of the plaintiff are only entitled to by virtue of their office. If, therefore, it be held that their own acts can give them title, the prior decisions will be very much extended. This has never been decided. The cases cited are distinguishable. In Berrymann v. Wise, and Cannell v. Curtis, the libel was of the plaintiff in a particular character. In Ward v. Clarke (12 M. & W. 747), it was held that overseers claiming under the statute must describe themselves as overseers. That might be traversed, but in ejectment there is no mode of doing this. The lessors of the plaintiff ought, therefore, to prove it. [PATTESON, J.—In Doe dem. James v. Brown (5 B. & Ald. 243), it was held that an assignment of a lease taken in execution made under the seal of office of the sheriff by A. B., acting as under-sheriff, was proved without proof of the appointment of the under-sheriff.]

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is impossible to distinguish this case from that of the assignee under the execution. In each there was only proof of the official person acting. There are numerous cases collected in Phillips on Evidence which illustrate the general rule; and the criminal cases which have been referred to are very strong.

PATTESON, J.—The established principle is, that proof of a person acting as a public officer is sufficient evidence that he filled that office. The present case is not distinguishable from that which I have referred to of the assignee under an execution.

WILLIAMS, J.—It is too late now to contend for any distinction between the cases, where the party is stopped by his own admissions from disputing the character of the person who has acted in an official situation. The general principle, as already mentioned, is now fully established. Rule discharged.

REG. v. THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT LIVERPOOL. Sir F. Thesiger, A. G. Sir F. Kelly, S. G. and Pollock, shewed cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus to compel the collector of customs at Liverpool to register at that port a vessel called the Equador, belonging to the Pacific Steam Navigation Company. The question was, whether the directors of the company (some of the shares being held by foreigners), were entitled to have the vessel registered in their name of incorporation, under the 13th sect. of stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89, without making the declaration required by another section of the statute, to the effect that we foreigners had any interest or share in the vessel.—*Jervis, Q. SANDERSON v. MITCHAM.—Jervis, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule to set aside a nonsuit, and for a new trial, obtained on the ground that the plaintiff's absence at the trial was occasioned by understanding that the cause would not come on till the day after that on which it was disposed of.—Chilton, Q. C. contra.

Rule absolute, on payment of costs.

ALEXANDER v. WILLIAMS.—The question raised upon this rule is whether, after a learned judge has granted a certificate for immediate execution, the plaintiff may immediately tax his costs and sign judgment, or whether he must not allow four days to elapse before signing judgment. Watson, Q. C. shewed cause. Leach, in support of the rule.

REG. v. THE LORD OF THE MANOR OF STRICKLAND, IN THE BARONY OF KENDAL.—Cowling shewed cause against a rule nisi for a mandamus to the lord and steward of the above-named manor, to admit one Joseph Ward to a customary tenement, parcel of the manor. The question was whether the deed, upon which the applicant claimed to be admitted, was an operative instrument according to the custom of the manor. G. Hayes, contra. was not called upon. By the COURT.—The writ ought to go. It will set up a prima facie title, which ought to be answered.

Re THE ARBITRATION BETWEEN LANCASTER AND TOPPING.—Cowling moved for a rule, calling upon Topping to shew cause why he should not bring in the submission and other documents necessary to make the order of reference a rule of Court, and why the award should not be set aside. The award was made by an umpire, who had been selected by the arbitrators thus: each arbitrator had named one person, and then they had tossed up, which should be the umpire. [*Lord DENMAN, C. WRIGHT AND OTHERS v. EGAN.

A variance between the actual date of a judgment and the date assigned to it under a videlicet, in a declaration in debt on the judgment, is immaterial.

Debt on a judgment. The declaration was in the usual form, commencing, "For that whereas the plaintiff, heretofore, to wit, on the 6th day of May, A.D. 1844, in the Court of our lady the Queen, &c. by the consideration and judgment of the said Court, recovered," &c.

Plea.—Nul tiel record.

The replication took issue upon the plea, and notice of trial having been given,

Dowling, Serjt. now produced the record, and prayed the judgment of the Court. It appeared that the date assigned to the judgment in the declaration was not the actual date as it was set forth in the record. But it was submitted that the date was rightly laid under a "to wit," and was immaterial.

By the COURT.—The judgment declared on and the judgment produced are for precisely the same sum. The descriptions of the plaintiff and defendant and of the Court also agree. We think this will support the issue. Judgment for the plaintiff.

HARRIS v. ROBINSON.

Practice.

R. G. E. T. 2 Wm. 4, s. 1, is repealed as to the time for entering an appearance, by stat. 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, s. 11.

In this case the writ of summons had been served upon the 6th of April. Good Friday fell on the 10th, and Easter-day on the 12th of the same month. The plaintiff entered an appearance sec. stat. on Thursday, the 16th. Early in the present Term, C. Jones, Serjt. obtained a rule to shew cause why the appearance, and all subsequent proceedings, should not be set aside. He referred to R. G. E. T. 2 Wm. 4, s. 1. "The days between Thursday next before and the Wednesday next after Easter-day shall not be reckoned or included in any rules or notices, or other proceedings, except notices of trial or notices of inquiry in any of the courts of law at Westminster."

Byles, Serjt. now shewed cause.—The stat. 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, was passed on the 23rd of May, 1832, and came into operation the first day of the following Michaelmas Term. It enacts in section 11, "That if any writ of summons shall be served or executed on any day, whether in Term or Vacation, all necessary proceedings to judgment and execution may be had thereon, without delay, at the expiration of eight days from the service or execution thereof, on whatever day the last of such eight days may happen to fall, whether in Term or Vacation." Then comes a proviso in case of the last day falling upon Sunday, Christmas Day, or a public fast or thanksgiving, and then a proviso that, "if the last of such eight days shall happen to fall on any day between the Thursday before and the Wednesday after Easter-day, then, and in every such case, the Wednesday after Easter-day shall be considered the last of such eight days." This enactment repeals the rule of court which was made before it was passed. Our eight days were out on the 14th, and we were entitled to enter an appearance on Thursday the 16th.

C. Jones, Serjt.—The rule of court has the force of a statute, and cannot be repealed but by an express enactment. [TINDAL, C.J.—You cannot make the rule of court stronger than an Act of Parliament, and yet leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant.] He then referred to Harrison v. Tait (4 Bing. N.C. 443). [ERLE, J.—That case is only with reference to replications. It does not affect the statute as to the service of the writ.] Rule discharged with costs.

Friday, May 8.

STROUD v. WATTS.
Practice—Writ of inquiry.

Where a writ of inquiry is executed before the under-sheriff, a certificate, indorsed upon the writ, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 1, is rightly signed in the name of the sheriff.

This was an action for malicious prosecution, in which the defendant suffered judgment to go by default. The writ of inquiry was executed before the under-sheriff of Wilts, and the jury assessed the damages at 11.1s. The return of the inquisition was made in the usual form, in the name of the sheriffs, and indorsed upon the writ was the following certificate:—"I certify that the grievance within complained of was wilful and malicious." This also was signed in the name of the sheriff. Upon a former day Byles, Serjt. had obtained a rule to shew cause why this certificate should not be set aside, together with the Master's allocatur thereon, and why the Master should not review his taxation. The ground upon which the rule was moved for was, that as the power to certify is given by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 1, only to the judge or presiding officer before whom the verdict shall be obtained, the certificate, if given at all, should have been given by the under-sheriff, and in his own name.

Sir Thomas Wilde, Serjt. now shewed cause.—This is the certificate of the presiding officer at the inquiry. The sheriff presides by his deputy, whose only authority is as the sheriff's representative. The case falls within the exact words of the Act; for the return of the inquisition is in the name of the sheriff, and therefore, in contemplation of law, he was the person who held the inquisition. There would be an incongruity on the record, if the name of the sheriff were annexed to the return, and that of the under-sheriff to the certificate. [CRESSWELL, J. referred to Reg. v. Dunn (1 Car. & K. 730.)] That was an indictment for perjury alleged to have been committed on a writ of trial, and which stated the trial to have taken place before the high sheriff. It was proved that the writ of trial was executed before an assessor, but it was held that the allegation was supported. It is true that there the postea stated that the trial took place before the sheriff, and the postea was received as conclusive evidence of the fact, but still that case is an authority in my favour. A writ of inquiry is well executed by the sheriff by his under-sheriff; and yet, in what capacity ought the under-sheriff to make his return? In his personal name, or in his official name? His correct official name is that of the sheriff. It is clear, from Bacon's Abridgment, Sheriff, H. Pl. 3, that the under-sheriff may not do any thing in his own name.

Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule.—This case depends not only on the construction of Lord Denman's Act, but also upon that of the Writ of Trial Act, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, ss. 17, 18. There the sheriff or judge, and the sheriff or his deputy, are spoken of in such a manner as to shew that the legislature recognized the judicial capacity of the under-sheriff. In the 18th section the sheriff's deputy has conferred on him the power to certify to stay execution, and the same person has, by Lord Denman's Act, the power to certify to give the plaintiff costs when the verdict is to a less amount than 40s. Then as the apparent incongruity. The writ of habeas corpus juratorum, in any cause in this court, is tested in the name of the Lord Chief Justice, yet the certificate under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, is in the name of whatever judge tries the cause. Reg. v. Dunn has no application. There it was necessary that the indictment should tally with the record, but the certificate is no part of the record. The words "judge or presiding officer" mean the person who actually presides at the trial; the Act does not say the person in whose name the judge acts.

TINDAL, C.J.—I think this certificate sufficient. The return to the inquisition must be made in the name of the sheriff. This is clear from Clowden, 62a, and rests upon the statute 12 Edw. 2, c. 5. Then, if the inquisition is taken before the sheriff, and the return to it is made by the sheriff, he is the proper person to certify. There is no reason why the under-sheriff should sign his own name rather than that of the person whose authority he exercises. If any abuse should happen by the certificate being granted by the person who does not actually preside, that may form matter for a separate application to the Court. As this was a speculative application, the rule will be discharged with costs.

The rest of the Court concurring,

Rule discharged with costs.

CAPES v. JONES.

Court of Requests—Practice.

Where a Court of Requests Act contains a general prohibitory clause, together with clauses allowing the defendant his ordinary costs of suit, in the event of any action being brought against him in one of the superior courts for a sum recoverable in the Court of Requests, unless the judge shall give a certificate, the defendant may take advantage of the Act, either by plea, or at the trial, or after verdict, by suggestion on the roll, and that, even though the case has been tried before the under-sheriff.

Dowling, Serjt. had obtained a rule for the plaintiff to shew cause why he should not carry in and file the roll, and why the defendant should not be at liberty to enter a suggestion thereon, to deprive the plaintiff of costs, and to allow the defendant his costs under the Tower Hamlets Court of Requests Act (10 Geo. 2, c. 30), on the ground that the sum recovered was under 40s. It appeared from the affidavits that the verdict was for 11. 7s. 6d. and that the defendant resided within the jurisdiction of the Act. The case had been tried before the under-sheriff, upon a writ of trial taken out by the plaintiff himself. The material sections of the Act are the 7th, 8th, and 21st. Section 7 enacts, that if, in any action brought in any of the King's courts or elsewhere, and the jurisdiction of the said Court of Requests, shall appear to the judge of the court that the debt to be recovered does not amount to 40s. and the defendant shall duly move by sufficient testimony to be allowed by any judge or judges of the court by which such action shall depend, that the defendant reside within the district of the court, the judge shall not allow the plaintiff any costs, but shall award that the plaintiff shall pay ordinary costs to the defendant. Section 8 gives to a judge the power to allow to plaintiff his costs, by certifying that there was a probable or reasonable cause of action for 40s. or more. Section 21 prohibits the bringing any action in any other court for a sum recoverable in the Court of Requests.

Talford, Serjt. now shewed cause. This case is not now open to the defendant. Where there is a general prohibitory clause, as in sec. 21, the proper course is to plead it. (Tidd's Practice, 473.) In Taylor v. Blair (3 T. R. 452), it was held, that where a Court of Requests Act said that a defendant might plead the Act, it meant that the defendant must plead it. If not taken advantage of by plea, then the defendant should ask to have the plaintiff nonsuited at the trial. In Ashey v. Kirby, (9 M. & W. 536), this question did not arise, although there it seems to have been assumed in argument that the proper course under this Act was to enter a suggestion. In this case, moreover, as the trial was had before the under-sheriff, it was impossible to obtain the certificate provided for by section 8. (Jones v. Barnes, 2 M. & W. 312.) It might have been, that if a judge had tried the case, he would have certified, and the Court ought not now to subject us to a suggestion, when we had no power to bring ourselves within the exception provided by the Act. He referred also to Parker v. Eiding (1 East, 352); Green v. Bolton (4 Bing. N.C. 309).

Dowling, Serjt. in support of the rule.—None of the cases are to the effect that where a Court of Requests Act contains other clauses as well as the general prohibitory clause, a defendant is to be relieved from availing himself of them. Sections 7 & 8 contemplate a trial upon the merits; the jury ascertain that the amount is less than 40s.; then, unless the judge interferes, under sec. 8, the defendant becomes entitled to his costs. The Courts will not treat any clause as surplusage, if an effect can be given to it. Here it is quite consistent that the defendant may avail himself of either clause. It would, in fact, be more beneficial to the plaintiff that the defendant should not plead to the jurisdiction under sec. 21. Should he do so, the plaintiff would have the additional costs either of an issue found against him or of a discontinuance. [CRESSWELL, J.—Inasmuch as sec. 8 gives the power to certify, does not that section, with sec. 7, mean that the judge who tries the case, whoever he may be, should have the power to certify? or, as it has been decided that the under-sheriff is not a judge, within the meaning of sec. 8, would not these sections be confined in their application to a writ of trial subject to be controlled by certificate?] The fact of the power to obtain the certificate being lost by the subsequent statute, cannot deprive the defendant of his right to the certificate. (Shaw v. Oates, 4 Dowd. 720; Forbes v. Simmons, 9 Dowd. 37; Ashey v. Kirby, 9 M. & W. 536; Marsh, 8 Dowd. 1.) Here the person who obtained the order to try before the sheriff was the plaintiff; he thereby chose to waive his own advantage, and he cannot now build an argument in his own favour upon that fact.

TINDAL, C.J.—In this case there are two clauses to be reconciled. The 21st section prohibits any action for a debt recoverable in the Tower Hamlets Court of Requests being brought in any of the superior Courts. There can be no doubt that, if there were only this prohibitory clause, the defendant would be bound to take advantage of the Act, either by plea or at the trial. But there are also the 7th and 8th sections, the 7th giving the power to enter a suggestion. But then, as the 7th and 8th are to be read together, and as the proviso in the 8th section is wholly inoperative in cases tried before the sheriff under the Writ of Trial Act, the question is raised whether the remedy offered by the statute be not impracticable. That question has been decided in three cases.—Shaw v. Qates, Bishop v. Marsh, and Forbes v. Simmons. They show that the defendant may still have the power of entering a suggestion. We cannot, therefore, upset the authorities upon this point. I may remark further, that, in this case, it is the plaintiff's own fault that he has lost the remedy of a judge's certificate, for it was in consequence of his own application that the case went before the sheriff.

COLTMAN, J.—The clauses may well stand together. It appears that, by the subsequent statute, in cases of this kind, the advantage of the certificate is lost. That the plaintiff should bring under the notice of the judge when application is made for a writ of trial.

CRESSWELL, J.—I was at first struck by the remark that the verdict was obtained before a tribunal without the power of certifying. But to this there are two answers: first, that it was the plaintiff's own choice to go before such a tribunal; secondly, that had the application even proceeded from the defendant, the plaintiff might, by offering this very objection, have obtained a consent that the undersheriff should have the power to certify.

ERLE, J.—The prohibitory clause does not prevent the effect of the previous clause. But I think it much to be wished that, in cases of this nature, the undersheriff should have the power to certify.

Rule absolute.

HODGES v. TOPPIS and ANOTHER.

Practice—Pauper.

Where notice of trial was given, and the cause was called on, but it was found that, through the negligence of the attorney, it had not been regularly entered, and therefore could not be tried, the Court gave the defendant his costs of the day against the plaintiff, who was a pauper.

Chanell, Serjt. had obtained a rule, calling upon the plaintiff, a pauper, to shew cause why he should not pay to the plaintiff costs of the day for not proceeding to trial, under 1 Reg. Gen. H. T. 2 Wm. 4, s. 110, which orders that, "Where a pauper omits to proceed to trial, pursuant to notice or an undertaking, he may be called upon by a rule to shew cause why he should not pay costs, though he has not been disappointed." Notice of trial had been regularly given, the cause was in the list, and was called on, when it was discovered that the cause had not been regularly entered, and therefore could not be tried.

Dowling, Serjt. now shewed cause, upon an affidavit that the management of the cause had been entrusted by the attorney to his clerk; that, upon the last day for entering the cause, the clerk had been detained until late upon a summons before a judge at chambers; that he then, by mistake, took out a writ of distringas juratores instead of a habeas corpus juratorum, and that he did not discover his error until it was too late to procure the proper jury panel to annex to the record. It was submitted that the payment of costs by a pauper who had sworn that he was not worth *s*l. was a thing impossible, and that here the delay had been purely accidental and not vexatious.

Chanell, Serjt. in support of the rule.—By the rule of 2 Wm. 4, s. 110, a pauper is substantially in the same position as any other suitor with regard to costs of the day. [CRESSWELL, J.—In other cases you would have a rule absolute at once. Here, by the terms of the new rule, you can only have a rule to shew cause.] This case is not put as one of vexatious conduct upon the part of the plaintiff, but as conduct that puts the defendant to great inconvenience and expense, which he ought not to be made to suffer. The cases of Doe dem. Lindsay v. Edwards (2 Dowl. 468., and Gore v. Morpheu (8 Dowl. 137) shew that a very strong case must be made out by the pauper to exempt himself from the payment of costs. Here the excuse is not sufficient.

TINDAL, C. J.—I think that this is a default which calls upon the plaintiff to pay the costs. He has made a gross mistake, and put the defendant to very considerable expense.

Rule absolute.

JEFFERIS v. YABLONSKI.

Practice—Irregularity.

In the issue delivered after a judge's order for trial before the sheriff under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 17, the omission of counsel's signature to the pleadings, or of the date of the return of the writ, is immaterial; but the omission of the teste of the writ is a defect which the Court will require the plaintiff to amend with costs. In neither case will the issue be set aside for irregularity.

In this case the issue had been delivered, after a judge's order had been obtained, for trial before the sheriff under the Writ of Trial Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 17). The issue was in the form directed by the rule of H. T. 4 Wm. 4, but it left a blank for the teste of the writ of trial, and also for the date of the return. The signature of one of the serjeants which had been affixed to the pleas was also omitted in the transcript. On a former day Dowling, Serjt. had obtained a rule to set aside the issue for irregularity, against which Byles, Serjt. now shewed cause.—The rule which orders all pleas to be signed, is that of E. T. 18 Car. 2. No provision is there made for entering the counsel's name upon the issue. It is quite unnecessary that the name of the serjeant who signed the plea should go into the Rolls of the Court. In practice the signature to any of the pleadings is quite as often omitted as inserted. If the plea had really not been signed, the rule of practice would not have been complied with, and the plaintiff might have taken advantage of the irregularity. Then, as to the other points, this is not the proper mode of proceeding. Ikin v. Plover (5 Dowl. 594) was a case very similar to this. There the Court refused to set aside the issue, and said that the proper course was to apply to a judge at chambers to amend it at the plaintiff's costs. Here they should have gone before a judge at chambers and asked for an amendment. [TINDAL, C. J.—You are the person in whose favour the amendment would be.] He referred also to Hart v. Daily (2 Dowl. 357.).

Dowling, Serjt. in support of the rule.—In Archbold's Practice, 8th edit. p. 281, it is said, "The issue is supposed to be a transcript of the record containing an entry of all the pleadings, with the order in which they were pleaded, with their dates, and counsel's signature, if any, and concluding with an award of the venire." If the plea be not signed it may be set aside; the signature is an essential part of the plea, and to transcribe it without the signature is not to transcribe it entire. [CRESSWELL, J.—Suppose the plea not to be signed, and yet the plaintiff to reply.] That would be a waiver of the irregularity, but the plaintiff is bound to shew that there was no signature, and that the defect was waived. In Dennett v. Hardy (2 D. & L. 484), one of the objections was, that the dates were not introduced, and Pattison, J. said, "There is no doubt that if a judge's order had been first obtained, and the plaintiff had sued out the writ, and afterwards delivered the issue with wrong dates, he must have amended it. I am rather inclined to think that the order for the writ of trial ought first to be obtained, and if it be, the dates could then be inserted, and looking at the form given by the rule, it seems to me that that ought to be done." [CRESSWELL, J. referred to Watts v. Ball (1 Scott, N.R. 173.).] There the parties asked leave to amend. Whatever would be a defect in the writ of trial is a defect in the issue. The rule of Court of H. T. 4 Wm. 4, furnishes a specific form, and that form ought to be followed. Peel v. Ward (5 Dowl. 169); Blissett v. Tenant (Arnold 6). Dennett v. Hardy shews that in Term this application should be made to the Court. [ERLE, J.—In the jury process in the form of the issue delivered in the superior courts, the practice is to leave blanks for the date.]

TINDAL, C. J.—In this case, the first objection taken is, that the name of the serjeant who signed the pleas is omitted in the issue. That does not appear to me a valid objection. In the form given by the Reg. Gen. H. T. 4 Wm. 4, No. 1, the direction given is, "Copy the declaration from these words to the end, and the plea and subsequent pleadings to the joinder of issue." It is entirely silent about inserting the name of counsel or serjeant. The rule of 18 Car. 2 required the names of counsel to all pleas, but as there is a direct order as to the form of the issue, it is fair to say that the silence of the new rule justifies the want of the insertion of the name upon the record. On principle, I see no ground of objection. The whole advantage to be derived from the signature of a serjeant has been sufficiently obtained already, when it was affixed to the pleas. With respect to the second objection, viz. that the teste of the writ of trial is left blank, when we are the form of the issue provided by the rule, I think that it is necessary that that blank should be filled up. But I do not think the last objection, that the return of the writ is not stated, valid. The trial may be adjourned, or put off by consent, and it may be impossible for the plaintiff to know, at the time that the issue is delivered, at what time the writ will be returnable. The question, then, meets us, how is this rule to be disposed of? Now, I think, the rule asks too much. The defendant should have taken the course pointed out by the cases, and have required the plaintiff to amend. He ought not to have burdened the matter with unnecessary costs. The rule, therefore, should be discharged without costs, the plaintiff consenting to amend by inserting the teste of the writ of trial.

COLTMAN, J.—There would be no difficulty in the plaintiff's inserting the date of the teste, even though the writ had not actually issued, because he would be well aware what day he could issue the writ of trial. That date, therefore, ought to be stated. That seems to me the application of Pattison, J.'s obiter dictum.

CRESSWELL, J.—We ought not to treat this as an irregular, but as a defective issue. Still the defendant is entitled to put the plaintiff to the costs of making the issue right.

ERLE, J.—The rule of Court says, that the forms given shall be employed, or forms "to the like effect."

That expression gives considerable latitude; and then comes a proviso that the Court, or a judge, may give leave to amend. I think that proviso had in view the injury resulting from parties being put to heavy costs for mere inaccuracies.

Rule discharged without costs: the plaintiff to amend by inserting the teste upon payment of costs.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Thursday, May 7.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. BROWN.

An information was filed by the Attorney-General against the defendant for an encroachment on a royal forest. This was demurred to, and the Attorney-General elected to amend. The rule to amend was drawn up by the officer of the Court in the usual form, as to be made on "payment of costs." The Crown officers, however, disputed the liability of the Crown to pay costs, amended the information, and served the defendant with a rule to plead to the amended information, whereupon the defendant obtained time to plead: Held, on a motion calling on the Attorney-General to shew cause why judgment should not be signed against the Crown, unless the conditions on which the rule was drawn up by the officer of the Court were complied with, that the obtaining time to plead was a step taken in the cause, and operated as a waiver of the claim for costs. Quære, whether the Crown is exempt from paying costs of an amendment under these circumstances.

This was an information of intrusion, filed against the defendant at the suit of the Crown, for an encroachment on the royal forest at Waltham, and it appeared that there had been a demurrer to the original information on the ground of duplicity. When the case came on to be argued, the Attorney-General elected to amend, and whereupon a rule was drawn up in the usual form by the officer of the Court, that the amendment was to be made on payment of costs. The Crown officers, however, refused to pay any costs, on the ground that there was no precedent of a case in which the Crown had paid costs under similar circumstances. They then amended the information, and served the defendant with a rule to plead to the amended information. Upon which, the defendant applied for a fortnight's time to plead, which was given him. A rule having been obtained, calling on the Attorney-General to shew cause why judgment should not be signed against the Crown, on the ground that the conditions on which the amendment had been allowed by the Court had not been complied with, as to the payment of costs.

The Attorney-General now shewed cause, and contended, first, that the Court had no power to enforce costs as a condition of an amendment as against the Crown; and, secondly, that it was not necessary, in this case, to discuss the question, as the defendant had, by asking for and obtaining time to plead to the amended information, waived the claim to costs.

Willes, contra, contended that the course taken by the Crown officers was a very ingenious but undignified mode of avoiding the payment of costs. The question, however, of whether the Crown is liable to pay the costs of the amendment before it was made, was still open.

PARKE, B.—The question now is, whether, by your asking for time to plead, you have not admitted that the amendment was properly made. I think your course should have been to have treated it as a nullity, and if they had signed judgment, have come here to set it aside, which would have raised the question.

POLLOCK, C.B.—When you got information that they would not pay costs, you should have applied to stay the proceedings until the costs were paid.

Willes.—But all parties fully understood that the question of costs was not waived; indeed the Crown officers gave notice that they should move the Court to strike out the words "on payment of costs;" and with regard to the suggestion of the Lord Chief Baron, the application for time to plead was made in vacation, when this Court was not sitting, and there was, therefore, no means of enforcing the payment of the costs.

POLLOCK, C.B.—Then you should have applied to a judge at chambers to stay the proceedings, and he would have enforced the rule of Court.

By the COURT.—This rule must be discharged, and on the ground that after the amendment was made by the Crown, the defendant, well knowing that the Crown meant to dispute the question of the payment of costs, took a step in the cause by asking for time to plead to the amended information. This was a waiver of the claim to costs, and therefore the defendant must plead to the amended information, or the Crown will be entitled to sign judgment. With regard to the general question, of whether the Crown can claim an exemption to the payment of costs, on an amendment of this kind, it is not necessary to decide that question in this case. Rule discharged.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. HALLET.

Motion to set aside a judgment.

Willes moved to set aside the judgment, which had been signed in this case, on the ground that it was irregular, and also against good faith; he stated that the time for pleading in this case expired on the 4th (Monday), and on the previous Saturday the defendant's attorney had applied to the Crown solicitors for a fortnight's time to plead, to which they replied that they themselves had no objection to give that time, but that the more regular course was to instruct counsel to move the Court for that purpose; and that if that course was taken, they (the Crown solicitors) would instruct the Attorney-General to consent to such application; counsel was instructed accordingly on the Monday; but, owing to the absence of the Attorney-General, he was unable to move, and on Wednesday the judgment had been signed for want of a plea, and without any notice to the defendant. This, it was submitted, was quite against good faith. The judgment, also, was quite irregular, as the information had been filed on a Sunday. Rule nisi.

DIXON F. SLEDGON.

Practice.

On a motion to set aside a judge's order given by the defendant to confess judgment, on the ground that the attestation was insufficient:—Held, that the order of the judges relative thereto, reported in 14 M. & W. 335, is a mere recommendation, and not a rule of Court, and could not be binding on the profession.

This was a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the judge's order to sign judgment herein, given by the defendant, should not be set aside, with all subsequent proceedings. It appeared by the affidavits on which the rule was moved for, that the defendant had, by a judge's order, consented to a judgment being signed against him unless he paid the debt and costs by a certain time; and on his making default the judgment was signed and execution issued. In June 1845, an order was promulgated by the judges of this court (14 M. & W. 335) relative to the best means to prevent parties from fraudulently obtaining judges' orders for signing judgment, wherein they "recommended," amongst other things, "that where the defendant has not appeared, or has appeared in person, no such order be made unless the defendant attends the judge, and gives his consent in person, or unless his written consent be attested by an attorney acting on his behalf." In this case, the consent was a written one, and was attested by an attorney, a Mr. Reddish, of Liverpool, to whom the consent had been sent by the plaintiff's attorney to take to the defendant to get signed. It also appeared that when the consent was so taken to the defendant to be signed, Reddish desired him to name some attorney to attend on his behalf, to attest his signature, but he stated that he knew no attorney in that town, and requested Reddish to act as his attorney in the matter, which he did, and explained the effect of what the defendant was signing to him. The question was, whether this attestation was sufficient, or whether, as the consent to a judgment by a judge's order now stood in the place of a cognovit, the attestation did not require the same particularity as to the attorney attesting being a person attending exclusively on behalf of the defendant.

Martin, Q. C. now shewed cause, and contended that the order of the judges, which had been referred to when the rule was moved for, was in fact not an "order," but merely a recommendation. [PARKE, B.—There is no rule, but merely an arrangement between us that we will not grant these orders unless we are satisfied that the defendant is aware of what he is doing, and to carry out that resolution we recommended certain precautions to be taken. The question here is, whether an order which has been made by one of us, without one of these recommendations having been strictly carried out, is bad? It is now submitted that such an order would not be bad, for what is relied on, on the other side, is not a rule of Court, but merely a recommendation, not binding on the Court. But even if it were, in this case it is contended that the recommendations have been complied with, for Reddish cannot be said to be either "attorney or agent" for the plaintiff, so as to bring him within the class of cases relating to cognovits, he having been employed merely to do this one act, to obtain the signature of the defendant.

Jervis, Q. C. (Birnie with him), contra, submitted that although the order referred to was not strictly a rule of Court, as not being signed, yet still it was a regulation by which the Court would be bound, and that if so, it was clear that the attestation by an attorney who was then acting for the plaintiff in the matter was not sufficient, but that the same strictness must be observed as in cases of cognovits; as to this latter point, he cited Mason v. Kepple (5 M. & W. 513); Pigot v. Swaine (2 Dowl. and Low. 87).

By the COURT.—The order relied on by the defendant was a mere recommendation of the judges, and not a rule of Court; it cannot be binding on parties who are not in any way bound to be aware of its existence; none of the Profession would know any thing of it unless they practised at Judges' Chambers. Therefore it would be most unreasonable to say that an attorney practising in the country is to be bound by it. It is not, therefore, necessary to decide the point whether this attestation would have been good had this been a rule of Court. The rule must be discharged. Rule discharged.

There was another point as to the plaintiff having levied for too much under his execution, on which the Court suggested a compromise. Rule accordingly.

O'BRIEN v. CLEMENT.

Mode of pleading an apology and payment into court, in an action for a libel under stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96.

In this case Jervis, Q. C. and Clark, shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained (May 6) by Lush, for rescinding an order made by Platt, B. at chambers. The action was for a libel, and the order of the learned judge was, that the defendant should be at liberty to plead,—first, not guilty, to the whole declaration; secondly, as to part of the declaration, an apology and payment of a sum of money into court in amends of the alleged injury. The question was, whether these pleas could properly be pleaded together in the above manner, or whether the general issue should not have been pleaded to the whole declaration, except that portion to which the second plea was intended to apply. It was argued that the order of Platt, B. was right, on the ground that the stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 2, was cumulative, and that no analogy could be shewn between this case and that of pleading in an action of trespass, which was referred to in support of the rule. The Court, however, held it to be clear that the plea of not guilty should have been pleaded to the whole declaration, minus that part to which payment was pleaded; and that otherwise there would be this inconsistency, that the plea of payment would admit the defendant's guilt, which was altogether denied and put in issue by the first plea. The defendant, therefore, had leave to amend his pleadings, in accordance with the opinion entertained by the Court, as above mentioned.

Rule absolute, with leave to the defendant to amend.

MORRIS v. PHILLIPS.—Sir T. Phillips shewed cause against a rule obtained by Beadon to enlarge the peremptory undertaking to try, which had been given by the plaintiff in the above case. By the affidavits in support of the rule, it appeared that two out of the three defendants were insolvent, but it further appeared, that at the time when the peremptory undertaking was given, these two defendants were uncertificated bankrupts. The Court, therefore, thought that the plaintiff's affidavit did not disclose a sufficient ground for not proceeding to trial pursuant to the undertaking; and after hearing Beadon in support of his rule, discharged the rule. Rule discharged.

HUNT v. SIGGERS.—Thomas shewed cause against a rule for a new trial obtained by Parry, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, and that evidence had been improperly received. Rule absolute, on payment of costs.

ABRAHAM v. PUCKERIDGE.—Thomas shewed cause against the rule for a new trial, obtained by Crowl in the above case, on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury. Rule absolute, on payment of costs.

SWIFT v. HAWKINS.—Hurlstone moved in this case for a nonsuit, and for a rule to stay execution. The defendant was in covenant for 256*l.* principal and interest, and the motion for the nonsuit proceeded on the ground that the deed had not received its proper construction at the trial. In support of his application to stay execution, he cited Vansandau v. Anon. (1 B. & Ald. 214); Pye v. Thorne (1 Taunt. 387); but the Court declined to exercise their equitable jurisdiction to stay execution. As to the first point, they granted a Rule to shew cause.

DEES v. THE GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND RAILWAY COMPANY.—Addison shewed cause against the rule obtained by Borill in this case. Cur. adv. ul.

BOLD v. WAINWRIGHT.—Jervis and Cowling shewed cause against the rule obtained by Byles, Serjt. to set aside the verdict in this case, and enter it for defendant, or for nonsuit. The question was, whether there was sufficient evidence of notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange, as cited: Campbell v. Webster (15 L. J. C. P. 4). The Court held that there was no scintilla of evidence of notice, and accordingly made the rule for a nonsuit absolute, and the plaintiff should elect to enter a verdict for the defendant on the third issue, in reference to which issue the above question arose. Rule absolute.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

The Court of Exchequer Chamber sat in Error (from the Court of Queen's Bench) on Saturday, May 8, and the Monday and Tuesday following. The following cases were argued, but no judgment was delivered; they will be reported as soon as the judgments are given by the Court.

Saturday, May 9.

BYNNE v. THE QUEEN.—Hugh Hill was heard for the defendant, and Webster, in reply, on the part of the plaintiff in Error. Cur. adv. ul.

YORK AND NORTH MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY v. THE QUEEN.—Martin, Q. C. for the plaintiff, and Knox, Q. C. for the defendant in Error, were respectively heard. Cur. adv. ul.

STEWART v. TODD.—Butt, Q. C. for the plaintiff in Error; Peacock, for the defendant in Error. Fort heard.

Monday, May 11.

STEWART v. TODD.—Peacock concluded his argument in this case for the defendant in Error. Butt, Q. C. in reply. Cur. adv. ul.

KEIR v. LEEHAN.—Bliss, for the plaintiff in Error. Martin, Q. C. for the defendant in Error. Cur. adv. ul.

Tuesday, May 12.

WEDLAKE v. GARDNER.—Hill, Q. C. for the plaintiff, and Watson, Q. C. for the defendant in Error, were respectively heard by the Court. Cur. adv. ul.

BAIL COURT.

Thursday, May 7.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

RICKARD v. KINCH.

When a cause is referred to arbitration, and either of the parties desires to set aside the award, he must move within the same time as he would for a new trial, unless there are special circumstances which prevent his so doing, or unless all matters in difference are also referred.

Greenwood moved to set aside an award made in this cause. The action had been referred by an order of Nisi Prius at the last Devon assizes, a verdict by consent having been taken, subject to the award. The award itself was made on the 13th of April, and the defendant obtained a copy of it on the 16th.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Are you not too late with this motion? You should have moved within the time limited for moving for a new trial; this is merely a reference of the cause, and not of all matters in difference?

Greenwood.—Of the cause only; but if a party is compelled to come within the four days, it inflicts a great hardship upon him, as he has in general to consult counsel as to the award, and to prepare affidavits and instruct his London agent.

WIGHTMAN, J.—If you have any special circumstances justifying the delay, that would be a reason for relaxing the rule; but in this case you shew none. The rule is well understood; it is a regular, settled practice. Rule refused.

RE FORD.

Although an outlaw will be permitted to come into Court for the purpose of seeking relief against fraud or oppression, he cannot be heard for the purpose of obtaining any personal advantage in the ordinary way.

The Attorney-General and Petersdorff shewed cause against a rule for compelling Mr. Ford, an attorney of this Court, to deliver a bill of his costs.

and that it be referred to taxation. It was now shown that the applicant was an outlaw, and therefore had no locus standi in Court for any purpose of obtaining a benefit to himself.

Watson, Q. C. contra.

WIGHTMAN, J. thought that this case was within the ruling in the very late case of Davis v. Trevanion, and that although an outlaw could come to the Court to ask for relief against fraud or oppression, he could not do so for the purpose of seeking a benefit for himself in the ordinary way.

Rule discharged.

Friday, May 8.

LANE v. NEWMAN.

When a summons has been heard by a judge at chambers, who has disposed of it on the ground of the application not having been made in time, the Court will not review his decision, such a question being entirely one within his own discretion.

Corrie showed cause against a rule for setting aside a writ of summons, affidavit of service, and appearance, for irregularity. A similar application had been made to Mr. Justice Cresswell, at chambers, who discharged the summons, on the ground that the party had not taken advantage of the irregularity in due time. It was now contended that, on the authority of Tadman v. Wood (4 Ad. & Ell. 1011), which decides that "whether an application made before a single judge at chambers to set aside process for irregularity be made early enough is a question for his discretion, and the Court will not review his decision," this motion could not be sustained.

Lush, contra, contended that this case was distinguishable from that quoted, and that if the latter were to be taken as an authority, the whole practice of the Court would be contradicted.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I feel myself bound by the case quoted, by which it appears that whether a proceeding is taken in or out of time is a question for the opinion of the judge, and is not to be subject to be reviewed. I think that case is quite in point in this one, and the rule must therefore be discharged.

Rule discharged.

VERNON v. POUNNETT.

In order to obtain a distringas to proceed to outlawry, a copy of the writ of summons should be left at the defendant's last known place of abode, or with some person (if any known) who is likely to forward it to him.

Wordsworth having, on a former day, obtained a distringas, in order to proceed to outlawry on an affidavit which showed that the defendant had no residence in this country, and disclosing an application made to his late attorney for information respecting him, and the Master having refused to draw up the rule on the ground that the affidavit should have shown that a copy of the writ had been left at the defendant's last place of residence, or with some one who would probably transmit it to him, now applied to the Court with the view of obtaining a direction to the Master to draw up the rule notwithstanding such an objection, and he contended that the practice of the Courts in no respect required a copy to be left, where it was shown that the defendant had left the country; that he had obtained the opinion of the Masters of the Exchequer, which he conceived bore him out in this view. The question submitted was this:

"DISTRINGAS FOR OUTLAWRY.

"Is it necessary, by the practice, to leave a copy of the writ? I cannot find any authority for such course being observed, and in many instances where a man has quitted his house, shut it up, and gone abroad, the leaving of a copy is impossible."

The answer was as follows:—

"The attention of the officers does not appear to have been directed to this question, but we think if there be a house or place where a copy of the writ could be left with any reasonable prospect of its reaching the defendant, that ought to be done; and if the house be shut up, or there be any other good reason for not leaving a copy of the writ, explanation of that should appear on the affidavit."

"E. B."

WIGHTMAN, J. after conferring with Master Bunce, said he understood from him that the practice of the Court was precisely the same as that reported by the Exchequer Masters, and that, where it is known that there is a person who, if the copy of the writ were given to him, would be likely to forward it to the defendant, it should be left with him accordingly; and that as in this case it appeared that there was an attorney who had been concerned for the defendant, the copy ought properly to be left with him before applying for the distringas.

Application refused.

BUSINESS OF THE DAY.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. BLATHWAYTE AND ANOTHER, JUSTICES OF GLOUCESTERSHIRE.—Symons moved for a rule to quash the writ of certiorari herein.

Rule refused.

Ex parte RAMSDEN.—Crompton, Addison, and Robinson, showed cause in this case, which was a rule nisi for a habeas corpus, in order that the applicant might be discharged out of York Gaol, to which he had been committed by the Commissioner of Bankrupts of the Leeds district. Allen, Serjt. and Gray, contra.

Rule absolute.

Ex parte BULL.—In this case, which was somewhat similar, his lordship directed the rule to be absolute.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Wednesday, May 6.

Ex parte BARTON, re CHARLES.

Proof.—Railway shares—7 & 8 Vict. c. 110.

A shareholder, who claimed against a bankrupt's estate on account of the purchase and sale of shares in a railway company, which had been provisionally registered only, admitted to prove against the estate.

This was a petition for liberty to prove against the estate of Henry Charles, for the sum of 350l. The petitioner was a shareholder, and on the 14th of October, 1845, he effected a purchase for the bankrupt, according to his written instructions, of fifty shares in the Boston, Newark, and Sheffield Railway Company, which had been provisionally registered. On the 4th of November, the petitioner requested the bankrupt to pay the purchase-money for the shares, which request not being complied with, he, on the 7th of November, sold the shares at a loss. A fiat issued against the bankrupt on the 8th of December, and upon the petitioner's application to prove being rejected by the commissioner, the present petition was presented.

Russell and Chomley, for the petitioner.

Bacon and Roll, for the assignees, contended that there was no contract upon which the petitioner could properly claim a right to prove. The company had been only provisionally registered, and therefore no debt was contracted with regard to these shares. They cited 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, ss. 23, 25, 26.

Russell, in reply, cited Young v. Smith (10 Jurist, 52).

THE CHIEF JUDGE.—The question in this case is on the proof for a small sum claimed under a transaction which is alleged to be illegal by reason of the provisions of a statute passed in the year 1844—a statute the interpretation of which, in several respects, seems fairly open to considerable difference of opinion. The burden of establishing the alleged illegality lies upon those who assert it. The only decision upon the point which has been produced is a decision in January in this year, being the unanimous decision of the Court of Exchequer, consisting at the time of three judges, in favour of the legality of such a transaction as this is. Upon a mere question of construction under such an Act of Parliament as this is, ought I, or not, whatever my own doubts may be, to follow this as an exposition of law until the law shall receive any different exposition? I am of opinion that, without expressing—indeed, without forming—any judgment of my own upon the true construction of this Act, the better mode of performing my duty will be to abide by that decision. I give no opinion of my own; I think it a very difficult and doubtful question. I do not know on what grounds the learned commissioner proceeded. The party must be at liberty to go before the commissioner and establish such proof as he may be advised, and that statute is not to be considered a ground of objection as rendering the transaction illegal.

Nisi Prius.

Tuesday, May 12.

(Before Chief Baron POLLOCK.)

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. OSBORN.

Information for penalties—Substitution of imprisonment for the penalties after previous conviction—Construction of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 87, s. 105.

The defendant having been convicted by the jury on an information for penalties, which charged him with being concerned in the illegal unshipment of twelve hogsheads of foreign brandy, without payment of duty, Theiger, A. G. begged, before the jury were discharged, to draw the attention of his lordship to the 105th section of the recent statute, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 87, whereby it is enacted that "when any verdict shall pass against any person in any of her Majesty's courts of record for any offence for which any pecuniary penalty shall have been inflicted by this or any Act relating to the customs, and such person shall have before been duly convicted, either by verdict in any of her Majesty's courts of record or otherwise, of any such offence, it shall and may be lawful for the judge or judges of the said court in which such person shall be so convicted, to order and adjudge that such person shall, in lieu of any penalty, be imprisoned in any house of correction, for any period not less than six, nor more than twelve calendar months; and the governor or keeper of any house of correction is hereby required to receive any person committed under any such order or judgment." This being a novel enactment, it was very doubtful how to apply it; for it was difficult to say whether the question of the prisoner's conviction was one for the jury or the judge at Nisi Prius. If the jury was the proper tribunal, then, he apprehended, that it was a matter for proof, and that, as in previous convictions for felony, the jury ought to try the matter now. He therefore tendered such proof.

Pigott, for the defendant, objected to the course proposed by the Attorney-General. The defendant was quite unprepared on this information to meet any such question. It was not competent to the Crown to go into evidence of any previous conviction under the Customs Acts, because it was not charged. It was not on the record, and therefore the defendant had no notice of it; and being a question of fact, he ought to have the opportunity of traversing and rebutting it.

The Attorney-General.—My learned friend forgets that it is to be after verdict, and could not, therefore, be on the record.

Pigott.—It might be charged as previous convictions of felony are under the statute, and there no evidence is given till after the verdict of guilty has been given by the jury.

Jervis, Q.C.—That is under the very directions of that statute, which provides that the indictment shall contain the charge, but that the question shall not be submitted to the jury till the principal charge of the indictment shall have been found against the prisoner.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I certainly do not think this is a question for the jury; but I will consult the other judges before I decide the question.

His Lordship then retired for a few minutes, and on his return said—The opinion of the learned judges and my own is, that I have no authority under the 105th section of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 87, to do any thing here. It is clear that the section does not raise any question for a jury, for it simply says, that when a verdict shall pass on an information for penalties against any person who shall have been previously convicted of a similar offence, the judge or judges of the court shall and may substitute a sentence of imprisonment for the verdict of the jury. The proper course is, then, that the verdict should go into the Court of Exchequer, when the Attorney-General may suggest that the defendant has been previously convicted, and pray for an order under this section. That suggestion will probably be traversed or confessed, and then the question will be raised for the decision of the Court. I see that the 89th section enacts, that

"where any person shall have been convicted before any two justices of the peace of any offence for which any penalty shall have been inflicted by this or any other Act or Acts relating to the customs, it shall and may be lawful for the said justices, if they shall think fit, to order and adjudge that such person shall, in default of paying such penalty, be imprisoned for the first of such offences in any of her Majesty's gaols within their jurisdiction for a period of not less than six, nor more than nine, calendar months; and if such party shall have been before convicted of any offence against this or any other Act or Acts relating to the Customs, it shall and may be lawful for the said justices, if they shall think fit, to order and adjudge that such person be imprisoned in any house of correction, and there kept to hard labour for any period not less than six, nor more than twelve, calendar months." Thus, no doubt, the justices have the power to make the order, but they act finally, and the judge at Nisi Prius does not. He gives no judgment whatever on the questions raised by the information—it is for the Court alone to do so. Under these circumstances, and for these reasons, I think that the question not being for the jury, and I having no power to give any judgment here on this question, it must be raised before the full Court.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE week has been very barren of legislative proceedings important to Lawyers. The Railways Dissolution Bill has gone down to the Commons. Lord BROUGHAM's new Conveyancing Bill is noticed, and, in part, presented in a leading article. Lord CAMPBELL pushes on his Registration of Deeds Bill, and the Charitable Trusts Bill is strenuously supported by the Government, although it is expected to be defeated in the Commons.

DEATH BY ACCIDENTS COMPENSATION.

"An Act for Compensating the Families of Persons Killed by Accidents."

Sect. 1. An action to be maintainable against any person causing death through neglect, &c. notwithstanding the death of the person injured.—Whereas no action at law is now maintainable against a person who, by his wrongful act, neglect, or default, may have caused the death of another person, and it is oftentimes right and expedient that the wrong-doer in such case should be answerable in damages for the injury so caused by him; be it therefore enacted, that whosoever any person shall, by his wrongful act, neglect or default, have caused the death of another person, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would (if death had not ensued) have entitled the party injured to maintain an action against such first-mentioned person in any of Her Majesty's Courts of Record at Westminster, and recover damages in respect thereof, then and in every such case the person so causing such death shall be liable to an action for damages resulting therefrom, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death shall have been caused under such circumstances as amount in law to the offence of manslaughter.

2. Action to be for the sole benefit of the heirs to the personal property, according to the Statute of Distributions.—Every such action shall be for the sole benefit of such person or persons as are entitled to the personal effects of the deceased; and in every such action the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties for whom and for whose benefit the action shall be brought: provided always, that all such actions shall be brought and proceeded in and damages recovered in the same way and manner as if the deceased party himself had brought it, and shall be brought by the executor or administrator of such deceased person, and he or she shall be compelled to proceed, upon application of the person so entitled or any of them, and on being indemnified for costs; and that in case there shall be no executor or administrator, then any of the parties entitled as aforesaid shall be at liberty to proceed in bringing and prosecuting such action as aforesaid; and in either case the damages recovered shall be considered as part of the personal estate of the deceased, and paid and divided accordingly; and that every plaintiff in whose favour a verdict shall be given in any action under this Act shall be entitled to his full costs of suit, unless the damages found by the jury shall be less than forty shillings.

3. Provision that not more than one action shall lie.—Provided always, and be it enacted, that not more than one action shall lie for and in respect of the same subject-matter of complaint; and if two or more actions in respect thereof shall at any time be brought, it shall be lawful for the Court or a judge to order that the same be consolidated, and also to direct in whose name the action, after consolidation, shall proceed, as well as to make such other orders therein as to them or him shall seem fit.

4. Particular of the person, &c. claiming to be delivered.—In every such action the plaintiff on the record shall be required, together with the declaration, to deliver to the defendant or his attorney a full particular of the person or persons for whom and on whose behalf such action shall be brought, and of the nature of the claim in respect of which damages shall be sought to be recovered.

5. Construction of Act.—The following words and expressions are intended to have the meanings hereby assigned to them respectively, so far as such meanings are not excluded from the context or by the nature of the subject-matter; that is to say, words denoting the singular number are to be understood to apply also to a plurality of persons or things; and words denoting the masculine gender are to be understood to apply also to persons of the feminine gender.

6. Operation of Act.—This Act shall come into operation from and immediately after the passing thereof.

DEODANDS ABOLITION.

"An Act to Abolish Deodands."

Deodands and forfeiture of chattels moving to causing death abolished from and after 1st September, 1846.—Whereas the law respecting the forfeiture of chattels which have moved to or caused the death of man, and respecting deodands is unreasonable and inconvenient: be it enacted, that from and after the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, there shall be no forfeiture of any chattel for or in respect of the same being moved to or caused the death of man; and no person's jury sworn to inquire, upon the sight of any dead body, how the deceased came by his death, shall find any forfeiture of any chattel which may have moved to or caused the death of the deceased, or any deodand whatsoever; and it shall not be necessary in any indictment or inquisition for homicide to allege the value of the instrument which caused the death of the deceased, or to allege that the same was of no value.

RAILWAY COMPANIES.—Mr. Hudson's bill, relating to railway companies, which is appointed to be read a second time on Thursday next, was printed Saturday. It is entitled a Bill "for Facilitating the Winding-up of the Affairs of Companies formed by making Railways, and which shall not have obtained the authority of Parliament." The preamble of the measure, which contains 13 clauses, declares that many companies formed for making railways, and many companies projected for the like purpose, and which have been provisionally registered under the Act of the 7th and 8th years of her Majesty, for the registration, incorporation, and regulation of joint-stock companies, have failed to apply to Parliament, or having so applied have failed, or may fail, during the present session, to obtain the authority of Parliament for their respective undertakings, and that it is expedient that facilities should be given to the shareholders of such companies to enforce the winding up of the affairs. In order to accomplish so desirable an object, it is proposed, that where any company formed or projected for the purpose of making any railway, and registered on or before the 1st of November last, under the recited act, shall not have obtained the authority of Parliament at the end of the present session, it shall be lawful for any five or more shareholders, entitled in the whole to at least 3,000*l.* in the capital stock or proposed capital stock of the company, to require the directors to cause the affairs to be wound up under the provisions of this Act, and any person acting in the management of a company shall, for the purposes of this Act, be included under the term "directors." In default of a meeting being called according to the requisition, then the shareholders may convene a meeting; that after the requisition to call a meeting, the directors are not to continue to act in the payment of money, &c. The holders of scrip, or the banker's receipts for deposits paid, are to be considered as shareholders, whether they shall or shall not have signed the Parliamentary contract. The meeting so called to have power to adjourn, and to elect a committee of shareholders to wind up the affairs of the company. After the payment of debts and expenses, the surplus to be divided rateably among the parties entitled. After the appointment of the committee, the books, &c. to be delivered up; and on refusal, or for falsifying such books, the party to be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. It is proposed by the remaining clauses (the last being a mere formal matter), that a fiat in bankruptcy may be obtained under the Act for winding up the affairs of joint-stock companies unable to meet their pecuniary engagements, and the affairs of companies brought to a final close.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

REGISTRATION OF DEEDS BILL.

MONDAY, May 11.—Lord CAMPBELL gave notice that he should postpone the General Registration of Deeds Bill until after the Corn Bill was disposed of by their lordships. He trusted it would then receive the support of those noble lords who were opposed to the Corn Bill, for it would compensate them for any supposed loss they were apprehensive of sustaining from the effects of that measure.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said the second reading of the Charitable Trusts Bill had been fixed for Thursday next, but as he understood that many right reverend prelates would be unable to attend on that day, and as he would be very unwilling to proceed with the bill in their absence, he begged to postpone the motion for the second reading until Monday next.

BETTER PROTECTION OF PUBLIC OFFICERS.

TUESDAY, May 12.—Lord BROUGHAM laid on the table a bill for the better protection of magistrates, bailiffs, constables, officers of the army and navy, and other public officers, acting under the authority of Acts of Parliament, from legal proceedings which might be instituted against them. The bill was read a first time, and ordered to be printed.

OATHS AND PENALTIES.

LORD CAMPBELL complained that the bill before their lordships on the subject of penalties was not accompanied by another in reference to oaths. The noble lord said that the subject of oaths and civil disabilities had been discussed in that house two years ago, and that two bills having reference to the two subjects which he had mentioned ought to have been introduced at the same time. The question of oaths was, in fact, more pressing than that of penalties; and he hoped that at all events a bill would be introduced, and before they went into committee upon the other bill on Friday. The LORD CHANCELLOR said he should certainly propose to go into committee with the bill upon the table on Friday; and he would not bring in the other bill to which his noble and learned friend had referred, until that one had gone through committee. He repeated the offer, however, which he had before made to his noble and learned friend, namely, that if he himself would bring in a bill to-morrow, he would hand over the whole matter to him. LORD CAMPBELL thought that the house and the public were not well used in both parts of the measure not being introduced at the same time. How much that would weigh in his mind hereafter remained to be considered.

ROYAL ASSENT.

THURSDAY, May 14.—The Royal assent was given by commission to the following bills:—the Exchequer Bills (18,380,000*l.*) Bill, the Indemnity Bill, the Insolvent Debtors' Act Continuance Bill, the Great Western Railway Amendment Bill, and several private bills. The Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Buccleugh, and the Earl of Haddington.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE newspapers are again fiercely attacking the clerical Magistrates, their plea being, a recent instance of wrong judgment or injustice on the part of one of the body. Putting aside the question whether it is desirable that clergymen should be Magistrates, it is manifestly very unfair to charge upon all the errors of one. We have seen a good deal of their mode of administering justice in the country, and we have always found them at least as capable and as gentle in the discharge of the duties of their office as laymen, generally much more so. Besides, in the rural districts, they are the best, often the only, residents competent to the post.

RATING OF LITERARY INSTITUTIONS.

WE frankly confess that writing hastily upon Reg v. Jones, we expressed an opinion as to the effect of the certificate which further reflection has induced us to think wrong. We then said (supra, 70), that the certificate, if unappealed against, would be conclusive of the facts found by it, viz. that the society was in accordance with the Act, and entitled to exemption. The letter of an intelligent correspondent in the following week (supra, 96), pointed out an essential difference between the cases which had been present in our mind, and a certificate of this kind, viz. that here it was an order ex parte, there, it was in the nature of a judicial inquiry in which both parties had been heard. We think that, although some of the dicta (see Mould v. Williams, 5 Q. B. 474) put the effect of the decision upon the jurisdiction to inquire—and here the barrister no doubt is to inquire; yet the true ground is, that it is res judicata—and every judicial decision implies that both sides have been, or might have been, heard. Welch v. Nash (8 East, 394), cited by our correspondent, is a clear authority that where the conditions precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction under a statute do not exist, then an order made under the statute may be impeached in a collateral proceeding; in fact, that such an order being coram non jure, is void. (See Marshalsea Case, 10 Co. Rep. 68, b.; Carratt v. Morley, 1 Q. B. 18.) Davison v. Gill (1 East, 62) may also be referred to as bearing most pertinently upon this question. An order had been made by justices under 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 19, for stopping up an old footway, and setting out a new one, but not in the form required by the statute. The statute, however, expressly enacted that orders made and unappealed against, should be binding and conclusive on all parties whatsoever, and the time for appeal had passed. The Court, however, unanimously held the order void, as not made in accordance with the powers given. "The justices have a limited power," said Lord Kenyon, "given them under the Act of Parliament, and it must appear that this order was made by virtue of that power."

This leads us to a further and an equally conclusive reason against the finality of the certificate. By the first section, the obtaining the certificate is made an essential condition, but only as one condition amongst others. The right to rate is clear; the right to exemption must therefore be clearly made out. The protection or exemption by a subsequent statute, or even proviso, is to be proved by the party claiming it (see Thibault v. Gibson, 12 M. & W. 88); and the right to exemption here is, "provided that such society shall be supported wholly or in part, &c., and shall not, and by its laws may not, &c.; and provided it obtain the certificate." These are all essential conditions to the exemption. And sec. 2 seems further to make it an essential condition that the three copies of the rules, &c. shall have been submitted to the barrister. The consequence, therefore, of Reg. v. Jones, and the errors in the form of the certificate, is, that probably there is scarcely a society which could maintain its claim to exemption.

With reference to the objection as to the misrecital of the statute (supra, 95), we regret that a case was not granted for the opinion of the Queen's Bench. No doubt, Rex v. Biers (1 Ad. & El. 327) is a conclusive authority that such description would be bad in an indictment. There judgment was arrested because the offence was alleged to have been committed against a statute passed "in the second and third years of the reign of his present Majesty," although it was so described in a statute which amended it. In Gibbs v. Pike (8 M. & W. 223), a similar misdescription in a declaration was held bad upon special demurrer. (See also Beck v. Beverley, 12 M. & W. 845.)

In Ramsay v. Tuffnell (2 Bing. 255), judgment was also arrested in an action against a sheriff for extortion, the statute being described as passed in a session begun in the 29th of Elizabeth, instead of the 28th. The authorities being thus strong, we are inclined to think the objection good, if the description of the statute formed a necessary part of the certificate. There are authorities, indeed, to shew that, if recited unnecessarily, it must be recited correctly (see Partridge v. Strange, Plowd. 84, cited 1 A. & E. 331); and in Boyce v. Whittaker (Doug. 97), Lord Mansfield said, that if a recital of a statute was introduced unnecessarily, he would "hold the party to half a letter." Still, the point is one open to discussion. It is possible a distinction might be drawn between indictments or actions upon statutes (most of the decisions have been in cases of that kind), and a certificate of this nature; and as the objection manifestly did not touch the merits, we think that, if pressed by the counsel at the sessions, the magistrates should have reserved the point. Their refusal to do so, coupled with the other objections to certificates granted, which will so much mar the benefit intended to be conferred by the statute, renders the interference of the Legislature most desirable. Much as we dislike, on principle, ex post facto legislation, yet, if gamblers have been saved by such interference from the consequences of breaches of the known law, and if an express statute was passed to deprive parties of rights to costs which they had gained, by an oversight of the Legislature (see 4 & 5 Vict. c. 28; Roadknight v. Green, 1 D. N. S. 65, 910), surely the societies instituted for the purposes of literature, science, and the fine arts, deserve protection from the consequences of the errors of the Government officer, the appointed expounder of the statute? Let Mr. Wyse, Mr. Hawes, or some other active friend to education and literature, introduce an amended bill with retrospective operation immediately, and the Government must give it their support. E. W.

TREATMENT OF FRAUDULENT DEBTORS.

It will be seen from the subjoined official circular and inclosure, issued from the Home-office, that prison discipline and prison diet will henceforth be rigidly enforced with respect to debtors committed for bona fide frauds against creditors:—

"Sir—Secretary Sir James Graham directs me to inclose you a copy of certain regulations which have been drawn up by his directions, for the treatment of debtors committed pursuant to the first section of the Act of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127.

"Debtors committed under the special provisions of this Act are not imprisoned for safe custody alone, but as a punishment, either for fraudulent or dishonest conduct, or for the wilful disobedience of a law. Sir James Graham, therefore, is of opinion that a different mode of treatment to that subjected to the case of those imprisoned for debt sanctioned in the Act, and he requests that you will under ordinary proceedings, which he has approved, for the sanction and adoption of the authorities of the borough, who are empowered by law, the approval of the Secretary of State, to frame rules for the government of the common gaols within their jurisdiction to which such debtors may be committed. (Signed) "H. MANNERS SUTTON.

"To the Mayor," &c.

(COPY.—INCLOSURE.)

Rules for the classification and treatment of debtors committed under the 8 & 9 Vict. cap. 127, and also for the classification and treatment of debtors committed by commissioners of bankruptcy, for frauds under the bankrupt laws, and debtors committed for frauds by Insolvent Debtors' Courts.

1. They shall, as far as the construction of the prison will allow thereof, be separated from other debtors, but they shall not be placed in separate confinement, or with any class of criminal prisoners.
2. They shall not be permitted to maintain themselves, but shall be restricted to the following prison diet:—

MALES.

Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.—Breakfast, one pint of oatmeal gruel, eight ounces of bread; dinner, one pint of soup, eight ounces of bread.

Sunday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.—Dinner, three ounces of cooked meat, without bone, half a pound of potatoes, six ounces of bread.

Supper same as breakfast.

FEMALES.

Monday, Wednesday, and Friday.—Breakfast, one pint of oatmeal gruel, six ounces of bread; dinner, one pint of soup, six ounces of bread.

Sunday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.—Dinner, three ounces of cooked meat, without bone, half a pound of potatoes, six ounces of bread.

Supper same as breakfast.

When under the care of the surgeon, they shall be allowed such diet as he may direct.

3. They shall not procure or receive any tobacco, wine, beer, or fermented liquor, except by order of the surgeon, on the ground of ill-health.

4. They shall be permitted to see their relations and friends only once in the course of each week, but they may see their legal advisers at all reasonable hours, and in private if required.

5. In all other respects the rules for the government of debtors in general shall be applicable to debtors committed under the 8 & 9 Vict. cap. 127.

The following directions have been issued to the Irish magistracy upon the subject of their duties in the investigation of criminal charges:—

INSTRUCTIONS—CIRCULAR.

In all cases in which information is given to a magistrate of any felony, the magistrate should in the first place ascertain, by hearing the statement of the informant, and putting such questions as may be necessary for the purpose, that the facts to which the witness is to depose are relevant to the charge. He should then administer an oath or affirmation (as the case may be) to the witness, and proceed to commit his information to writing, taking care to insert every material statement, and to take the information as nearly as possible in the words of the witness. It is to be particularly observed that the oath or affirmation should in all cases be administered before any part of the information be committed to writing, so that every statement which is to appear on record as the evidence of the witness may be given under the sanction of an oath, or that which the law accepts as equivalent to an oath. It is irregular to take down the examination of the witness in writing in the first instance, and afterwards merely to swear him to the truth of it, as if it were an affidavit. When sufficient ground has been laid by sworn informations, the magistrate will issue his warrant for the apprehension of the party accused; and when he is in custody the magistrate will proceed, without any needless delay, to institute the necessary inquiries preliminary to his full committal or discharge. For this purpose the witness, or witnesses, on whose information the warrant was issued, should be produced separately or together, according to the discretion of the magistrate, before the prisoner. Each witness should be sworn in the prisoner's presence, and the information should be read over distinctly in the hearing of both the witness and of the prisoner. The prisoner should be informed that he is at liberty to put to the witnesses any questions he may think proper; and if he avails himself of this right, the answers to his questions should be committed to writing, and added to the original information. If any additional witnesses to important facts connected with the charge come forward to swear informations, their depositions should be taken in the presence and hearing of the prisoner, who should, as before, be informed that he has a right to question the witness, and to have his answers; and any statements made in reply to such questions should be embodied in the information.

ELECTION OF CORONER FOR DEVON.—The candidates for the office of coroner of Devon, in which a vacancy had occurred by the death of the late J. Partridge, esq. were F. Leigh, esq. of Cullompton, solicitor, and R. Comins, esq. of Tiverton, solicitor; and great local excitement upon the subject prevailed. On Monday, however, this was terminated by an announcement from Mr. Leigh's committee, that Mr. Comins had resigned the contest, and therefore no polling would take place.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

The Terms follow so quickly upon the heels of one another, that we have not leisure to bring up the arrears of one before the business of another crowds upon our columns. We have endeavoured in this number to work up many of the written judgments delivered during the last term, and we hope next week to complete them; but many of those that were in type, and much other matter of present interest, are unavoidably postponed, to make way for the Court Papers, the Conveyancing Bill, &c. Of legal news, there is nothing calling for particular notice, and brevity of comment is compelled by more urgent claims.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

The Queen has been graciously pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, constituting and appointing Thomas Flower, Ellis, esq. barrister-at-law, and Thomas Bros, esq. barrister-at-law, her Majesty's commissioners for inquiring into criminal laws now in force in the Channel Islands.

The Queen has also been graciously pleased to appoint Charles Clark, esq. barrister-at-law, to be secretary to the said commission.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Rev. Augustus William Hanson to be chaplain for her Majesty's forts and settlements on the Gold Coast.

The Queen has also been pleased to appoint William Whaley Billyard, esq. to be chairman of Quarter Sessions, acting as civil and criminal judge for the colony of North Australia.

Office of Metropolitan Buildings, 6, Adelphi Terrace, Strand, April 16.

Sir James Graham, bart. has appointed Ambrose Poynter, esq. architect, of Park-street, Westminster, to be one of the official referees of Metropolitan buildings, in the room of James White Higgins, esq. resigned; and John Shaw, esq. architect and surveyor of Christ's Hospital, has also been appointed an official referee of Metropolitan buildings.

LINCOLN'S INN.—In addition to those gentlemen who were called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn on the 6th instant, the undermentioned have been called in the course of the Term which terminated May 8th, viz. Mr. Francis K. Lengthall, Mr. John Coppin, M.A., Mr. William Austin, M.A., Mr. Montague Bernard, B.C.L., and Mr. Reginald R. Walpole, M.A.

MIDDLE TEMPLE, May 9.—The undermentioned members of the Hon. Society of the Middle Temple have been called to the Bar, and they were this evening sworn in before several of the Benchers:—Mr. J. C. Jones, Mr. W. H. Doyle, Mr. E. Boscawen, Mr. G. Rosse, Mr. A. Gunning, Mr. W. H. Claridge, Mr. W. F. B. Staples, Mr. J. G. B. Hudson, Mr. D. M. Logie, Mr. J. H. L. Wingfield, Mr. H. W. Morris, Mr. D. R. Blaine, Mr. F. Nalder, M. J. Bower, and Mr. E. K. Rodwell.

John Soane, esq. of Waltham Abbey, qualified at the last sessions at Chelmsford as a magistrate for the county of Essex.

NEW RULES FOR THE EXAMINATION OF PERSONS APPLYING TO BE ADMITTED AS ATTORNEYS.

Easter Term, 1846.

Whereas by section 15 of the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 93, it was enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the judges of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, or any one or more of them, and he and they is and are hereby authorized and required before he or they shall issue a fiat for the admission of any person to be an attorney, to examine and inquire by such ways and means as he or they shall think proper touching the articles and services and the fitness and capacity of such person to act as an attorney; and if the judge or judges as aforesaid shall be satisfied by such examination, or by the certificate of such examiners as hereinafter mentioned that such person is duly qualified and fit and competent to act as an attorney; then and not otherwise the said judge or judges shall and he and they is and are hereby authorized and required to administer or cause to be administered to such person the oath hereinafter directed to be taken by attorneys and solicitors in addition to the oath of allegiance, and after such oaths taken to cause him to be admitted an attorney of such Court;" and by section 16 of the said statute it was enacted, "For the purpose of facilitating the inquiry touching the due service under articles as aforesaid, and the fitness and capacity of any person to act as an attorney: That it shall be lawful for the judge of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer (or any eight or more of them, of whom the chiefs of the said Courts shall be three), from time to time to nominate and appoint such persons to be examiners for the purposes aforesaid, and to make such rules and regulations for conducting such examination as such judges shall think proper." And whereas, in order to carry the said statute more fully into effect, it is expedient annually to appoint examiners, subject to the control of the judges in manner hereinafter mentioned: It is ordered that the several Masters for the time being for the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer respectively, together with sixteen attorneys or solicitors, be appointed by a rule of Court in every year to be examiners for one year, any five of whom (one whereof to be one of the said Masters) shall be competent to conduct the examination, and that subject to such appeal as hereinafter mentioned, no person who shall not have been previously admitted a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery shall be admitted to be sworn an attorney of any of the Courts, except on production of a certificate signed by the major part of such examiners actually present at and conducting his examination, testifying his fitness and capacity to act as an attorney; such certificate to be in force only to the end of the Term next but one following the date thereof, unless such time shall be specially extended by the order of a judge.

2. It is further ordered that the examiners so to be appointed shall conduct the said examinations under regulations to be first submitted to and approved by the judges.

3. And it is further ordered, that in case any person shall be dissatisfied with the refusal of the examiners to grant such certificate, he shall be at liberty to apply for admission by petition in writing to the judges, to be delivered to the clerk of the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, upon which no fee or gratuity shall be received; which application shall be heard in Serjeants' Inn Hall by not less than three of the judges.

4. And whereas the hall or building of the Incorporated Law Society of the United Kingdom, in Chancery-lane, will be a fit and convenient place for holding the said examinations, and the said society have consented to allow the same to be used for that purpose; it is further ordered, that until further order such examinations be there held on such days as the said examiners, or any five of them, shall appoint; and that any person not previously admitted an attorney of any of the three courts, and desirous of being admitted, shall, in addition to the notices already required, give a Term's notice to the said examiners of his intention to apply for examination, by leaving the same with the secretary of the said society, at their said hall; which notice shall also state his place or places of residence or service for the last preceding twelve months; and in case of application to be admitted, on a refusal of the certificate, shall give ten days' notice, to be served in like manner, of the day appointed for hearing the same.

5. And it is further ordered, that six days at the least before the commencement of the Term next preceding that in which any person not before admitted shall propose to be admitted an attorney of either of the courts, he shall cause to be delivered at the Master's office, instead of affixing the same on the walls of the courts, the usual written notices, which shall state, in addition to the particulars now required, his place or places of abode or service for the last preceding twelve months; and the Master shall reduce all such notices as in this rule first mentioned into an alphabetical table or tables, under convenient heads, and affix the same, on the first day of Term, in some conspicuous place within or near to and on the outside of each court. And such person shall also, for the space of one full Term, previous to the Term in which he shall apply to be admitted, enter or cause to be entered, in two books kept for that purpose, one at the chambers of the Lord Chief Justice of the court in which he applies to be admitted, and the other at the chambers of the other judges of such court, his name and place or places of abode, and also the name or names and place or places of abode of the attorney or attorneys to whom he shall have been articulated. And it is further ordered, that a printed copy of the list of admissions be stuck up in the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer offices, and at the judges' hall or chambers of each court in Roll's Garden.

REGULATIONS.

Approved by the Judges in Easter Term, 1846,
For the examination of persons applied to be admitted as attorneys of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer, pursuant to the rule of Court made in Easter Term, 1846.

Whereas by a rule of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, made in Easter Term, 1846, it was ordered, that the several Masters for the time being of the said courts respectively, together with sixteen attorneys or solicitors, should be appointed by a rule of Court in every year to be examiners for one year, of persons applying to be admitted attorneys of the said courts, five of whom (one whereof to be one of the said Masters) should be competent to conduct the examination, and that subject to such appeal as thereinafter mentioned, no person not previously admitted a solicitor of the High Court of Chancery should be admitted to be sworn an attorney of any of the said courts, except on production of a certificate signed by the major part of such examiners actually present at and conducting his examination, testifying his fitness and capacity to act as an attorney; such certificate to be in force only to the end of the Term next but one following the date thereof, unless such time should be specially extended by order of a judge. And it was further ordered, that the examiners so to be appointed should conduct the said examinations under regulations to be first submitted to and approved by the judges; and that until further order such examinations should be held in the hall or building of the Incorporated Law Society of the United Kingdom, in Chancery-lane, on such days as the said examiners, or any five of them, should appoint; and that any person not previously admitted of any of the three courts, and desirous of being admitted, should give a Term's notice of his intention to apply for examination, by leaving the same with the secretary of the said society at their said hall.

In pursuance of the said rule, the following regulations for conducting the said examinations have been submitted to and approved by the judges of the said courts.

1. That every person applying to be admitted an attorney of any of the said courts, pursuant to the said rules, shall within the first seven days of the Term in which he is desirous of being admitted, leave or cause to be left with the secretary of the said Incorporated Law Society, his articles of clerkship duly stamped, and also any assignment which may have been made thereof, together with answers to the several questions hereunto annexed, signed by the applicant and also by the attorney or attorneys with whom he shall have served his clerkship.

2. That in case the applicant shall show sufficient cause, to the satisfaction of the examiners, why the first regulation cannot be fully complied with, it shall be in the power of the said examiners, upon sufficient proof being given of the same, to dispense with any part of the first regulation that they may think fit and reasonable.

3. That every person applying for admission shall also, if required, sign or leave, or cause to be left with the secretary of the said society, answers in writing to such other written or printed questions as shall be proposed by the said examiners touching his said service and conduct, and shall also, if required, attend the said examiners personally for the purpose of giving further explanations touching the same; and shall also, if required, procure the attorney or attorneys with whom he shall have served his clerkship as aforesaid, to answer either personally or in writing any questions touching such service or conduct, or shall make proof to the satisfaction of the said examiners of his inability to procure the same.

4. That every person so applying shall also attend the said examiners at the hall of the said society, at such time or times as shall be appointed for that purpose, pursuant to the said rule as the said examiners shall appoint, and shall answer such questions as the said examiners shall then and there put to him by written or printed papers, touching the fitness and capacity to act as an attorney.

5. That upon compliance with the aforesaid regulations, and if the major part of the said examiners actually present at and conducting the said examination (one of them being one of the said masters), shall be satisfied as to the fitness and capacity of the person so applying to act as an attorney, the said examiners so present, or the major part of them, shall certify the same under their hands in the following form, viz. :—

In pursuance of the rules made in Easter Term, 1846, of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, we being the major part of the examiners actually present at and conducting the examination of A B of &c. Do hereby certify that we have examined the said A B, as required by the said rules, and we do testify that the said A B is fit and capable to act as an attorney of the said courts.

Questions as to due service of articles of clerkship, to be answered by the clerk.

1. What was your age on the date of your articles?
2. Have you served the whole term of your articles at the office where the attorney or attorneys to whom you were articulated or assigned, carried on his or their business? and if not state the reason.
3. Have you at any time during the term of your articles been absent without permission of the attorney or attorneys to whom you were articulated or assigned? and if so, state the length and occasions of such absence.

4. Have you during the period of your articles, been engaged or concerned in any profession, business, or employment, other than your professional employment as clerk to the attorney or attorneys to whom you were articulated or assigned?

5. Have you since the expiration of your articles been engaged or concerned, and for how long time, in any and what profession, trade, business or employment, other than the profession of an attorney or solicitor?

To be answered by the attorney, agent, barrister, or special pleader with whom you may have served any part of your time under your articles.

1. Has A B served the whole term of his articles at the office where you carry on your business? and if not, state the reason.

2. Has the said A B at any time during the term of his articles been absent without your permission and if so, state the length and occasions of such absence.

3. Has the said A B during the period of his articles been engaged or concerned in any profession, business, or employment, other than his professional employment as your articulated clerk?

4. Has the said A B, during the whole term of his clerkship, with the exceptions above mentioned, been faithfully and diligently employed in your professional business of an attorney or solicitor?

5. Has the said A B, since the expiration of his articles, been engaged or concerned, and for how long time, in any and what profession, trade, business, or employment, other than the profession of an attorney or solicitor?

And I do hereby certify, that the said A B hath duly and faithfully served under his articles of clerkship (or assignment, as the case may be), bearing date, &c. for the term therein expressed, and that he is a fit and proper person to be admitted as an attorney.

BANKRUPTCY LAW IN RUSSIA.—The Emperor of Russia has published a ukase, bearing date 20th of April, bearing very severely on fraudulent bankrupts, who are to be exiled for life to Siberia.

IRISH LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

The following order has been issued in reference to the relief of the poor upon estates under the Court of Chancery :—

5th May, 1846.—Whereas the several receivers and guardians of the estates and properties of the several persons who are minors of this hon. Court are not at liberty to subscribe or contribute any portion of the rents of such estates or properties towards the relief of the poor now suffering thereon, or in the adjacent districts, from want of food, by reason of the failure of the potato crop, or from other sufficient causes, without a special order in each matter, upon petition duly obtained; and it is expedient that such receivers and guardians should be at liberty so to contribute, without incurring the expense and delay necessarily consequent upon a special application to the Court in each case for such purpose. It is this day ordered by the Right Hon. the Lord High Chancellor of Ireland, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. the Master of the Rolls, that from and after the date of this order, and until the 1st day of October next, in every case in which application has been, or shall be made, by or on behalf of any committee duly appointed pursuant to the provisions of the Act of Parliament in this behalf, to any such guardian or receiver as aforesaid, for a contribution or subscription in aid of their funds, every such guardian and receiver shall and do forthwith submit such application by a statement, verified by his affidavit to the Master in the matter of such minor or minors, who shall thereupon, without delay, by a certificate to be signed by him, authorize such receiver or guardian to contribute such sum as he shall deem expedient; having regard in each case to the nature, circumstances, and net annual income of such estate or property over and above all annual outgoings whatsoever; such sum, however, not in any case to exceed the sum of seven pounds sterling per cent. of such net annual income; and such receiver or guardian shall thereupon pay or advance such sum as said Master shall so certify, to the person or persons duly authorized by such committee to receive same. Provided, however, that in every case in which the said so certified by the Master shall exceed the sum of 100l. sterling, such certificate shall not be acted on until confirmed by an order of the Court upon petition. And it is further ordered that every such receiver or guardian be at liberty to take the credit in his account for such sum or sums as he shall pay or advance, in pursuance of such certificate or order, together with a sum of 3l. sterling for the costs of obtaining such certificate, in case same shall not require confirmation, or for such sum as shall be specified in the order confirming same.

EDWARD B. SUGDEN, C.

T. B. C. SMITH, M.R.

Dated 5th May, 1846.

The Lord Chancellor doth hereby order that the provisions of the general order of the Court of Chancery, bearing date this day, be extended to all matters of idiotcy and lunacy.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

ACCIDENTS ON RAILWAYS.—It appears from a report of the officers of the Board of Trade, that the number of accidents attended with personal injury or danger to the public, arising from causes beyond the control of passengers, were, during 1844, 10 killed and 74 injured; owing to their own negligence or misconduct, 7 killed, 9 injured. Personal injury to servants of the companies, not involving danger to the public, 33 killed and 28 injured. To others, not servants, but trespassers, 34 killed and 17 injured. In 1845, accidents to passengers, over which they themselves could exercise no control, 10 killed and 101 injured; owing to their own negligence or misconduct, 9 killed and 110 injured. Injuries to servants of the companies, not involving danger to the public, 36 killed and 24 injured. Others, not servants of the companies, but trespassers, 45 killed and 2 injured. During a period of 4 years and 11 months, 121 accidents occurred which were beyond the control of the passengers; 66 persons were killed; 324 were injured, but not fatally; total killed and injured, 390. The number of persons carried was 12,491,192. The average, therefore, of persons killed to the total number carried is 1 in 1,825,664; and of persons not fatally injured, 1 in 371,896; and of the total number injured, 1 in 308,959. The proportion which the number of passengers killed bears to the total number carried is:—in 1840, 1 in 274,085; in 1841, 1 in 852,073; 1842, 1 in 4,271,689; 1843, 1 in 8,524,175; 1844, 1 in 3,036,305; and in the first six months of 1845, 1 in 8,360,275.

INCREASE AND DIMINUTION OF SALARIES, &c. (Public Offices).—The usual abstract of accounts of every increase and diminution which has taken place during the year 1845, in the number of persons and amount of salaries paid in public offices or departments, pursuant to Act 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 24. INCREASE.—2,035 additional persons employed in the Post-office—salaries 56,674l.; 102 persons in the Customs—salaries, 17,315l.; and 130 persons in other public offices, at an expense of 20,708l.; total, 2,267 additional persons employed, at salaries amounting, in the aggregate, to 94,489l. besides emoluments, 208l. There is also an increase upon retired allowances of 23,717l.; and in the expenses connected with certain departments, chiefly Customs, Excise and Foreign-office, of 11,464l. making the total of the items of increase for the year 129,879l. DIMINUTION.—On the other hand there has been a diminution in the number of persons employed in the Excise of 396; in Chelsea Hospital, 49; in the office of the Paymaster-General, 11; in the navy and victualling yards abroad, 4; in the Audit-office, 2; and the convict establishment, 1; total, 463. The expense saved was, in the Excise for salaries, 42,629l.; in Chelsea Hospital, for salaries, 5,084l.; in the Paymaster-General's Office, for salaries, 3,139l., and for expenses, 716l. Altogether the diminution was, for salaries, 52,970l.; for emoluments, 3,284l.; expenses, 1,620l.; and retired allowances, 9,879l.; making a total saving of 67,754l., which, deducted from the increase as stated above, leaves a net increase of annual charge to the amount of 62,124l.

CORN.—Return of the number of the importers of the foreign grain now in bond in Great Britain and Ireland, together with the quantities imported by each individual. The total number of importers returned is 617; the quantities in bond in the United Kingdom on 12th Feb. last being,—Wheat, 1,117,071 qrs.; barley, 8,912 qrs.; oats, 88,327 qrs.; peas, 4,805 qrs.; beans, 9,455 qrs.; Indian corn, 42,348 qrs.; wheaten flour, 703,961 cwt.; and oatmeal, 668 cwt.

FLAX, IRELAND.—Copies of such parts of the fifth annual report of the society for the promotion and improvement of the growth of flax in Ireland, as relate to the quantity of the flax crop in the season of 1845, the extension of the cultivation of flax, and the present condition of the linen trade in Ireland. Our space will not permit of our noticing this document at the length it deserves. It appears that the efforts of the society have met with decided success. The crop of 1845 they consider to have been about one-fourth, or 28,000 tons, less than that of 1844. But the scarcity of the produce has so far enhanced the value (by an average of 12l. per ton), that the amount realized by the grower is expected to be very nearly the same as last year.

DISEASE (IRELAND).—Abstracts of the most serious representations made by the several medical superintendents of public institutions (fever hospitals, infirmaries, dispensaries, &c.) in the provinces of Ulster, Munster, Leinster, and Connaught. These statements, from almost every part of Ireland, display a melancholy uniformity. Disease originated or increased by the scarcity or unsoundness of food is, in the majority of instances, actually present to an extent not to be met by the resources of the locality. In other cases, with all the causes present, a similar state of things is seriously and immediately apprehended.

WHALE FISHERY.—A return, obtained on the application of Mr. Hastie (Paisley), was printed on Saturday, giving an account of ships employed in the whale fishery, and of the oil imported, for three years ending in 1845. There were 25 ships cleared out for the Greenland whale fishery in 1843, 36 in 1844, and 45 in 1845. The tonnage was respectively 6,972, 10,509, and 11,586. For the southern whale fishery 9 ships cleared out from the port of London in 1843, and 13 in 1844 (none in 1845), the tonnage of which was 3,096 and 4,004. The oil imported in 1843 from Greenland and Davis's Straits Fishery was 1,982 tons, and from the southern fishery 2,492 tons; in 1844, 2,321 and 2,262 tons; and in 1845, 4,342 and 1,534 tons from each of the two fisheries.

WINDOW DUTY.—A return of the amount of duty for each year since 1838: and also of the twelve towns paying the largest amount. (In continuation of No. 133, sess. 1845.) The annual amount of the revenue from this source was, in the year ending April 5, 1840, 1,486,023l.; 1841, 1,774,638l.; 1842, 1,775,151l.; 1843, 1,776,789l.; 1844, 1,786,514l.; and, in the year ending April 5, 1845, 1,812,035l. The six towns paying the largest amount are—Liverpool, Bath, Manchester, Brighton, Bristol, and Plymouth.

PROGRESS OF RAILWAY LEGISLATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.—From a Parliamentary paper just published, entitled "List of Petitions and Private Bills in Parliament, and proceedings thereupon, Session 1846," it appears that 562 petitions for railway Bills have been presented, and that in respect of 386 of such petitions Bills have been read the first time, of which 370 have been read the second time, and 7 the third time, viz. Brighton and Chichester (Steyning Branch); Brighton, Lewes, and Hastings Deviations, &c.; Direct London and Portsmouth; Eastern Union and Hadleigh Junction; London and York; Sheffield and Lincolnshire Junction; and South-Eastern, Tunbridge-wells to Rye. 14 Bills have been withdrawn, and proceedings appear to be suspended as to 43 Bills, and there are 130 petitions for Bills upon which no reports have been made.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

General Meeting, May 6, 1846.

Mr. SEJNT. D'O'LYLY IN THE CHAIR.

The minutes of the last meeting (the 22nd of April last), were read and confirmed. The following members were ballotted for and elected: The Marquis of Clanricarde, K.P.; John Parker, esq. M.P.; William Cotton, esq. Bank Director; and Richard Austwick Westbrooke, esq. Solicitor.

The report of the Committee on the Law of Property on the following reference: "To consider of the propriety of establishing a general Register of Deeds and Instruments affecting real property," was ordered to be received.

Notice for Wednesday, the 20th Instant. The Report of the Committee on the Law of Property on the following reference will be presented: "To consider whether it be possible and expedient to adapt the machinery of the Public Funds to the transfer of real property."

THE LAW ASSOCIATION.—On Tuesday the annual general court of the members of the Law Association, which is established to grant relief to the widows and children of attorneys and solicitors, members, dying in distressed circumstances, and for other benevolent and charitable purposes, was held at the hall of the Incorporated Law Association, Chancery-lane, to receive the report of the directors for the past year, ending May 12; Mr. G. W. Kindersley, treasurer, in the chair. Mr. T. Murray, secretary, read the report, from which it appeared that to applicants of the second class (these being widows and children of those who were not members) 99l. 10s. had been given. The receipts amounted to 1,497l. 3s. 5d. including 123l. 18s. life subscriptions, 602l. 14s. annual ditto, 595l. 15s. dividends upon stock, and 152l. 18s. 11d. a balance in hand; leaving, after paying all expenses, a balance in hand of 109l. 1s. 3d. the stock being 20,300l. in the Three per Cent. Transport was unanimously received, and ordered to be printed. The Lord High Chancellor was re-elected president, and the Vice-Chancellor of England, Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, and the Right Hon. Sir T. B. Bosanquet, vice-presidents. The other officers having been appointed, thanks were voted to the chairman, and the meeting broke up.

Peirs-at-Law, Next of Kin, &c.

[This is part of a complete list now being extracted from the LAW TIMES from the advertisements that have appeared in the newspapers during the present century. Reference, with the date and place of each advertisement, cannot be stated here without subjecting the printer to duty. But the figures refer to a corresponding entry in a book kept at the LAW TIMES OFFICE, wherein particulars are preserved, and which will be loaned to any applicant. To prevent impertinent calls, a fee of half-a-crown for each inquiry must be paid to the publisher, or if by letter, postage stamps to that amount inclosed.]

31. JAMES CASIDAY, of his NEXT OF KIN.

32. JAMES SMITH, of JAMES NASH, supposed to be an individual, born about the year 1783; in the year 1810 he was supposed to have been under the care of Thomas Jarvis, of Longford, Middlesex, and to have gone abroad, either to the East or the Indies, in or about the year 1800. The said J. Nash, or J. Nash, is a legatee under the will of RICHARD LADBROKE THOMAS, one of the daughters of John Hubbard, of Upton-cum-Chavry, in the county of Bucks, esq., and was married to CHARLES WILKINS, esq., and, after his decease, to the Rev. WILLIAM THOMAS, of Fobbing, county of Essex, clerk, but he resided for many years previous to her decease, in Sept. 1834, at 13, Grafton-street, Fitzroy-square.

33. NEXT OF KIN OF MARY BRIGIT, late of the city of Oxford, spinster, died 12th Sept. 1834.

34. HEIR or HEIRESS AT LAW OF GEORGE EATON, formerly of Shaftsbury-terrace, Piccadilly, afterwards of Bonplac, Vauxhall-road, Middlesex, gent. died 11th Sept. 1838.

47. THE THREE NIECES, DAUGHTERS OF ROBERT OULT, testatrix's brother, then residing in Ireland, and the nieces of the testatrix, GRACE EDWARDS, late of Four-place, Camden-town, Middlesex, widow, died Nov. 1818, or their representatives.

48. LEGATEES OF ROBERT OWEN OWENS, late of Carnarvon, shopkeeper, died April 1838.

To Readers and Correspondents.

We cannot insert, or notice in any way, any communication that is sent to us anonymously; but those who choose to address us in confidence will find their confidence respected. NEITHER CAN WE UNDERTAKE TO RETURN ANY MANUSCRIPTS WHATSOEVER.

HONESTAS inquires whether a charge of 8s. per skin for parchment in a bill for conveyancing, is allowable. We believe it to be customary, and certainly it is not worth objecting to. It seems to us no more than a fair remuneration for the trouble of preparing the skin.

H. M. A. (Poole).—The great length of the Charitable Trusts' Bill prevents our inserting it at full. It would occupy an entire number of the LAW TIMES, or more.

The case from the Manchester Bankruptcy Court has been already decided so often, that it is unnecessary to repeat the point. New decisions will be always acceptable.

P. R. Q.'s letter on "The Certificate Duty" is anticipated. This is the time to urge the question.

ONE OF THE BODY.—We believe that the directors of the movement are about to adopt the course suggested.

T. H. F. and others, are unavoidably postponed.

N. W.—Thanks for the hint. But we can assure our correspondent that the LAW TIMES regards only the general interests of the Profession, and not the special interest of either town or country. The Bill was approved on its own merits exclusively.

E. G. (St. Albans).—The letter relates to the private and not the public conduct of an attorney, and is, therefore, inadmissible.

H. F. (Birkenhead).—We are obliged by the correction, but it is scarcely worth a special notice.

R. D. N.—The enclosed letter is very improper, but the writer's name is not given, so that exposure would not follow its publication.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The volumes of the LAW TIMES, neatly, strongly, and uniformly bound, for 5s. 6d. each, with the name and address of the owner on the cover, 1s. extra, if sent to the office. If the numbers for binding be transmitted by the post, they must be tied in a parcel open at the ends, and contain some distinguishing mark by which it may be recognised, of which the publisher should be advised by letter and directed how he shall return the bound volume. Advantage may be taken of the same parcel to enclose other books for binding.

SCALE OF CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Under 50 Words..... £0 5 0

For every additional Ten Words. 0 0 6

Advertisements from the Country should be accompanied with an order upon the Agent in Town, or a Post-office order (payable at 100 Strand) for the amount.

N. B.—For Scale for Estate Advertisements, see JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

NOTICE.

The LAW DIGEST being completed, the last and other volumes of the LAW TIMES may now be transmitted for binding, as usual. Charge, 5s. 6d. per volume. The numbers may be sent by post, taking care to leave the ends open.

The numbers comprising the first volume of the VOLUMAR REPORTS of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases may also be transmitted for binding in like manner.

NOTICE.

The subscription for the current half-year is now due, and subscribers desirous of availing themselves of the great reduction allowed for pre-payment, should forward the same in the course of the ensuing week. The prepaid subscription is 11. 5s. for the half-year, and 21. 7s. for the year, being a reduction respectively of 25 and 30 per cent.

Post-office Orders must be made payable to Mr. JOHN CROCKFORD, Publisher of the Law Times.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1846.

CONVEYANCING.

An early copy of Lord BROUGHAM's Bill, intitled "An Act to facilitate the Conveyance of Property," is now before us.

We had hoped to present it entire to our readers, but its great length forbids. It extends to no less than forty-seven closely-printed folio pages, and would occupy a whole number of the LAW TIMES. We must, therefore, be content with a copy of the clauses of the Bill, and the table of forms contained in the Schedule, with the instructions for their employment. From these the reader will be enabled to understand the scope of this sweeping measure; but for the short forms themselves, set, as they are, by the side of the present long forms for which they are to be substituted, reference must be made to the Bill itself. Should it become law, it must then appear among the New Statutes; but to occupy some fifteen or sixteen pages with it now would be an encroachment upon columns that at this season have too many other more urgent claims, from law decided and enacted, to dedicate much space to laws projected.

The clauses of the Bill are as follow:—

Sec. 1. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 119; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 124. Where the words of column I. of the schedule are employed the instrument to have same effect as if words in column II. were inserted.—Whereas an Act was passed in the ninth year of the reign of her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled An Act to facilitate the Conveyance of Real Property: and whereas another Act was passed in the same year, intituled An Act to facilitate the granting of certain Leases: And whereas it is expedient further to facilitate the conveyance of property: Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that when and so often as any deed, will, or instrument in writing expressed to be made in pursuance of this Act, or referring thereto, shall contain any of the forms of words in column I. of the schedule hereto annexed, distinguished by any number prefixed thereto, such deed, will, or instrument in writing shall, whether the same number be inserted therein or not, be taken to have the same effect and be construed as if there had been inserted therein the form of words contained in column II. of the said schedule, and distinguished by the same number as is prefixed to the form of words so employed; and the like provisions shall apply to the said forms as altered by virtue of the directions contained in the schedule hereto.

2. Remuneration for instruments not to be by length only.—That in taxing any bill for preparing any deed, will, or instrument in writing expressed to be made in pursuance of this Act, or referring thereto, it shall be lawful for the taxing officer, and he is hereby required, in estimating the proper sum to be charged for such transaction, to consider, not only the length of such deed, will, or instrument in writing, but also the skill and labour employed and responsibility incurred in the preparation thereof.

3. Unnecessary expense occasioned by not using this Act may be disallowed.—That if the taxing officer, after this Act shall have come into operation, shall be of opinion that the expense attending the preparation of any deed, will, or instrument in writing referred to him for taxation has been unnecessarily increased by not employing the forms contained in the first column of the schedule hereto, or any of them, then such taxing officer may in his discretion disallow so much of the charge for such deed, will, or instrument in writing as has been thus unnecessarily incurred.

4. Power to make orders as to professional remuneration.—That it shall be lawful for the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain and of Ireland respectively, or the lords commissioners or keepers of the great seal respectively, with the advice and assistance of the Master of the Rolls of England or Ireland respectively, from time to time, if they shall think proper, to make such orders and provisions as they may think proper respecting the mode of professional remuneration for any deed, will, or instrument in writing expressed to be made in pursuance of this Act or referring thereto.

5. Instruments not to fail in effect from clerical errors, &c.—That no deed, will, or instrument in writing, or part of any deed, will, or instrument in writing, expressed to be made in pursuance of this Act, or referring thereto, shall fail to take effect thereunder in consequence of any error in copying the forms contained in column I. of the said schedule; and that any deed, will, or instrument in writing, or any part thereof, which shall fail to take effect under this Act, shall, nevertheless, be as valid and effectual as if this Act had not been made.

6. Schedule, &c. to be part of the Act.—That the said schedule, and the directions and forms therein contained, shall be deemed and taken to be parts of this Act.

7. This Act to extend to rectified Acts.—That the provisions herein contained shall extend and be applied to all deeds made or to be made under the said rectified Acts, or either of them.

8. Commencement of Act.—That this Act shall commence and take effect from and after the first day of October, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six.

9. Act not to extend to Scotland.—That this Act shall not extend to Scotland.

Then follows the Schedule of Forms, preceded by directions for their use, and a table, which we also extract.

DIRECTIONS AS TO THE FORMS IN THE SCHEDULE.

1. Any form contained in column I. may be altered by substituting any word, number, names, words, or numbers for any word, number, letters, words, or numbers contained therein within brackets; and when any such substitution shall be made, the corresponding form in column II. shall be taken to be altered by making a similar substitution for the same, or the corresponding word, number, letters, words, or numbers contained therein within brackets, when and so often the same shall occur therein.

2. Any form contained in column I. may be altered by omitting any word, number, letters, words, or numbers contained therein within brackets; and when any such omission shall be made, the corresponding form in column II. shall be taken to be altered by omitting the same, or the corresponding word, number, letters, words, or numbers contained therein within brackets, when and so often as the same shall occur therein.

3. The words "he," "his," "him," and "himself," used in the forms in column II. in reference to trustees and executors, shall, where occasion requires, include and be applied to females.

[The forms contained in this schedule are, with few exceptions, adapted both to deeds and wills, and though classed under the head of Settlements for the sake of arrangement, are capable of being used in other cases. The parts of deeds or wills, such as the descriptions of persons and of circumstances, which are of too variable a nature to be annexed to the forms given without interfering with their use, are omitted. The words in italics running across the page are introduced for the purpose of representing these variable parts, so far as appears necessary to render the forms given intelligible, and are not intended in any way to restrict the manner or place in which the forms are to be introduced or used.]

It will be sufficient to state that the plan pursued is precisely the same as in the Conveyancing Act of last session. The forms are contained in double columns. One on the right gives the form at present used, the other gives the short form intended to be substituted for it. But a specimen will best illustrate this arrangement, and shew the abbreviations that are projected. We take two Trustee clauses :—

Power to appoint new Trustees.

Column I.—116. If a trustee dies, refuses or becomes incapable to act, Column II.—116. If the said trustees hereby nominated, or any future trustees to be appointed as hereinafter is mentioned, or any of them, shall happen to die, or be desirous of being discharged from, or refuse or decline or become incapable to act in the trusts or powers reposed in or given as herein mentioned to such trustees or trustee, before the said trusts or powers shall be fully executed, performed, or discharged, or shall become incapable of taking effect, then and so often as the same shall happen,

Column II.—117. It shall be lawful for the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee for the time being, together with the trustee or trustees retiring from or declining to act in the aforesaid trusts, if willing to act in the exercise of this present power, but if not, then for such surviving or continuing trustees or trustee alone, or for the executors or administrators of the last surviving or continuing trustee for the time being, by any deed or deeds to be by them or him sealed and delivered in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses, to

It will be observed that this bill contains an express provision that the taxing officer may disallow any charges for deeds, &c. occasioned by not employing the short forms. This is almost equivalent to making their use compulsory, for no conveyancer will venture to incur the cost of three or four skins, with their stamps, when, perchance, the consequence will be to throw the whole loss upon the solicitor.

But the Bill does not contemplate the injustice of sweeping away so much of the remuneration of the solicitors without compensation. It introduces a new form of payment, which, if it be adopted in a liberal spirit, will, we think, be an improvement in itself, and an acceptable change to the profession. The second section provides that the remuneration for instruments shall not be regulated by length only, but also by the skill and labour employed, and responsibility incurred in the preparation thereof; and the fourth section empowers the Lord Chancellor, with the aid of the Master of the Rolls, to make orders providing for the remuneration for conveyancing.

The principle of this change must be a subject for future consideration. Our present purpose is merely to apprise our readers precisely what is in contemplation so materially affecting their interests, in hope that they will be stirred to immediate action, with a view to averting any mischief that may lurk in it, or to obtain the best conditions from the Legislature, in return for the concessions they are called upon to make.

Three questions must especially engage their thoughts, and be the objects of their earnest endeavours.

First, they should determine forthwith what form of remuneration they would prefer, should payment according to length be abolished.

Secondly, they must insist upon the repeal of the certificate duty, as but an act of bare justice, to accompany a diminution of their fees, and,

Thirdly, they must require that the law should give to conveyancing the same protection as to the practice of other branches of the law, and that none but Solicitors or Barristers be allowed to practise it.

These demands are so obviously just, that they cannot be refused, if urged with earnestness, and backed by the united power of the Profession. But again we warn our readers not to commit themselves to indiscriminate hostility to changes which we are satisfied cannot be long averted. To do so, will be to waste their strength upon a conflict that will end in their defeat, without any compensation for their loss. By timely compromise we believe that the Profession may make terms which will render impending changes at least harmless, if not actually beneficial.

Earnestly do we hope, before another week has passed, to learn that something is being done to meet the exigency of an occasion the most momentous to the Profession that has occurred since the LAW TIMES commenced its labours.

THE LAW LISTS.

It will be seen by an advertisement in another column, that the Publishers of the Law List have very properly resolved to withdraw the partial list of Parliamentary Counsel, complained of in our last. Since that notice of it, an instance has occurred that shews the unjust consequences of such a list. A friend of our own has lost a brief entirely through the attorney concluding, from his name not appearing there, that he did not practise before Parliament. Doubtless there have been other such cases. But we hope it will be now fully understood that all counsel undertake this branch of practice.

THE LAW DIGEST.

THE fifth number will be published on Wednesday, completing this useful General Index to the Law of the half-year, so that subscribers will now be enabled to send their last volume of the LAW TIMES to the binder. He should be instructed to place the Digest at the end of the volume, to which it is in the nature of an Appendix.

It will also be to be had in a wrapper, complete, for those who may desire to possess it in a distinct form.

VERULAM REPORTS.

THE first volume of the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases is now completed, and may be had bound.

The first volumes of New Magistrates' Cases, and of Cox's Criminal Cases, will be completed shortly.

Mr. SAUNDERS'S work on The Practice of Summary Convictions is in the press.

RAILWAY LITIGATION.

WE proceed to notice some of the more prominent questions that have arisen out of the recent railway liabilities.

Plaintiffs have asked what they should do to enforce their claims; defendants how they may avoid the actions that have been commenced against them. The answer to one is an answer to the other.

But first let us state, for the purpose of indignant reprobation, a fact which we have received upon authority we cannot question.

It is known that some newspapers and some newsagents have made out very heavy bills against the committees of different railways—such bills being at least fifty per cent. beyond the regular charges.

Now we have reason to believe that in some cases a nefarious bargain has been made between the creditor and his attorney, to this effect: that the creditor shall give to the attorney all his debts to collect in any manner the attorney pleases, and that for so doing the attorney is to give to his client a large share of the profits of the wholesale litigation intended to be based upon these debts!!

The consequences have been as might be anticipated from so infamous an arrangement. The plaintiff, having a direct pecuniary interest in the litigation, has encouraged the most reckless resort to it. For one debt of 100*l.* some fifty or sixty writs have been issued against so many members of the committee. To each defendant the apparently liberal offer is made, "if you will pay your share of the debt and the costs, we will drop the action against you." Each is thus made to pay, say 2*l.* towards the debt, and 3*l.* for his costs. The harvest so reaped by the plaintiff and his attorney is enormous. The plaintiff first receives 100*l.* for a debt upon which probably not one-half was justly due. Then upon this 150*l.* costs are received, 50*l.* of which goes to the plaintiff, and the other 100*l.* to the attorney!! If such be the profit upon a single debt of 100*l.* what must it be where the plaintiff and his attorney collect in this manner three or four hundred such debts?

We have heard of one case in which upwards of forty-five writs were issued for a debt of 24*l.*

There is little doubt but that the debt itself was paid three or four times over, and the costs recovered were of course nearly six-fold greater than the debt!

It is asked how this gigantic system of robbery, under the name of law, can be averted? That the Courts would set their faces against it—that they would seize upon any rule or any decision to frustrate the swindlers, there can be no doubt; and we believe that if some luckless defendant must muster courage to appeal to the judges, they will make, if they could not find, a rule for the occasion.

But there is a case that will go far to protect the oppressed, and punish the extortioners. It does not appear to be very generally known, or scarcely it would have been invoked in aid of some of the many defendants now suffering under the system of wholesale litigation we have described. It is the case of Carne v. Legh (6 B. & C. 124), and a substance is as follows.

A rule had been obtained by the defendant to stay proceedings without payment of costs, and that the plaintiffs should pay the costs of the application. The rule was obtained upon an affidavit that the plaintiff had commenced separate actions against the defendant and two other persons in the same demand, for which they were jointly liable; and that the debt and costs in one of the other actions had been paid. The plaintiff's affidavit stated that the actions were commenced to recover a debt due to the plaintiff from the Wheal Concord Mining Company; that they believed that the several defendants were partners in the concern, but they refused to admit that fact.

Per Curiam.—This being a joint debt, the plaintiffs were at liberty to sue all the debtors together, or any one separately, leaving him to plead in abatement; but they had no right to sue all the parties separately for one and the same demand. The rule must be made absolute.

Our readers are already aware, that in the case of many actions brought for the same debt, it has been suggested that the plea of lis pendens would be a bar in all but that first commenced; and this plea is now waiting for argument in the Common Pleas. But the opinions of the Profession are much divided as to its validity, and we are inclined to think that it will not be allowed. There can, however, be no harm in pleading it; for even if the decision be against it, the judgment is only that of respondent ouster.

But the case above cited suggests a different course. Where more than one writ has been issued for the same debt, the defendants should appoint one of their number to pay the debt and costs in his action, and immediately apply to the Court to stay proceedings in all the other actions. This would be ordered, according to the above case, without payment of costs, thus depriving the plaintiff and his attorney of their contemplated plunder. And we have little doubt that, in such a case, the Court would go further, and compel the plaintiff to discontinue, and pay the costs of all the other actions. At least the attempt should be made.

If the plaintiff's demand be not a fair one, and it is necessary to contest the claim, instead of paying, his position will not be improved. One action should be selected for speedy trial, and the rest might be delayed with ease; probably the Court would order a stay of proceedings in the others until the one was tried. At all events it is physically impossible that all could be tried at the same moment; and the trial of the one, whatever its result, would determine the rest. Should the plaintiff succeed, his judgment is a bar to the other actions, and the Court would treat it as a payment. Should he fail, he could not hope for a verdict in the others. Thus, if the defendants in these multifarious suits would act together, and not be frightened into settling apart from one another, it is almost impossible that the conspiracy to plunder them by multiplicity of actions can result in other than a serious loss to the speculators.

A more ingenious plan has been adopted by the attorneys for one of the most notorious of the way litigants, who is said to have upwards of a thousand actions now pending, besides some hundreds that have been settled. Instead of bringing a number of actions simultaneously, they have now issued a writ for the whole debt claimed (usually about double what is due) against one member of the committee. He is prevailed upon to settle by paying a small portion of it and the costs, and receives a guarantee not to proceed further against m, except for sake of conformity. Another writ is en issued against another member of the committee r the balance; and so on, in like manner, until when me fifty or sixty writs having been thus issued, e claim is recovered by the plaintiff, and the attor- y has received the full costs on so many actions.

But even this ingenious scheme of plunder may s defeated by the same means as are above de- scribed. The various actions are still pending, al- ough each defendant has obtained a guarantee at it shall not proceed as against him. The plea lis pendens, if good, may be put in by the new efendant; or he may pay the debt, and perhaps ould be relieved from the costs, on satisfying the ourt that the plaintiff had already received costs om the other parties. Or, upon judgment ob- tained, or payment of the debt and costs by one, it is not unlikely that the Courts would compel the rmal discontinuance of the actions against the hers, and payment of the costs by the plaintiff, ven although he had already received costs from hem; for the Courts lean strongly against multi- plicity of suits, and would certainly strain a point o prevent and punish such a perversion of the law o the purposes of oppression and plunder, as now is aily practised; to the disgrace and dishonour of he Profession.

And if any such case can be clearly proved, ould it not be as well to make application to the ourt to strike from the rolls the attorney who has o acted? It would, at least, give a rebuke, and e very publicity would be a punishment.

Other questions arising out of this fertile theme ust be deferred for future consideration.

THE MANORIAL RIGHTS AND PROPERTY OF MANCHESTER.—We congratulate the community on the formal completion of the purchase of the rights and properties of the manor of Manchester, by the corporation, as trustees for the inhabitants of the town. The conveyances of the manorial rights, and the land and properties incident thereto, to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of Manchester, were executed on Tuesday last at Derby, by Sir Oswald Mosley, late the lord of the manor, in the presence of the town clerk. On Wednesday this fact was communicated by the mayor to the council, at their quarterly meeting, and the common seal of the corporation was ordered to be affixed to the conveyance, and to the mortgage of the property and assignment of the borough-rate, for securing the payment to Sir Oswald Mosley of 195,000l. the unpaid residue of the purchase-money. In referring to this subject in council, Mr. Alderman Kay spoke in justly high terms of commendation of the liberal and handsome conduct of Sir Oswald Mosley, throughout a protracted negotiation of fourteen months.—Manchester Guardian.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

COMBE V. CORPORATION OF LONDON.
Tolls—Production of accounts and papers.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, directing the production of various accounts, charters, and papers belonging to the corporation of the city of London, which were mentioned or referred to in the schedule to their answer. The facts of the case, which is important, as bearing upon the extent to which the production of documents of title may be compelled to be discovered, are these:—In October, 1835, the mayor and commonalty and citizens of London, John Henry Liguorish, and other persons describing themselves as members and rulers of the Fellowship or brotherhood of the porters of Billingsgate, in the said city, and William Rushton and John Eyras, describing themselves as members, or shifters, or paymasters of the said Fellowship, filed their bill in this Court against the present plaintiffs, who were partners and brewers in the Savoy, in St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, Westminster, which alleged that the mayor, commonalty, and citizens of London were in possession of divers royal charters, conferring on them great powers and privileges, and that they possess many valuable rights by prescription, which had been confirmed by Charter and Acts of Parliament, and contained the following statements:—"That the portage and carriage of all coals, corn and grain, and of all salt, and all kinds of apples, pears, plums, and of onions, and of roots to be eaten, and of all merchandizes measurable, arriving or brought into the city of London, upon or by the water, or by the river Thames, and going out of the said port, within the limits therein-mentioned, in any ship, boat, barge, or vessel, floating, loading, remaining, or being on what side soever of the river Thames; and upon any bank or shore of the same river, which shall happen there to remain and be delivered, or landed or carried outwards, or from the city, from the bridge of Staines to London Bridge, and from thence to a place called Yendall, now called Yantlett, towards the sea, have time out of mind belonged to, and still do belong to the said mayor, &c. or their grantees, and always have been, and now are exercised and used by certain porters, freemen of the said city, called corn and salt porters, &c.; that the said mayor, &c. or their grantees, the said corn and salt porters, have had and taken, and ought to have and take certain reasonable rates, or their wages payable in that behalf; that the said corn and salt porters were an ancient brotherhood or fraternity, under the control and regulation of the court of the lord mayor and aldermen, and afterwards, and now of the court of common council of the said city, and were regulated by an Act of the said common council passed in the 18th year of the reign of King James the First; that there is an ancient public office in the said city called the Commissioner's Office, where, and at other convenient and well-known places within the said city, the said porters have, from time immemorial, and do still attend for the purpose of receiving orders in respect of the portage of corn and grain, &c. which should arrive or be brought in any ship, boat, barge, or vessel on the river Thames, within the said port of London, and to be unloaded, or carried, or removed out of such barge or vessel; that notice ought to be given to them, &c.; that the rate of wages of such parties has been from time to time varied, and that the present rate for carriage or portage of malt in sacks from any ship, &c. to any wharf or quay above London Bridge, and not carried above thirty yards from the camp-shott, is one penny for every sack of malt, and for the carriage or portage of malt, being loose or in bulk, and so carried, one penny farthing for every sack. The bill then alleged, that the present plaintiffs had landed by hired workmen, not being members of the said Fellowship, large quantities of malt at their wharf at the Savoy, which they had consumed in the way of their trade, and prayed for a declaration that the exclusive right of portage of all corn and grain landed from any vessel within the port of London is vested in the mayor and commonalty and citizens of the city of London, and for an account of the malt so taken. To this bill the plaintiffs put in their answer, and likewise filed a cross-bill for discovery of documents. The substance of their case, as alleged by their answer and cross-bill was this:—"That the right of portage claimed by the city and their grantees had no legal origin; that such claim commenced long since the time of legal memory, and that the exercise of it, so far as it had been exercised, was of modern origin; that in the time of Henry 3 the only port in London at which corn could be landed was Queenhithe, where, under an order of the ninth year of that reign, certain dues were exacted from all foreign vessels (or vessels not belonging to the citizens of London), for the use of the King; that this order did not affect citizens of London; that by the charter of the 31st of Henry 3, Queenhithe was granted to the mayor and commonalty of the city of London, and thereupon they employed porters to carry corn and grain landed from foreign vessels; but that prior to this grant the corporation did not exercise any right of portage either at Queenhithe or elsewhere; that in the time of Edward 4, as a place of resort for vessels, was superseded by Billingsgate; that Queenhithe and Billingsgate are public markets; that the right of portage, if it exists, is incidental to the market, and does not extend beyond the public markets, or to corn not used for sale, but for private consumption; that the custom of Queenhithe and Billingsgate as to carrying corn, grain, &c. are confined to such of those articles as are brought into the city, and do not extend to such as are loaded in Westminster or any other place without the limits of the city; but that the right of portage, as far as it extends, is incidental only to the measuring of corn and grain; and that where measuring is not required, there is no right of portage. The cross-bill and bill of discovery, after charging generally that the defendants had in their power divers and ancient deeds, charters, inquisitions, or finding upon inquisitions, books, accounts, and documents relating to the history of Queenhithe and Billingsgate, and to the ports, &c. thereof, and to the times and the means at and by which the same were granted to the corporation, and the customs, usages, and rights of the said ports, and the several other matters aforesaid, whereby it would appear that the claim of portage made by the bill commenced within legal memory, and that the right thereto (if any) was confined to the limits of the city of London; the bill charged more particularly that the defendants had in their possession the several orders made by King Henry 3 touching the port Queenhithe, and a commission of inquisition held in the 28th year of the same reign, touching the customs of Queenhithe, and the findings thereon, and also a certain grant or letters patent of the 31st of the same reign, by which he granted Queenhithe to the mayor and commonalty of the city of London and their successors, and an ordinance or statute of the 3rd year of Edward 4, respecting the market of Queenhithe, and a regulation for the resort of vessels to Queenhithe and Billingsgate, in a certain way or proportion, and also an Act of common council passed in the 18th year of the reign of King James 1, for the incorporation of the said Fellowship of porters, and also a charter granted to the corporation of London by King James 1, bearing date the 20th of September, 1609: which documents the defendants ought to produce, but had refused so to do.

The defendants, the mayor and commonalty and citizens of London, by their first answer, denied the principal allegations contained in the bill of discovery, relative to the claim in question. In answer to the charges as to deeds and documents, they said that they had set forth on their information and belief the purport, and in some instances a statement verbatim, of the following documents; namely, a charter of the 30th October, in the 30th Hen. 3, which, in the body of the answer, purported to be a covenant between the Earl of Cornwall of the one part, and John de Gisors, Mayor of London, of the other part, whereby the Earl granted to the mayor and commonalty Queenhithe, with its liberties and customs, in fee farm, rendering the yearly rent therein mentioned; a charter of the 26th February, of the 31 Hen. 3, whereby the King confirmed the before-mentioned covenant; a finding on an inquisition of the 29 Edw. 1, before Elias Russell, Mayor of London, relating to the measuring, carriage, and portage of the corn brought to Queenhithe, stating the sums which the porters of corn were authorized to charge for carrying it to the bakers, brewers, and others of the city; an Act of common council of the 4 Edw. 4, relating to the landing of corn at Queenhithe and Billingsgate; a proclamation of 9 Eliz. relating to the same matter; a report of certain aldermen in the 8 Eliz. relating to the same matter; an Act of common council of the 18 Jac. 1, relating to the Fellowship porters. But, "save as aforesaid, the defendants averred that they did not know, and would not set forth as to their information or belief, whether the statements in the bill relative to the particular orders, charters, and documents mentioned in the bill were correct, or whether there were any other documents which would bear out those statements. And the defendants admitted the possession of divers royal charters and divers books belonging to the corporation, containing copies of or extracts from ancient deeds, charters, &c.; together with divers documents, evidences, and writings relating to the history of Queenhithe, as in the bill; but they denied that if the same were produced it would appear from them, or any of them, that the claim of portage made by the defendants commenced within legal memory, &c." On the contrary, these defendants say that the said royal charters and books, and the said documents, evidences and writings, contain and are the title-deeds and documents evidencing and shewing the title of these defendants and their grantees, the said Fellowship porters, to the exclusive right of portage of all corn, &c. and are intended to be used by these defendants as evidence in their behalf in the before-mentioned suit. And these defendants say, that they believe that, by such charters, &c. it does appear that they and their grantees have such exclusive rights. And these defendants say they have, in the schedule to this their answer annexed, and which they pray may be taken as part thereof, set forth a full and true list or particular of all and every the charters, &c. relating to the history of Queenhithe, &c. But these defendants submit and insist that they ought not to be compelled to produce the same, or any of them, inasmuch as these defendants say that the said complainants have no interest in the same, or any right to an inspection or production thereof." The schedule to the answer comprised the charter of the 30th of October, 30 Hen. 3; that of 26th of February, 31 Hen. 3; that of 20th of September, 6 Jac. 1; a copy of an entry in the hundred rolls deposited in the Chapter House, Westminster, of 3 Edward 1; a copy of an entry in the register of the proceedings in the Privy Council of the 29th of January, 1685, kept at Whitehall; and divers repertories and journals, and other corporation books, marked respectively with the letters A to F, inclusive.

The plaintiffs amended their bill by making more precise charges as to the possession of certain documents, accounts, &c.

JUDGMENT.

Dec. 20, 1845.—THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case came before me on motion to discharge an order of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce for the production of documents mentioned or referred to in the answer of the defendants. It is not necessary to state the facts in detail, as they are fully set forth in the report of the proceedings before the Vice-Chancellor. The corporation of London claim to be entitled by prescription to measure all corn, grain, &c. brought by the river Thames, and landed at any point between Staines Bridge and Yantlett, and to receive certain ancient fees in respect of the performance of that duty. The plaintiff had landed certain quantities of malt at their wharf in Westminster, and the corporation filed a bill against them for an account of the malt so landed, claiming the accustomed fees. The plaintiff filed a cross-bill for a discovery, denying the right of the corporation; contending that if the right existed, it was to a much more limited extent than is claimed by them; that it was comparatively of modern origin; that the fees had been from time to time varied, and that there was no ground for the prescription claimed. The defendants having put in their answer, the plaintiffs moved for the production of the documents mentioned or referred to in such answer. When the motion came on for argument, the defendants objected to the production of such of the documents as had been produced under an order of the Chief Baron, Lord Abinger. Secondly, to the metage accounts kept by the meters, who were the servants of the corporation. Thirdly, to certain books and repertories enumerated in the first schedule to the answer. And lastly, to the charter of the 6th of James 1st, and the subsequent charter of Charles. With respect to the case and opinion, it is unnecessary for me to express any opinion; they were considered by the Vice-Chancellor to be protected, and the defendants do not of course complain of that part of the judgment. The first question for consideration relates to the books of account kept for the corn meters. The plaintiff insists in his bill, among other things, that the rates of charge have varied, and they will appear after inspection of these books. The statement in the bill is, that the defendants had in their possession, custody, or power, divers accounts or books of account, in which entries have been made of all corn, &c. measured by the corn meters during a long period of years, together with, among other things, the fees and wages received for such measuring; and that if such books of accounts were produced, it would thereby appear that among other things the rate of fees and wages, and rewards claimed and received on account of the metage aforesaid, and the labour incidental thereto, have from time to time varied. The bill, therefore, charges the possession of these documents, and that they relate to the matters in dispute in this suit, namely, among other things, metage, and the fees and wages paid in respect of it. If they exhibit a variance in the amount of rates paid at different periods, it is obvious that such evidence would be material for the plaintiff at the hearing of the cause. The defendants, the corn meters, in their answer admit the possession of these books of account, and say, not positively, but to the best of their information and belief, that it will not appear from them that the fees and rates of charge have varied; and they further state that these accounts, or books of account, contain material evidence for the corporation, and that they are intended to be used in support of their claim; but the material question is, whether they do not also contain, by the alleged variance of charges, evidence for the plaintiff. This is denied only according to the information and belief of the defendants. In Bannatine v. Leader (10 Simons, 330) the Vice-Chancellor of England considered, and I think properly, that it was not sufficient, in a case of this kind, to swear merely to the defendant's belief.

It further appears from the answer, that the examination of the documents of the defendants, the corn meters, had been imperfect; for in another part they set out the names of certain places where the measurement had taken place out of the City of London, being, as they state, all that they had met with; but they add, that the accounts are numerous, and that there may be many others besides those they have mentioned. The number of the documents is not a sufficient excuse for an imperfect examination of them, as the Court would, upon a proper application, allow the necessary time to prepare a sufficient and satisfactory answer. The same objections apply to the answer of the corporation. With respect to the town clerk, it does not always very distinctly appear when he is meant to be included under the description of these defendants; but if he denies at all that the accounts will show that the payments have varied, he states that only according to information and belief, and there is sufficient also in his answer to show that if he has examined the accounts, the examination has been partial and imperfect. I am of opinion, therefore, that these accounts must be produced. The next question relates to the books and repertories mentioned in the first schedule. The defendants, the corporation, and their town clerk, say in their answer, that, save as therein mentioned, they deny that they have in their possession any book or books relating to the matters in the bill mentioned, except that there are, in the custody or power of the defendants, certain written books or repertories set forth in the first schedule, which contain entries of divers matters and things which the defendants believe form material evidence as to the exclusive right of metage, and which they intend to use in the support of their right. And, in a subsequent passage, they expressly admit that the books and repertories mentioned in the first schedule, contain copies, abstracts, or extracts from documents relating to the measuring of corn and grain by the meters; and they admit the possession of such books and repertories, but they deny that the plaintiff has any interest in them; and further, they deny, to the best of their knowledge, information, and belief, that if they were produced, it would appear by them that the right had commenced within the time of legal memory, or that they contain or would furnish evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs; on the contrary they say they are advised and believe the same are most material evidence in the support of their exclusive right against the plaintiff. There is in these passages a sufficient admission that the books and repertories set forth in the first schedule relate to the matter mentioned in the bill. The only question therefore is, whether any sufficient reason as is assigned why they should not be produced. When documents are charged and admitted to be in the defendant's possession relating to the matters in question, it must depend upon the sufficiency of the answer, whether the Court will order the production of them. The remaining question relates to the charters of the 6th James 1, and the charter of Charles 2. The charter of the 6th James 1, either the original or a copy, but as I read the answer, the original and the charters of Charles 2 are admitted by the defendants, the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty and the town clerk to be in their possession, and they clearly relate to the matters mentioned in the bill; that may be material in the plaintiff's case, for they tend to show that the right is confined to corn, &c. imported for the purpose of sale. In one part of their answer the defendants say that the charter of the 6th of James 1 was not necessary to their case; but in a subsequent part they state that the charter of Charles 2, in which the charter of the 6th of James 1 was recited, forms part of the evidence of their title to the exclusive right of metage, but they nowhere, as far as I can discover, state that they do not afford evidence in support of the plaintiff's case. Beyond the facts which I have stated, there is nothing relied upon as a reason why the charter should not be produced. There is no ground, therefore, for discharging any part of the Vice-Chancellor's order, and the motion therefore must be refused with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

RUSSELL v. NICHOLLS.

Ex parte FISHER.

Practice as to costs under the 120th Order of May 1845. The above Order directs that "where costs are to be taxed as between party and party, the Taxing Master may allow to the party entitled to receive such costs all such just and reasonable expenses as appear (among other things) to have been properly incurred in procuring the attendance of counsel in the Master's offices upon questions relating to pleadings or title." (Art 5.) Held, that the Taxing Master was right, upon a reference to him to tax costs as between party and party, in disallowing the costs of procuring the attendance of counsel before the Master for the purpose of resisting a discharge in an executor's account.

In this cause the original bill was filed by Elizabeth S. Russell, on behalf of her five infant children, against the executors of the will of John Russell and the other persons interested thereunder, for the purpose of having the accounts of the said testator's estate taken, and the trusts thereof duly administered. The usual decree was made on the 21st Feb. 1838. In the progress of taking the accounts before the Master, it appeared that the executors had paid to the respective payees three promissory notes, one for 2,000l. another for 240l. and another for 355l. drawn by the testator, and executed on the same day as that on which he executed his will, and for which the executors claimed a discharge. It then also came out, for the first time, that all these notes were in the custody and possession of the testator at the time of his decease, and were by his executors found among his papers by the executors, who handed them over to the payees. As it did not appear that there had been any consideration given for these notes, the plaintiff was advised that the payment of them ought not to be allowed in the discharge of the executors, until the whole matter had been fully investigated before the Master. She therefore obtained the attendance of counsel before the Master for the purpose of better investigating the matter, and the executors also on their behalf obtained the attendance of counsel. The investigation in the Master's office was carried on at different times, in the course of which many legal arguments were had on one side and the other, the Master at first being inclined to think that the executors could not be allowed their discharge in respect of those payments; but further evidence being adduced, he was of opinion that the executors were entitled to their discharge, stating, however, that the inquiry had been a very proper one, and that the circumstances connected with the making, delivery, and payment of the notes required some explanation. The cause coming on upon further directions, a decree was made thereon, whereby, among other things, it was referred to the Taxing Master in rotation, "to tax all parties the costs of these suits up to the present time, and their subsequent costs (the costs of the executors, as between solicitor and client), and the costs of all parties to the said petition heard in the said causes." The Taxing Master was of opinion that he was not empowered to allow in the costs incurred by the plaintiff, the charges for fees paid to counsel, or for briefs or copies of papers furnished to counsel on prosecuting the inquiry before the Master as to the delivery and payment of the said promissory notes by the executors. G. H. Fisher, who had married one of the infant plaintiffs, and as such was interested in the testator's estate, had carried on the latter part of the said inquiry before the Master, the plaintiff herself having declined to proceed with the investigation, and being dissatisfied with this taxation, presented this present petition, stating as before mentioned, and praying that the Taxing Master might be directed to review his taxation of the costs of the petitioner, and of the said Elizabeth S. Russell respectively, and that he might be directed to tax and allow the petitioner and the said plaintiff respectively, the said charges so disallowed from their respective costs in respect of the said inquiry before the said Master as to the said promissory notes, or so much and so many of the said charges as the said Taxing Master should be of opinion had been properly incurred by petitioner and plaintiff respectively.

Bethell and Bagshawe, in support of the petition, contended that, under the above Order of May 1845, the Taxing Master ought to have allowed the costs, notwithstanding the form of the decree.

Willcock, Stuart, and other counsel for the other different parties, opposed the petition, on the ground that this was in reality a petition of rehearing; for so long as the decree remained in its present state, the Master was not empowered to tax costs, except as between party and party; and that the 120th Order did not meet the case; the 5th article applying only to questions of pleading and title.

Bagshawe, in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered himself bound by the decree, which directed that a reference should be made to the Master in rotation to tax all parties their costs, and therefore the costs of the party whose behalf the present petition had been presented were to be taxed as between party and party. That if the taxation really did take place after the time at which the Orders of May 1845 came into operation, the taxation ought to be regulated by the 120th Order; and the taxation not having been completed until the 22nd January last, it came within those Orders. It has not been said that this is a question of pleading, but one relating to title, because the question is, whether the title to a certain sum is in the executors. His Honour, moreover, stated that he could not be induced to think that a question as to the allowing a discharge to an executor could be fairly considered one of title; for that if two professional men were talking together, and one said he had been attending the Master upon a question of title, could the other party suppose the question before the Master only in fact related to the allowance or disallowance of an executor's discharge? That he did conceive the true construction of the Order was one that, in the present case, would enable the Taxing Master to allow the costs of counsel's attending before the Master. Had the petitioner any special circumstances to entitle him to such costs, they ought to have been brought out at the hearing, in order that the Court might have decided upon those circumstances. His Honour thought that the Master was right and the petition wrong, and therefore Dismissed it with costs.

Monday, March 9.

SMITH v. SHERWOOD.

Partnership, — what amounts to a sufficient evidence of.

A bill is filed by A against two others, upon the ground of their being co-partners with him in a certain business. B and C filed their answer, denying the partnership, but stating that A was merely employed by them as their foreman; but as it was in contemplation of taking A into partnership with them, the accounts had been made out in the joint names of B, C, and A, the tools and utensils marked with their names. They admitted their having served A with notice to dissolve partnership, and admitted also specification of certain buildings and other work which was required by them, which specification described the work required to be done as being upon the property of B, C, and A. Held, that there was sufficient evidence of a partnership between B, C, and A.

From the statement in the bill, it appears that, in the month of December 1839, a verbal agreement was entered into by and between the plaintiff and the defendants, Robert Sherwood and Henry Sidney, for a partnership to carry on the business of engine-builders and ironfounders at Middlesborough, in the county of York, under the style of "Sidney, Sherwood, and Smith." It appeared by the terms of the agreement that the two defendants were to advance all the capital, and the plaintiff was to give his attention to the management of the business, and plaintiff and defendants were to be considered partners in equal shares. The bill went on to state the commencement of the said business, and that from the month of December 1839, all transactions relating thereto were carried on in the name of the said firm, and all bills of exchange and promissory notes and securities for money were made, signed, and accepted by or in the name of the said firm; and a certain cart, and all tools and utensils of or belonging to the said firm, were painted or marked with the words "Sidney, Sherwood, and Smith," or with the initials "S.S.S." The bill then stated that differences arose between the plaintiff and defendants, and that on the 16th March, 1841, the plaintiff received from the defendants a written notice, signed by the defendants, in the following words:—"To William Smith, of Middlesborough, in the county of York, ironfounder.—We, the undersigned Henry Sidney, of Middlesborough, in the county of York, ironfounder, and Robert Sherwood, of Stockton, in the county of Durham, ironfounder, do hereby give you notice, that we are desirous to dissolve and put an end to the copartnership heretofore subsisting between you and us, as ironfounders, at Middlesborough aforesaid; and we do hereby dissolve and put an end to the said copartnership accordingly. As witness our hands, this 16th day of March, 1841.—Henry Sidney. R. Sherwood." Various circumstances were charged in the bill tending to prove the partnership; and as evidence, among other things, it was shown that in July notice was given by the plaintiff and the defendants to builders and others in the neighbourhood of the said partnership works that certain works were required to be done on behalf of the said partnership, and that a certain specification and plan of such works were signed by the plaintiff and defendants, the commencement of which was as follows:—"Specifications of the masonry and brickwork of the annexed plans of workshops purposed to be built at Middlesbrough, on the property and for the company of Messrs. Sidney, Sherwood, and Smith." The bill also prayed that the partnership accounts might be wound up, &c. In their answer the defendants denied that the plaintiff was a partner in the said concern, but stated that he was employed by them as their foreman, or manager; they further admitted that it was their intention to take him into partnership upon his bringing a certain sum of money into the concern, but that he, the plaintiff, had failed to do so. They admitted also that, for the purpose of enabling him the better to manage the concern, they had allowed him to hold himself out as a partner with them; and that, in anticipation of the said contemplated partnership, one cart, and no more, and the tools and utensils of or belonging to the said concern, were painted or marked with the words "Sidney, Sherwood, and Smith," or with the initials "S. S. S." The defendants also admitted that until, or shortly before, the 16th of March, 1841, the accounts of the said concern were made out in the names of "Sidney, Sherwood, and Smith," the intended style of the said contemplated partnership. They stated, moreover, that being advised, that, having in the manner aforesaid, allowed the plaintiff to hold himself out as a partner in the said concern, there was a necessity for putting an end in the regular way to such supposed partnership, they did, on the 16th of March, 1841, serve the plaintiff with the notice of dissolution in the bill stated; that such memorandum or specification as in the said bill mentioned was signed by the plaintiff and defendant Henry Sidney, on behalf, in fact, of defendants Sidney and Sherwood, and not of the said contemplated partnership, but admitted that such specification did commence in the words in the said bill in that behalf mentioned.

James Parker and Torrisano, for the plaintiff.

Wakefield and Bates, for the defendants, contended that it would be of no avail to send the matter to the Master, for there was no evidence as to the terms of the alleged partnership; and from the plaintiff's own shewing he had made no advance of any money in consideration of the intended partnership.

His HONOUR thought there was quite a sufficient proof of the existence of a partnership, and if there were any misunderstanding as to the terms, an inquiry must be directed.

ROLLS COURT.

ROWLEY v. ADAMS.

Practice—Staying proceedings—Appeal.

A party to a cause, not joining in an appeal from a decree made in it, has no claim to have proceedings stayed pending the appeal.

Wray moved, on behalf of William Wyatt, a party to this cause, but not to the appeal now pending before the House of Lords, to stay further proceedings on the decree till after the hearing of the appeal. The Court had directed the sale of certain real estates at Hornsey, of which Wm. Wyatt was devisee; and if the appeal should be decided in a particular way, the proceeds of the sale would be unnecessary. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—You come upon this ground, that the appeal, if successful, may increase the fund, so that there will be no use for this.] Yes, it may be unnecessary; we have a strong case against the executors. But it is to be observed, we are not an appealing party; and it will be said, therefore, that we have no right to make this application.

Temple, Turner, and Kenyon Parker, for other parties.

Kindersley, for the executors, Adams and Marks, said that they appealed only for the purpose of bringing the whole case before the House of Lords.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I cannot grant the motion. You have no right to make it, as you are not an appealing party.

April 15, 23, and 30.

MELTON v. MELTON.

Practice—Payment of money out of court.

A young lady, who was deaf and dumb, was absolutely entitled at 21 to a sum of money out of court, and on attaining that age she presented a petition to have it paid out to her; the Court required to be satisfied, on affidavit, that she was fully aware of the nature of the proceedings, and gave her consent to the money being paid out.

Chandless stated that there was a sum of money in court to which Miss Melton, the petitioner in this case, was absolutely entitled under the will of her father on her attaining the age of 21. She had now attained that age, and presented this petition to have it paid out of court to her; and the order would have been of course in an ordinary case, but as the young lady had the misfortune to be both deaf and dumb, the Court would probably require an affidavit as to her knowledge of the proceeding.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said he would certainly require to be satisfied that she knew the nature of the petition, and assented to the payment of the money out of court; but that being produced, she was as much entitled as any one else to payment.

April 23.—Chandless read an affidavit of the solicitor of the young lady, in which he stated that he had made out a short statement of the substance of the petition and the object of it, and that in his presence William Melton, the young lady's brother, held communications with her by signs on his fingers, and as he believed thereby conveyed to her the substance and meaning of the statement so prepared by him, and that she afterwards wrote and signed a paper writing to the effect that she well understood the petition and assented thereto.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said that was very satisfactory as far as it went, but it was not the best evidence, which was only to be had from Mr. William Melton himself. The young lady's signing the paper was also of weight.

April 30.—Chandless stated that he had Mr. Wm. Melton's affidavit, in which he distinctly declared that his sister well knew the communications he made to her.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was quite satisfied, and made the order.

HALDENBY v. STOPFORTH.

Practice—Executor—Costs.

The executor of an executor, who commits a breach of trust and becomes insolvent, is entitled to his costs.

Purvis, in this case, some considerable time ago, had asked for the costs of an executor of an executor who had committed a breach of trust and was insolvent, to be paid him out of the assets of the original testator which had been recovered, and

The MASTER of the ROLLS now intimated that he thought the executor entitled.

THOMAS v. SELBY.

Practice—Substituted service of subpoena.

Substituted service on a wife for her husband of a subpoena to appear and answer will not be ordered when the husband has deserted the wife, and it is not known where he is.

This was a suit for the administration of the estate of one Thomas Thomas; and the defendant, Mrs. Collins, the wife of Thomas Collins, claims to be entitled to a small sum under the testator's will. It appeared that in October, 1844, Thomas Collins had deserted his wife, and had not since been heard of. The plaintiff had accordingly moved for substituted service (see 6 Law T. 498) on the wife for the husband of a copy of the bill, and his application being refused, he now moved for substituted service on Mrs. Collins for her husband of a subpoena to appear and answer the bill, Mrs. Collins having answered separately.

Welford, for the motion, said that Thomas Collins himself had no claim, but Mrs. Collins had a claim for a small sum under the will; and as, therefore, it was not known where Collins was since October, 1844, this motion was made.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It is a curious case this in which to ask for substituted service on a person who does not know where the absent party is, or whether he is living or dead. How do you know he has intrusted her to manage his affairs? What is the connection?

Welford.—It amounts to a case of absconding.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Well, if you can make out your case on that ground, do.

Welford.—He left her before the institution of the suit.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—That makes still stronger against your application; I cannot grant it.

April 24 and 30.

KIRKMAN v. BOOTH.

Practice—New orders—Dismissing for want of prosecution—Time—Negligence.

The answer of the defendant in this cause was put in on the 18th of December last, and on the 21st of March notice of motion for the production of papers was served by the plaintiff, and the order was made thereon on the 26th of the same month, but was not passed till the 20th of April. Notwithstanding this delay, however, in passing the order, and though the plaintiff had been kept before the Court for more than four months after putting in his answer, a motion to dismiss for want of prosecution was refused, but with costs, as against the plaintiff, and an expression of disapprobation of his negligence.

Bayley, in this case, moved to dismiss for want of prosecution. The defendant had put in his answer on the 18th of December last, and, therefore, by the New Orders, the defendant was at liberty to move to dismiss any time after the 12th of March. On the 21st of March the plaintiff served the defendant with notice of motion for the production of papers, and the order for production was made in pursuance thereof on the 26th of March, but was not passed till the 20th of April, being drawn up on the 15th, but not taken away to be passed till the 17th of that month. Under these circumstances the defendant moved to dismiss.

Turner (with him Roll) said the bill was filed on the 26th of July, and after a delay in entering an appearance and obtaining six weeks further time to answer, the defendant at last put in his answer on the 18th of December. When the answer was filed it was laid before counsel, who advised the plaintiff to move for the production of papers therein mentioned, amounting to a large number, about 212 in all. Accordingly, the motion to produce was made, and the order obtained, and it is now passed. The present motion to dismiss, therefore, ought not to be granted.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Notwithstanding all that has been said, I cannot but consider the plaintiff guilty of negligence. He must, however, pay the costs of this motion. I can't but say that it is very wrong to keep the defendant before the Court for four months; still I can't refuse further time, though there has been some considerable delay; and the defendant not giving the papers without an order is something to be taken into account.

Roll.—We are to have an order of course to amend.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I don't know what may happen; what say you, Mr. Bayley, to an order to amend three weeks after production of papers?

Bayley.—I have no instructions to consent.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Then there will be no order on this motion, only that the plaintiff pay the costs.

Thursday, April 30.

SMITH v. SMITH.

Practice—Service of subpoena—Infant temporarily out of the jurisdiction.

Service on the mother and father-in-law of an infant, who usually resides with the mother and father-in-law, but is on a temporary visit out of the jurisdiction, not deemed good service on the infant, there being no reason to suppose the infant was purposely kept out of the way.

Rosina Smith, an infant, it appeared, usually resided with her mother, Mary Smith, and her father-in-law, George Smith, but was at present on a temporary visit with some friends at Leith, in Scotland, and being a party to the cause, and out of the jurisdiction, Glasse now moved that service on Mr. and Mrs. Smith be deemed good service on the infant, and cited Thomson v. Jones.

The MASTER of the ROLLS did not see the necessity for making the motion, unless there was reason to suspect the child was purposely kept out of the way, and allowed the motion to stand over to ascertain that point.

RAMSBOTTOM v. FREEMAN.

Practice—Solicitor and client.

A solicitor undertaking to get the bill dismissed, as against a particular defendant in this cause, obtained from him a sum of money for that purpose; the client subsequently, and after the lapse of three years, makes inquiry at the registrar's office and elsewhere, and finding or believing that nothing was done by the solicitor, moved for the delivery up of papers, and the repayment of the money; counsel for the solicitor appeared, and stated that he had got bills of costs to be taxed against the client in this and other suits, but gave no reply to the charge made against him; the motion was allowed to stand over to see what the solicitor had to say.

Freeman, one of the defendants in this cause, appeared in person in support of a motion of which he had given notice, that Mr. Jervis, a solicitor, should be ordered to give up to him his papers, and to repay him the sum of £1. 16s. moneys advanced. It appeared from an affidavit which he had filed, and which he produced to the Court, that being a defendant in the cause, he had had communications with Jervis, who said he would get the bill dismissed as against him, but must have some money for that purpose. Accordingly he, the defendant, gave him the sum of £1. 16s. the chief part of which he was obliged to borrow; but though this had taken place some three years ago, he was still a defendant on the record. The affidavit further stated that the deponent had searched the registrar's office, and every place he could think of, but could not find the least trace of any step ever having been taken to effect the proposed object; and when he asked Jervis, he would give him no satisfaction, but merely told him he had not looked in the right place. All he wanted, he said, was to be satisfied that his business had been attended to, but he believed that Jervis had never done any thing at all. He therefore moved to have his money back, &c.

Wright, for Mr. Jervis, said he had got bills of costs to be taxed against Mr. Freeman in this and two other suits, and the only thing that could be done was to order taxation and delivery of papers, on an undertaking by Mr. Freeman to pay what should be found due. Mr. Jervis had made no affidavit, because this proceeding was irregular. Besides, Freeman was an insolvent, and he had not proved that his schedule was taken off the file.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said it was a very strange case; if no business had been done for the man, Jervis had no right to keep his money. The case must stand over to the next day of motions, to see whether Jervis had anything to say in explanation.

WATSON v. DAVIS.

Practice—Motion to dismiss two suits after decree in one—New Orders—Filing replication de novo—Time.

A decree was made in a cause, but was not drawn up; and then a new bill was filed for the same purpose; and after considerable delay, and the filing of a supplemental bill, a replication was filed so long ago as the 23rd of January, 1844, and no step was taken since. A motion being made to dismiss for want of prosecution, the plaintiff was ordered to pay the costs, to file in two days a replication de novo, which would bring the case within the New Orders, otherwise the bills to be dismissed.

Quære, Whether the practice is to file a replication de novo to bring the matter within the New Orders, a replication having been filed before they came into operation.

Kindersley, in this case, applied for an order to dismiss for want of prosecution. The plaintiff had filed a bill in 1838, and a decree was made in the suit, but it had never been drawn up; and then he filed a second bill, to which in 1841 the defendants put in their answer. Several obstructions then occurred to the prosecution of the suit, and in 1842 a supplemental suit became necessary. All this time the defendants Davis and Browne refrained from pressing the plaintiff, and they gave him to January, 1844, three years after they put in their answer, to put the suits in order. But the plaintiff still delaying, on the 19th of January, 1844, they gave notice of motion for the 25th of the same month to dismiss for want of prosecution, and then the plaintiff filed a replication on the 23rd before the motion was made. From that time to this nothing had been done, and on the part of the defendants this motion to dismiss the suits was now made.

C. Hall for the plaintiff, contended that as there had been a decree in one suit, it could not therefore be dismissed; and as to the other he could not account for the delay since the 23rd of January, 1844, but all the Court could do would be to order the plaintiff to file a replication de novo, in order to bring the case within the New Orders. It seemed to be the practice in cases in which a replication had been filed before the New Orders came into operation, to order it to be filed de novo to bring the case within them. (Loell v. Blew, 13 Sim. 492; Glover v. Powell, V.C.B.)

Kindersley, in reply, said the decree in the original suit had been made but not drawn up, and the case therefore stood on a different footing from the case of a suit and a decree regularly drawn up. He asked the costs of this application, and, if the order for filing a replication were made, that it should be to file it instantly.

The MASTER of the ROLLS ordered the plaintiff to pay the costs, and to file the replication in two days, otherwise the suits to be dismissed.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

May 2 and 4.

SHARP v. DAY.

Practice—Demurrer—Railway company.

Where a railway company had been projected, but no shares allotted, and the scheme had been abandoned, a demurrer for want of equity and for want of parties, to a bill filed by one of the provisional committee on behalf of himself and all other parties (except the defendants) interested as partners in the company, against some of the provisional committee, for the purpose of taking the accounts and winding up the affairs of the company, was overruled without costs, and without prejudice to any question in the cause.

This case was argued upon demurrers for want of equity and for want of parties. The bill was filed by the plaintiff, on behalf of himself and all other parties interested as partners in the company or partnership called the East Riding Junction Railway Company, except such of the partners as were named as defendants, against Day and others, and prayed an account of the moneys and property belonging to the company or partnership, which had come to the hands of the defendants, or the hands of any person by their order or for their use, in trust for the company or partnership, and of all moneys which, by virtue of the resolutions come to by the parties, had been paid to, or possessed by, the defendants, for the purpose of discharging the debts and liabilities of the company or partnership; and that an account might be taken of the debts and liabilities of the company or partnership now remaining unsatisfied; that the outstanding property of the company or partnership might be collected and applied under the direction of the Court, so far as it would extend, towards the discharge of the debts and liabilities; and that, if necessary, a receiver might be appointed by the Court to carry into effect the above purposes; that the defendants might be restrained from collecting or recovering the property or moneys of the company or partnership, or any part thereof, or from interfering therewith, or from applying any moneys or property paid or subscribed, or hereafter to be so in consequence of the resolutions, otherwise than under the direction of the Court, in discharge of the debts of the company or partnership, and for the purposes for which such moneys had been subscribed; and that the defendants might be restrained from prosecuting an action at law against the plaintiff, or any other proceeding at law, touching the matters in the bill mentioned. The bill stated the projection of the company in October 1845, by the defendant Day and other persons; the issue of two prospectuses with the names of the defendants and other persons as the provisional committee; that the plaintiff, on the 9th of October, 1845, became a member of the provisional committee, the defendant Day then acting as secretary pro tempore, and without salary; but that no shares had ever been allotted. That in December 1845 the members of the provisional committee resolved, by a majority of eight, to bring the undertaking to a conclusion, and that the expenses which had been incurred should be defrayed by a contribution of 10l. by each member of the provisional committee, the same to be paid to the credit of Messrs. Carlile and English, as trustees of the audit committee, the defendants being and acting as members of such committee; that Messrs. Carlile and English never accepted or acted in the trust, the moneys paid being paid or transferred to the defendants in trust for the liquidation of the liabilities of the company; that a report was made on the 31st December, 1845, that the liabilities of the company amounted to 1,545l. and that the provisional committee then resolved that each of its members should contribute 30l. The bill then stated that at the date of the last-mentioned resolution the provisional committee consisted of eighty-three members, and that the result of the proposed contribution would be 2,490l.; that out of the moneys received in pursuance of the resolution, and of other property of the company, all the liabilities had been discharged except the sums of 220l. and 45l. the latter sum being claimed by the defendant Day; that the defendants had a balance in their hands more than sufficient to pay what was due; and that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff was justified in declining to contribute the sum of 30l. The bill went on to state that Day had brought an action against the plaintiff and obtained a verdict for 45l. but leave was given to move to enter a nonsuit; and that whatever was due to Day was payable out of moneys in the hands of the defendants, which ought to be treated as trust funds for the purposes of the company.

Wigram and Follett, for the demurrer.

Parry and Kenyon, for the bill.

The following cases (among others) were cited:—Richardson v. Larpent (2 Y. & C. C. 507); Richardson v. Hastings (7 Bea. 328); and Bourne v. Freeth (9 Barn. & Cres. 632).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In this case the bill may, I think, be understood as alleging that the defendants are in possession of funds in effect as trustees, for purposes, for the fulfilment of which, the plaintiff and other persons, who are so numerous as to render the junction of them individually in a suit substantially incompatible with its prosecution, and on whose behalf and his own, he sues; and that the defendants have acted and intend to act in contravention of those purposes, and it prays relief upon that footing. Whatever I may think of the wisdom of instituting such a suit as, upon the face of the bill, this appears to be, and, assuming the professed objects of the bill to be the true objects, whatever I may consider to be the probable fruits of this litigation, I am apprehensive that if I allow these demurrers I shall be introducing a new rule, or, by making more strict, altering old rules now in use. There seems to be enough to enable it to be said that the bill is not born dead. Whether it is likely to enjoy a prosperous, a long, or an easy life, is a different question. It is not, however, without doubt that I hold it to be, at the present stage, sustainable; nor is the question of the applicability of the principle upon which I proceeded in Richardson v. Larpent the only ground of doubt that I have. But doubting, I must allow the plaintiff to call for answers. Let the demurrers be overruled without costs, and without prejudice to any question in the cause.

April 17, and May 8.

GOODWIN v. GOSNELL, re HILL.

Miscellaneous of Solicitor.

Pursuant to the order made in this case, which is reported ante, p. 26, Mr. George Price Hill, by his counsel shewed cause against his being struck off the rolls, and the judgment of the Court was given on the last day of the Term. The prosecution of the order made on the 9th of March had been, by the direction of the Court, entrusted to the solicitor to "the suitors' fund."

Wigram and Rogers for Mr. Hill.

Taylor for the suitors of the court.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—After what has already taken place in this case, it must be unnecessary for me to recapitulate minutely the facts. Mr. Hill, being a solicitor of the Court of Chancery, died, in the year 1836, permit, advise, and cause a client, an applicant in an obscure and humble condition of life, incapable altogether of forming a judgment as to the propriety or impropriety of the act, to sell a sum of Three per Cent. Consolidated Annuities, of which he was the sole trustee—trustee for a woman and child. The sale was not merely unnecessary and improper—it was manifestly wrong. It was a plain and open breach of trust. The proceeds were received by Mr. Hill. It is not alleged that Mr. Hill took, owned, or suggested the taking or asking for, any opinion or advice except his own, as to the correctness or incorrectness of the step which he took. This conduct on the part of a solicitor, however it may be attributed to a want of prudence, or to a want of knowledge as to both, yet if there was an absence of a desire to benefit himself—and of that intention it would probably, however flagrant the irregularity, be venial, and not wrong, yet not requisite, to say that he had placed himself under any other than a responsibility of merely; and I have endeavoured to bring myself to think it possible reasonably to take that view of the transaction—no light task when there are considered the nature of Mr. Hill's answer to the bill, the actual possession by himself of the money produced by the sale, the manner in which he avows or professes to have applied, used, and dealt with it, the greatly reduced sum to which he asserted it had become diminished, the amount and extraordinary nature of the charges claimed, and more than obtained by him, the man which he prepared and procured the trustee and the father of the infants to execute—an instrument open to serious misadventure;—these circumstances, in detail of which I spare myself, cannot be considered by the Court without feeling pain, without misgivings as to the propriety of continuing Mr. Hill in the honourable profession, the upright performance of the important duties belonging to which is of such high interest to society. I have, however, willingly paused on the facts which he avers, that at this period of the year 1836 he was only twenty-five years of age—the circumstance that he had lost his father in his boyhood—the restitution, though late, which he has been ordered to make, and which, I suppose, he has now made, and the amount of costs of all parties to the suit to which he has been most properly subjected, in my mind—and the same which, by his counsel, he has stated himself, now at least, to entertain of the nature of the transaction—and upon the hope that their opinion and advice, aided by the discussion which the case has received, and by the experience which, since the year 1836, Mr. Hill may be supposed to have acquired, will act in without their fruit and effects; pausing, I say, on these considerations, and upon this hope, I have succeeded in persuading myself that I may, without impropriety, abstain from proceeding further in this matter, if Mr. Hill will do what seems to me to be still necessary on his part, to evince a thoroughly just sense of what has occurred, and a hearty desire to make complete reparation—namely, that he will undertake to pay to the other parties to the suit the whole of the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in the cause, either preliminary or otherwise, in respect of the same, so far as he has not yet been ordered to pay the costs, and also the costs of the solicitor to "the suitors' fund" in the present case; these costs, charges, and expenses to be taxed, if required, in the usual way. If I am now to part with the case, let me repeat my earnest expectation—my earnest hope—let me add my expectation, that what has taken place in this case may not be without good effect, and that Mr. Hill will hereafter so conduct himself as to efface the recollection of the facts now before me. I trust that he will entertain a manifest and proper sense of what he owes to himself, to his family, and to the profession to which he belongs—a profession, the power of which for good or for ill, as far as the worldly interests of the mass of mankind are concerned, can scarcely be too strongly stated—a profession owning, I am happy to be able to say, so many who would do honour to any calling, and who are well aware that sincerity and integrity are the surest guides to prosperity and distinction, and who are true and just from higher motives and less worldly considerations. Let it be Mr. Hill's study and ambition to become deserving of being ascribed to that class of solicitors—a class meriting and receiving the countenance and protection, the respect and esteem of those in whose hands is placed the administration of justice, among not the least urgent of whose duties, on the other hand, it is to mark and to censure, to repress, and, if necessary, to extirpate from the courts such men as, by abusing the functions and privileges of so important a profession, become a scandal and a pestilence to society.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

April 30; May 1-6.

JONES v. JONES.

Will—Settlement—Renewal of leaseholds—Fines—Contribution.

Where the Court of Chancery is required to fix the mode of creating fines for the renewal of leaseholds, it will follow the general rule of the Court, of adjusting the burthen upon the parties according to their enjoyment, notwithstanding the testator may have pointed out a mode of creating funds necessary for that purpose.

William Jones, by his will, devised his freehold and copyhold hereditaments to Wright, Butler, and Croft, upon trust to settle the said hereditaments to the use of his great nephew, William Jones, for ninety-nine years, should he so long live, remainder to Edward Jones, for ninety-nine years should he so long live, with remainder to the first and every other son of Edward Jones, in tail male, remainder to the testator's right heirs; the settlement was also to contain a power to the trustees of the will to lease for twenty-one years, determinable on the life of the respective tenants for life; and the testator further bequeathed his leasehold estates for lives and years to the same trustees upon the same trusts as his freehold and copyhold hereditaments, so far as the same were capable of being applied; and he gave his trustees a power out of the rents, issues, and profits of the leasehold estates yearly, and every year to pay the rents, reservations, covenants, and agreements therein contained, or by mortgage of the leaseholds or by such other ways or means as should be advisable in that behalf forthwith to raise such sum as should be sufficient to defray the fine and fines and other charges of renewing the leases, or any future lease or leases to be granted for any life or lives, or any term of years when and as often as there shall be occasion, or as such leases have been usually renewed, and directed that they should from time to time renew the said several leases accordingly, and that the settlement to be made should contain clauses for the appointment of new trustees, and for the indemnity of trustees; and such further and other clauses, declarations, and agreements conformable to the spirit, true intent, and meaning of his will, such settlement to be made as the trustees or the survivor should think proper.

A settlement was made by the trustees according to the directions in the will. Wm. Jones, named in the will, attained the age of twenty-one years in 1819, and then entered into possession of the freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates of the testator, and afterwards married, and had a son, the present plaintiff. The present bill was filed in Nov. 1845, against the tenant for life and the trustees of the testator's will, to have the settlement executed in pursuance of the will under the direction of the Court.

Walker and Chambers appeared for the plaintiff.

Tinsley and Campbell for the defendants.—There were several points raised as to the introduction of certain clauses which are usual in settlements, there being no directions in the will respecting them; they were, however, disposed of during the argument, by both parties agreeing that, whatever was the custom amongst conveyancers in similar settlements, the same course should be followed in the present settlement; and the only question reserved for the judgment of the Court was the mode of providing for the renewal of the leasehold property in respect to the fines required for that purpose.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The only point in this case which remains for the Court to decide is, the mode of creating the fund required for the renewal fines upon the leasehold property belonging to the testator's estate, and the manner of adjusting the burthen of the renewals between the tenant in possession and the remainder-man. The cases of White v. White (9 Ves. 554); Allan v. Backhouse (2 Ves. & Beames, 72); and Greenwood v. Evans (4 Beav. 44), shew that there is no distinction on this point between leases for lives and years, and that the mode of proceeding in those cases has been recognized, and acted upon, in all subsequent decisions, and the general rule followed (in the absence of any express directions), when the question now raised has to be decided, is, to find the extent of the enjoyment the tenant for life had in the renewed term, from the time the old term would have expired (had there been no renewal,) to the time of his death, and then to direct the tenant for life to pay so much of the fine as would be proportionate to his time of enjoyment of the renewed term, and leave the remainder-man to pay the residue of the fine for the remainder of the term vesting in him, and to follow the same course in all subsequent renewals. And where the tenant for life pays the whole fine upon the renewal, he is entitled to have compound interest during his life for the amount he paid on account of the proportion payable by the remainder man, and simple interest upon the same from his death until his executors are repaid. Since the case of White v. White, that appears to be the rule followed in all subsequent cases in settling the mode of contribution. Perhaps the case of Lord Montfort v. Cadogan (17 Ves. 490), and other cases under settlements, might be distinguished from cases under wills; but it is not necessary for me to decide the distinction between settlements and wills, for this case does not depend upon the general rule altogether, there being a direction given by the testator that the trustees shall, "out of the rents, issues, and profits of the leaseholds, yearly and every year, pay the rents, reservations, covenants, and agreements therein contained, or by mortgage of the leaseholds, or by such other ways or means as shall be advisable in that behalf, forthwith raise such sum as shall be sufficient to defray the fine and fines, and other charges of renewals of the leases; and any future leases, to be granted for any life or lives, for any term of years, when and as often as there shall be occasion, or as such leases have been usually renewed, and do and shall, from time to time, renew the said several leases accordingly." It is clear from this that the case before the Court does not depend altogether upon the general rule, inasmuch as the testator has given some instructions to the trustees; and where a testator has clearly expressed himself upon the point, the Court usually pays attention to it. I do not mean to decide whether these words would have authorized the trustees to proceed to a sale; the language is very general. If the testator had said, "Do it by sale and in no other mode," it would have been a strong argument that his intention was, that the estate should be settled in such a manner as it would in effect be finally eaten up in preserving itself. Suppose, however, he had said, "By sale or mortgage, or by the annual rents and profits," in that case, if the trustees sold, there would be a diminution of so many acres every time a fine was required, until at last the whole estate would be wasted away; whereas, if they raised the money out of the rents and profits, the burthen would be thrown on the party in possession. The just rule seemed to be to throw the burthen upon the parties according to their interest; notwithstanding, had the trustees in this case proceeded to a sale, it would have been very doubtful whether the Court would have interfered to restrain them, the language used by the testator is so general. Here the trustees have not used any discretion—they have thrown it all upon the Court. The justice of the case is to equalize the burthen amongst all parties according to their interests. If the whole was thrown upon the tenant for life, he would be contributing towards an object from which he might possibly obtain nothing substantial; on the other hand, if it were thrown upon the estate, it might operate unjustly by throwing the expense of the renewal upon the remainder-man, as the tenant for life might enjoy the estate during his life, and merely pay the interest of the debt, and then die leaving no assets to pay his proportion of the fine; all this inconvenience can only be avoided by pursuing the course pointed out by Lord Eldon in White v. White, which has been followed in the subsequent cases of Greenwood v. Evans and Reeves v. Creswick (3 Young & Collin, 715); and, deciding this case according to the general rule I have already stated, and where the fine is paid wholly by the tenant for life, he will be entitled to a lien upon the estate for the share of the remainder-man with interest; and where the fine is wholly paid by the remainder-man, the tenant for life shall be required to give security for the proportion of the fine due for the interest he takes in the renewed lease, and the amount of the security must be found upon a calculated value; and if he dies before the value has been exhausted, allowance can be made for the excess. In making this decision I am only following the course pointed out by Lord Eldon in White v. White, and followed in the subsequent decisions; and in doing so I make the contribution to the fines for renewal proportionate to the actual enjoyment of the estate. There must be a reference to the Master to find what proportion should be properly payable by tenant for life, and if he is not prepared with the amount, the Master must approve of a security.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Saturday, Feb. 14.

MILNER v. MYERS.

Pleading—Trespass—De injuria.

To an action of trespass, q. c. f. the defendant pleaded that the locus in quo was the soil and freehold of one B. of whom the plaintiff held as tenant from year to year, upon certain terms, and, inter alia, that B. or his on-coming tenant, at any time after the 1st of January preceding the 6th of April, when the plaintiff should have given or received notice to quit, should have full liberty to enter upon and plough the land; that notice to quit on the 6th of April, 1845, was given; that B. agreed to let to J. and J. agreed to take the said premises, as tenant from year to year, from and after the expiration of the plaintiff's tenancy; that J. thereupon became the on-coming tenant; and that defendant, as his servant, &c. after the 1st of January, entered to plough the land. Replication (admitting the seisin of B.), de injuria absque residuo cause.

Held, upon demurrer to the replication, 1st, that the plea set up an authority, derived from the plaintiff, and that therefore the replication was bad, according to the 3rd resolution in Croger's case. 2nd, that the plea was good, whether the agreement between B. and J. amounted to an actual demise or not, and whether it ought to have been stated to be in writing or not, because enough appeared to warrant the express allegation that J. was the on-coming tenant, which might have been traversed, and because the objections, if good at all, could only be taken on special demurrer.

3rd Plea.—And for a further plea in this behalf, as to breaking and entering the said close, in which, &c. in the declaration mentioned, and breaking down, trampling on, consuming, and spoiling the grass there growing and being, as in the declaration mentioned, the defendant says that, before and at the said times when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, the said close in the declaration mentioned, and in which, &c. was a certain close of arable land, parcel of a certain farm, containing divers closes of arable, meadow, and pasture land, together with a certain farm-house, barn, and other buildings, which said farm and premises, before and at the said times when, &c. were the farm-house, barn, buildings, soil, and freehold of one Alex. Wm. Robt. Bosville; and the said farm and premises, before and at the said times when, &c. were held, occupied, and enjoyed by the plaintiff as tenant thereof to the said Alex. Wm. Robt. Bosville, to wit, as tenant thereof from year to year, upon and subject to certain terms and stipulations, and, amongst others, the following; that is to say, that the said Alex. Wm. Robt. Bosville, or his or their on-coming tenant, at any time after the 1st day of January preceding the 6th day of April, when the plaintiff should have given or received notice to quit the said farm and premises on such last-mentioned 6th day of April, should have full liberty to enter upon and to plough and cultivate all the arable land except the fallows or turnip-fallows of the preceding summer. And the defendant further says, that while the plaintiff so held, occupied, and enjoyed the said farm and premises as such tenant thereof to the said Alex. Wm. Robt. Bosville, and before any of the said times when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, and more than half a year before the expiration of the then current year of the said tenancy, to wit, on the 5th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1844, the said Alex. Wm. Robt. Bosville gave notice to the plaintiff that he, the plaintiff, should quit the said farm and premises, so held, occupied, and enjoyed by him as aforesaid, on a certain day, to wit, the 6th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1845, the said last-mentioned day being the day of the expiration of the then current year of the tenancy of the plaintiff. And the defendant further says, that afterwards, and before any of the said times when &c. in the declaration mentioned, to wit, on the 1st day of January, in the year of our Lord 1845, the said Alex. Wm. Robt. Bosville agreed to let to Wm. Jordan, and the said Wm. Jordan then agreed to take, the said farm and premises, to hold the same to the said Wm. Jordan, as tenant thereof, to wit, as tenant from year to year, from and after the expiration of the said tenancy of the plaintiff, that is to say, from the said 6th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1845; and the said Wm. Jordan thereupon became the on-coming tenant of the said Alex. Wm. Robert Bosville, of the said farm and premises, on the expiration of the said tenancy of the plaintiff; and the defendant further says, that the said close in which, &c. at the said times when, &c. was not, nor was any part thereof, fallow or turnip-fallow of the preceding summer; wherefore the defendant, being the servant of the said Wm. Jordan, and by his command, the said Wm. Jordan so then being such on-coming tenant as aforesaid, on the several times when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, the same respectively being after the 1st day of January preceding the 6th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1845, the said last-mentioned day being the day on which the plaintiff had been required to quit the said farm and premises by the said notice which the plaintiff had so received as aforesaid, entered upon the said close in which, &c. for the purpose of ploughing and cultivating the same, and in so doing necessarily and unavoidably did a little tread down, trample on, consume, and spoil the grass there growing and being, doing no unnecessary damage to the plaintiff in that behalf, and as he, the defendant lawfully might for the cause aforesaid; which are the said several alleged trespasses in the introductory part of this plea mentioned, and whereof the plaintiff hath above complained against the defendant, and this the defendant is ready to verify, &c.

Replication.—And the said plaintiff, as to the plea of the said defendant by him lastly above pleaded, saith, that admitting that the said close in the declaration mentioned, and in which, &c. was before and at the said time when, &c. in the declaration mentioned, parcel of a certain farm containing divers closes of arable, meadow, and pasture land, together with a certain farm-house, barn, and other buildings, which said farm and premises before and at the said times when, &c. were the farm-house, barn, buildings, soil, and freehold of the said Alex. Wm. Robert Bosville, in the said last plea mentioned, as therein is alleged: for replication nevertheless in this behalf the said plaintiff says that the said defendant, at the said times, when, &c. of his own wrong, and without the residue of the cause in his said last plea alleged, committed the said several trespasses in the introductory part of his said last plea mentioned, in manner and form as the said plaintiff hath above thereof in his said declaration complained against the said defendant; and this the said plaintiff prays may be inquired of by the country, &c.

Demurrer thereto; and joinder.

The following points were set down for argument on the part of the defendant:—The causes of demurrer are, that the plaintiff seeks, by the replication de injuria, to put in issue authority derived from the plaintiff and interest claimed by the defendant in the locus in quo. Also, that the replication is double and multifarious in the respects pointed out by the causes of demurrer.

The points of argument set down by the plaintiff were—That “de injuria absque residuo cause, admitting as it expressly does the freehold interest stated in the last plea, is a proper replication, notwithstanding it may put in issue several matters; that the several matters put in issue by the replication amount together only to matter of excuse; that the authority under which defendant justifies is not authority derived from the plaintiff, who is not even shewn to have been a party to the creation of tenancy on the terms mentioned, but the authority is immediately derived from Jordan, the on-coming tenant, and more remotely and ultimately derived from Bosville, the landlord; that no interest in the locus in quo is claimed by defendant; and that even if Jordan can be considered as claiming any interest under a mere agreement not in writing, such interest being future, and its evidence mere inducement to the liberty to enter, it may properly be put in issue by the replication.”

Plaintiff will also contend that the last plea is bad, for not shewing any actual demise to Jordan, or the creation of any tenancy, but only a mutual agreement between him and Bosville to take and let the farm; and also for not stating such agreement to be in writing.

This demurrer was argued in Trinity Vacation (Saturday, June 21).

Hugh Hill, in support of the demurrer.—This replication is bad according to the 2nd and 3rd resolutions in Crogate's case (8 Rep. 66, b), because the plea puts in issue an authority derived from the plaintiff, and also because it claims an interest in the locus in quo. Upon the latter objection the cases of Edwards v. Pinniger, recently decided (5 Law T. 195), and Bowler v. Nicholson (12 Ad. & Ell. 341), may be cited in support of the replication; but they are distinguishable. In the former case the defendants justified under a warrant issued in pursuance of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74 (the Possession of Tenements Act); and in the latter, the interest claimed was not, as here, an interest in the land on which the subject-matter of complaint arises; but on the other objection the latter case is an authority for the defendant; and the words of Patteson, J. would apply to this case: “Then is the authority here derived immediately or immediately from the plaintiff? It is not to be supposed that in the case put, of entry to view waste, there is an express authority from the plaintiff; the authority would result from the parties being, respectively, tenant of a particular estate and reversioner. Here the authority arose out of a relation created by the act of parties, one of whom was the plaintiff; therefore the defendants justify under an ‘authority or power’ derived from the plaintiff himself. Consequently the replication is bad.” An objection, however, is taken to the plea; that it alleges an agreement only, and not a demise; but, first, the plea contains words of present demise (Doe dem. Pearson v. Rice, 8 Bing. 178); and the commencement and duration of the term distinctly appear; which distinguishes this from the case of Goodtitle dem. Estwick v. Way (1 T. R. 735). [COLERIDGE, J.—There is no statement of the rent. Has any agreement, wanting that, been held a lease?] At all events the plea is helped by the averment that Jordan was the “on-coming tenant.” Another objection to the plea is, that it should have been averred that the agreement was in writing; but a lease by parol to commence after the termination of an existing tenancy is good, if the whole time does not exceed three years from the making of it. (Bacon's Abr. tit. Leases, s.; Bulwer's Nt. Pri. 177). At all events these objections would only be available on special demurrer.

Raw, contra.—First, as to the plea, the defendant is bound by the statement in his plea, which is, that an agreement was entered into, not that a lease was granted. Things ought to be pleaded according to their legal effect (Stephen on Pleading, c. 2, s. 5, r. 6; Moore v. The Earl of Plymouth, 3 B. & Ald. 66); and the Court, therefore, will not look to the facts, to see whether a different statement might have been made. Then, if there were no actual demise, Jordan could not justify in his own right, though he might in the right of his landlord. Jordan is not even shewn to be the “on-coming tenant;” because the contract, unless in writing, would be good for nothing; a parol agreement for a lease for a year cannot be enforced as an agreement, though it would be good as a lease, if the lessee had entered. (Inman v. Stamp, 1 Stark. 12; Edge v. Strafford, 1 Cr. & Jerv. 391.) Before verdict this is an objection upon general demurrer. (1 Wms. Saund. 276 a (n.); Case v. Barber, Sir T. Raym. 450, and T. Jones; and Harden v. Clifton, 1 Q.B. 522). Secondly, the replication is good, the plea sets up no authority derived from the plaintiff, as in Bowler v. Nicholson, where the plaintiff was the lessee, and the defendants were the servants of the lessor. In this case the tenant had no authority to give; and so in Edwards v. Pinniger, although the tenancy was involved in the plea, a replication de injuria was allowed. Neither does the plea claim any interest in the land, according to the 2nd Resolution in Crogate's case. This is a right of entry for a particular purpose; it is a mere privilege, not an interest in the land. Doe dem. Strickland v. Spence (6 East, 120); Parker v. Staniland (11 East, 362); but even if the Court should think that the plea shews a present demise to Jordan, still it does not set up such an interest as falls within the meaning of the 2nd Resolution in Crogate's case; for that must be “an interest in the realty or an interest in or title to chattels, averred in the plea, and existing prior to and independently of the act complained of, which interest or title would be in issue on the general replication;” as was said by Parke, J. in Selby v. Bardons (3 B. & Adol. 2, 13.)

Hugh Hill, in reply.—Every ambiguity is cured by pleading over; Fletcher v. Pagon (3 B. & C. 192), which disposes of the first objection to the plea; and the second objection could only be taken on special demurrer, for in a declaration it clearly would not be necessary to state that the agreement was in writing; and Case v. Barber is no authority, because it was decided before the stat. of 4 Anne, c. 16. Merely to aver that it was in writing would not be enough, if the plea is to shew a compliance with the Statute of Frauds; but it must shew a signature by the party to be charged; and who could that be in this case? Laythorp v. Bryant (2 Bing. N.C. 735) shews that a contract within that statute need not be signed by the party enforcing it, but it must by the party sought to be charged. But the replication is bad; for the defendant sets up an authority, to the granting of which the plaintiff is a party. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was a declaration in trespass, quare clausum fregit; the defendant pleaded that one Bosville was seised in fee of the locus in quo; that the plaintiff held of him, as tenant from year to year, upon certain terms, and amongst others, that the said Bosville, the landlord, or his on-coming tenant, at any time after the 1st of January preceding the 6th of April, when the plaintiff should have given or received notice to quit, was to have full liberty to enter and plough the arable land held by the plaintiff. The plea then averred notice to quit on the 6th of April, 1845, and that Bosville on the 1st of January, 1845, agreed to let to William Jordan, and that William Jordan agreed to take as tenant from year to year from and after the expiration of the plaintiff's tenancy; that the said Jordan therefore became the on-coming tenant, and the defendant, as his servant and by his command, at several times when, &c. being after 1st Jan. 1845, entered to plough the land. The plaintiff (admitting the locus in quo to be the soil and freehold of Bosville), replied de injuria to the rest of the plea, and the defendant demurred to this replication on the ground that the plaintiff could not in that form put in issue an authority in law derived from the plaintiff; and we are of opinion the defendant is right, and entitled to our judgment. In this case the authority of the defendant arises out of the relation created by the act of parties, one of whom was the plaintiff; the defendant, therefore, entered under an authority that is proved to be derived from the plaintiff himself, and therefore the case comes within the third resolution in Crogate's case (8 Co. Rep. 66, b.) The plaintiff, by the terms under which he held the land, gave an authority under which alone the defendant would have power to enter. We therefore think the replication is bad, for the reason specially assigned on demurrer. It was said, on the part of the plaintiff, that the plea was bad for not stating an actual demise of the premises to Jordan, but only an agreement for a demise, which was not stated to be in writing. We do not think it necessary to consider whether the agreement between Bosville and Jordan did amount to an actual lease at the time of the entry or not, or whether it was necessary to be in writing, as we think enough was stated on the record to warrant the allegation expressly made that Jordan was the on-coming tenant; an allegation which might have been traversed; and if it were an objection available at all, we think it would have been on special, and not on general demurrer. On the whole, therefore, the judgment is for the defendant, and we apply the same judgment in five other cases in which the same person is plaintiff.

Judgment for defendant.

Wednesday, May 6.

REG. v. BRADFORD. (a)

Evidence of chargeability—Residence of pauper in parish—Relief by officer of district.

This was an appeal against an order of removal in which the Sessions had confirmed the order, subject to the opinion of the Court on a special case upon (inter alia) whether there was sufficient evidence of the chargeability of the pauper. The evidence of the chargeability was that of the relieving officer who had relieved the pauper, but it did not shew that the relief had been administered to the pauper in the parish to which he was said to be chargeable, nor when the pauper resided when the relief was administered. It was also objected, that it did not shew sufficiently that the relief was given by the relieving officer in respect of the parish, he being also relieving officer of the district.

Hodges and Fitzgerald, in support of the order.

Pashley, contra.—There is no power of removal unless the pauper is at the time chargeable to a parish, and if it be not stated that he is relieved in the parish, the relief would be evidence of his being settled in the parish, and no cause for his removal. Reg. v. Bolton (14 L. J. M. C. 127), and Reg. v. Manchester (1b. 126; 1 New Mag. Cas. 346), are distinguishable. The relief also is not shewn to have been given by the officer in respect of the respective parish.

By the COURT.—The objection is good.

Order of Sessions quashed.

REG. v. KIGHTLEY.

Stamp—Copies of documents.

The stamp is no part of the document to which it is affixed, and no description of it need, therefore, be sent with a copy of the document, under 4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, s. 79.

On appeal, the Sessions had confirmed the order of removal, subject to the opinion of this Court as to whether the copies of examinations sent by a removing parish in support of an order for the removal of a pauper, for whom it was sought to set up a settlement by apprenticeship in the appellant parish, was sufficient if they contained a copy of the indenture, which was stated to have been produced before removing magistrates, duly stamped.

Pashley and Overend, in support of the order of Sessions.—The stamp is no part of the deed. It is only considered preliminary to the deed being put in evidence. The reception of evidence from a witness, in fact incompetent, is no objection to the order. Reg. v. Allenam (10 A. & E. 699; Reg. v. East Knyle (Burr. S. C. 151); Reg. v. Silvester (2 Q.B.), were also cited. The stamp is never set out on copy of a deed.

Hall and Ingham, contra.—It is essential to the acquisition of a settlement by apprenticeship, that the indenture be duly stamped. The appellants, therefore, ought to have full information as to the stamp. The allegation that it was duly stamped is nothing, for that is a conclusion of law. It may even have been stamped only just before the production, which would be insufficient in law.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—I am very much inclined to support the principle which requires that all the examinations shall be sent by the respondent parish, but even the most general words must have some reasonable construction, and here I think that the stamp cannot be said to be part of the document. It is not necessary to make a perfect copy of the indenture. The indenture is operative without it, and if it is received, it may be presumed to have been received, and also that it was stamped at the right time. It is said that this will defeat the object of the Act, but this is not so if people will act with common prudence. When they hear that a deed is stamped, they may, if they doubt the correctness of the stamp, ask for it to be shewn to them. If so reasonable a request were refused, it would be a justification for appealing.

PATTESON, J.—I had some doubt upon this, but, in truth, the stamp is no part of the instrument.

WILLIAMS, J. and WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

Order of Sessions confirmed.

REG. v. MOUSLEY, Clerk.

Quo warranto—Public and private office.
An office of a public nature created by Act of Parliament may be the subject of a writ of quo warranto, although, strictly speaking, there is no usurpation upon the Crown.

But the law as to private offices is not altered at all by the decision of Reg. v. Darley, and a quo warranto will not lie for the office of master of a hospital, founded by a private individual, and having no public duties or jurisdiction.

The duty of preaching a certain number of sermons is not such a public duty as will render the office a public office, nor does the granting of a charter, in accordance with the provisions of a will, or the passing of an Act of Parliament to give greater effect to it, alter the nature of the office.

This was a rule nisi for a quo warranto against the Rev. Mr. Mousley, as master of the hospital and free-school of Sir John Port, knight, in Etwall and Repton, upon various grounds, which, from the course of the argument, it becomes unnecessary to particularize.

(a) This and the following case has been delayed by the accidental loss of the manuscript.

Sir John Port, knight, by his will, dated 9th March, 1556, willed and directed, that six of the poorest of Etwall parish should have weekly, for ever, 20 pence a piece over and beside such lodging as he, the said testator or his executors, should provide for them in an almshouse, which should be built in or near the churchyard of Etwall aforesaid. And the testator further willed and directed that the same sums of money so to be paid to the poor aforesaid should be had and received out of the lands, &c. limited to the performance of the said will. And the said testator, by his will, devised to Sir Thomas Gyfford, knight, Richard Harpur, esq., Thomas Brewster, vicar of Etwall, J. Harpur, and Simon Starkey, and to their heirs, certain estates, upon condition to find a person qualified as therein mentioned, freely to keep a grammar-school in Etwall aforesaid, or Repton, otherwise Reppington, from time to time for ever. And the said testator directed that his said executors should, by license from the Crown, amortise to the use of the said school, the said estate. And the said testator directed his said testator's issue male to have, &c. for ever; and if the said testator had no issue male, then his (the said testator's) executors during their time, and after their decease, his (said testator's) heirs, or such others as he should by deed appoint. By charter dated June 12, 1622, after reciting the will of Sir John Port, from which it appeared that a certain hospital, or reputed hospital, had been built at Etwall in which six poor people had been for many years maintained and relieved; and that a certain house or free school had been erected at Repton, and that the estates devised by the will of the said Sir John Port had been conveyed to the said Sir Thomas Gyfford, Richard Harpur, Thomas Brewster, John Harpur, and Simon Starkey, and their heirs, for the maintenance of the said poor people, and schoolmaster and usher; and it having then been ascertained that the funds arising from the said estates would then competently maintain one master of the said hospital, one schoolmaster, two ushers, twelve poor men, and four poor scholars, Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, Philip, Lord Stanhope, and Sir Thomas Gerard, knight, then the co-heirs of the said Sir John Port, petitioned the King that a corporation should be had of the said master, schoolmaster, ushers, poor men, and poor scholars; that there should be in the said parish of Etwall one hospital for the maintenance of poor people; that there should be in the parish of Repton one free grammar school for the instruction of youth in grammar and other learning; that the said hospital and free-school should consist of one master, one schoolmaster, two ushers, twelve poor men, and four poor scholars, and should have continuance for ever. And it was constituted and granted that they should be from time to time one body corporate in deed and in name, by the name of the master, schoolmaster, ushers, poor men, and poor scholars of the hospital and free school of Sir John Port, knight, in Etwall and Repton, alias Reppington, of the foundation of the said Sir John Port. That they should have perpetual succession; that they should have one common seal. And to the intent that the said revenues might be more regularly and carefully dispensed, there should be from time to time one or more governors or superintendent governors over the said hospital and school, and over the master of the said hospital, schoolmaster, ushers, poor men, and poor scholars, who should have power to correct and reform such abuses as should happen. And that the governor or governors, superintendent or superintendents of the said hospital and school, or the greater number of them, should have full power and authority at all times, at their will and pleasure, to make, constitute, and ordain, under the hands and seals of him and them, for the well governing and ordering the said master, schoolmaster, &c. That Sir John Harpur, knight, was appointed the first governor and superintendent of the said school and hospital; and after his decease, the said Henry Earl of Huntingdon, Philip Lord Stanhope, and Sir Thomas Gerard, and their heirs for ever, should be the governors and superintendents of the said hospital and school. That they should have the appointment of all future masters of the said hospital and masters of the school, poor men in the hospital, and poor scholars upon the foundation. And it was directed that it should be lawful for the said Earl of Huntingdon, Philip Lord Stanhope, and Sir Thomas Gerard, and their several heirs, or the greater number of them, to elect, nominate, and appoint any fit person or persons to be master of the said hospital, and schoolmaster and ushers of the said school; and to elect, nominate, and appoint, in their turns, nine of the twelve poor men of the said hospital, and three of the poor scholars of the school; and the three other men in the hospital were to be elected from time to time by the heirs of John Harpur, esq. which nomination and election have been from time to time made in pursuance of this authority. And by the said charter it was directed, that when it should happen that the said master, schoolmaster, ushers, poor men, and poor scholars should depart this life, or from any of the places or offices in the said hospital or free school be removed, it should be lawful for the said Henry Earl of Huntingdon, Philip Lord Stanhope, Sir Thomas Gerard, and John Harpur, and their several heirs, to whom or to whose turn it should appertain, from time to time to nominate and place one other fit person instead of any one so dying or being removed, to elect and choose one fit person into every such place after it should become vacant into the place of the master of the hospital, schoolmaster, ushers, poor men and poor scholars, or any of them so becoming void, within thirteen weeks after he or they should have notice from the master of the hospital, schoolmaster, and ushers, for the time being, or any two of them, that any such place was void. Then follow the qualifications of the master of the hospital, schoolmaster, &c. and, amongst the rest, the following as to the master of the hospital. "That the master of the said hospital should be a master of arts, at least, of one of the universities of Oxford or Cambridge, and a preacher of God's holy word; that the said master should preach every Sunday once in the parish church of Etwall aforesaid (except he should procure some other able and fit person to preach there in his stead), and that he should twice every day in the week say common prayers in the said church at due and seasonable hours, to the said poor and others that would hear the same. That the said master of the said hospital shall be continually resident in Etwall, without absence above forty days in any one year, and that for the time of his absence he should procure his place to be supplied, as well with one sermon every Sunday, as with common prayers twice in every week day, to be said at the time aforesaid. That the said master of the said hospital should have for his salary or wages yearly 20l. to be paid as therein mentioned." By an Act of Parliament passed for extending the objects of the charity, the said will and charter were confirmed; and, amongst other provisions, the poor men and poor scholars upon the foundation were to be increased; exhibitions were to be granted; governors under disability were to act by their committees or guardians. The affairs of the charity were to be conducted (but without prejudice to the powers and privileges of the governors for the time being of the said hospital and school) by a court of managers. And in the last clause but one of this Act, the charter was to remain in force, except as far as varied or altered by such Act. The late Dr. William Sleath was head master of the school at Repton for about thirty years; and upon the death of the Rev. Mr. Chamberlayne (master of the hospital) Dr. Sleath was appointed master of the hospital in his stead; and he so continued to act until the year 1842, when he became indebted to the corporation. It was agreed by Lord Hastings and Lord Chesterfield that the Rev. Mr. Mousley, the vicar of Etwall, should be deputy-master of the hospital, and should receive the rents and perform the duties in the place of Dr. Sleath, and that the doctor's salary should go in part discharge of the debt due to the corporation; but it was distinctly understood that the Rev. Mr. Mousley should not be appointed master upon the death of the doctor, except he should be considered the most fitting person to fill the office. Dr. Sleath died in the latter end of October following; Lord Hastings was then in Scotland, and Lord Chesterfield in London, and they were each apprised of the fact, and requested to state whether they wished the Rev. W. Mousley to proceed with the duties of the office; when Lord Chesterfield replied, he wished him to do so, and he should have much pleasure in signing his appointment at a future day. Mr. Mousley (the father of the Rev. W. Mousley) afterwards, at Lord Hastings' request, saw him upon the subject of a new appointment, and told him of Lord Chesterfield's wishes upon the subject; Lord Hastings hesitated, but ultimately said, "Let your son go on until Lord Chesterfield and I shall meet, and I have no doubt we shall agree in the appointment." No form of appointment was prescribed by the charter. Sir John Gerard, the third governor recognized in the charter, was a Catholic, and in consequence of an impression that Sir John could not act, he was not applied to in the first instance; but seeing this hesitation on the part of Lord Hastings, and believing that his lordship had a friend he wished to appoint master of the hospital, whose habits and doctrines were very different from those of the vicar of Etwall, and being also advised that Sir John was competent to act, Mr. Mousley, the father, applied to Sir William Stanley, to request Sir John to concur in the appointment, which he did, and his appointment was signed accordingly. Lord Hastings lived for a year and a half after this period, but he took no steps to question this appointment; and the master signed leases and did every other act as fully as any former master had done in the meantime. John Jennings, clerk, vicar of Etwall, was appointed first master of the hospital under the charter, and all the subsequent masters of the hospital, seven in number, were vicars of Etwall, until Mr. Cockburne's incumbency in the year 1786, who, from distressed circumstances, could not reside upon his living, and then the subsequent masters of the hospital, when the office became vacant, were appointed from the curates of Etwall. The Judges of Assize for the county of Derby, on the 12th of June, 1693, appointed upon a vacancy requiring to be filled up by them, Ellis Cunliffe, clerk, Vicar of Etwall, master of the said hospital. The appointments of masters of the hospital and masters of the school, as well as poor men and poor scholars, have almost invariably been concurred in by the Gerard family from the time of the charter to the present time; and those appointments have almost always been made separately by the governors in consequence of their residing so far apart; and the Gerard family very frequently appointed a deputy to act for them in their absence.

Peacock (May 23, 1845) shewed cause, and the Court desired the question whether a quo warranto would lie to be alone argued. Assuming that Mr. Mousley has usurped the office of master of the hospital, no right of prerogative of the Crown has been usurped thereby. In Rex v. Shepherd (4 T. R. 381), an application was made that an information in the nature of a quo warranto might be filed, calling on the defendants to shew by what authority they claimed the office of churchwardens of Newark-upon-Trent. Lord Kenyon, C. J. was at first disposed to allow the question to be discussed, whether such an information could be granted, where there was not an usurpation on the rights and prerogative of the Crown; but on a subsequent day, and after conference with the other judges, he said that the Court ought not to listen to the application, for that it was destitute of every legal principle; and he referred to R. v. Daubeny (2 Str. 1196), and in which the Court had decided similarly. In the case of R. v. Ramsden (3 A. & E. 456), it was held by Little and Paterson, J. J. dubitante Lord Denman, C. J. that a quo warranto information does not lie for the office of governor and director, elected annually by rated inhabitants, under a local Act for the government of the poor, and the maintenance of the nightly watch; and having power to make orders to regulate the poor and the watching; to determine how much money shall be raised for the poor and the watch (for which amount the inhabitants are to make rates, subject to a power in the governors to rectify omissions or mistakes, and to an appeal to the quarter sessions), to purchase and hold real and personal property, including all the money raised under the Act; to erect buildings; to borrow money on the credit of the rates, for the purposes of the Act; to appoint and remove treasurers, and salaried clerks, collectors, and other officers, who are to account to them; to appoint watchmen and beadle, who are to be sworn in as constables before a justice, and to be under their control; to name sixteen persons, from whom the justices are to select four overseers; and to sue and be sued in the name of one of themselves, or of their clerk. The opinion of the majority of the Court in the case of R. v. Hanley (3 A. & E. 463) was similar. This office does not exist for any public purpose; neither is it connected with any franchise of the Crown; there is no jurisdiction attached to it, no public trust to be fulfilled.

Whitehurst, Q. C. and Gale, contra.—The Court ought to grant the application, in order that the question whether a quo warranto will lie may be raised on the record. If it be refused, the decision will be final. In R. v. Marsden (3 Burr. 1812), Lord Mansfield, C. J. had some doubt whether a quo warranto would lie for usurping a fair or market. It was there put on the practice of the Court before the 9 Anne, c. 20, and it was ordered that search be made for precedents. The case of R. v. Gregory (4 T. R. 241 a.) shews that Lord Mansfield afterwards changed his opinion, and thought that in such a case it would lie. The cases R. v. Willis (5 T. R. 875), R. v. M'Kay (5 B. & C. 641) turn upon whether the right usurped was one that gave a claim to costs under the 9th Anne, c. 20, which shews that the question was that put by Lord Mansfield as to the previous practice of the Court. The 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, s. 5, does not restrain the issuing such an information, if the practice of the Court permit it. R. v. Howell (Cases temp. Lord Hardwicke, 247.) In the case of R. v. Ogden (10 B. & C. 230), this Court held that an information in the nature of a quo warranto could not be filed at the instance of an individual for usurping a franchise of a private nature, not connected with public government. But that was questioned in R. v. Allwood (4 B. & Ad. 481.) The two cases cited on the other side (R. v. Ramsden, and R. v. Hanley), are not cases of usurpation of a franchise erected by the Crown, to which the old writ, for which this information has been substituted, applied. Here the office exists by charter, and by Act of Parliament, which are based on the will of the founder. And there is the duty of preaching sermons, which is a duty imposed for the benefit of the public, and in which the public has an interest. The charter is more extensive than the will, and it is under the charter that the lands are now held. In Wilkinson v. Malin (2 C. & J. 636) it was held that a trust to apply certain funds "towards the repairs of the church of W. the payment of the fifteenths, and relief of the poor of W. buying of armour and setting forth soldiers, and repairing Sawbridge-bridge, within the parish of W."

was of a public nature. R. v. White (5 A. & E. 613); R. v. Carmarthen (2 Burr. 869), were also cited.

PATTERSON, J.—The question arises in the case of Reg. v. Darley, now in the House of Lords; this case, therefore, must stand over until that shall have been decided.

JUDGMENT.

On Monday, May 4, the judgment was delivered by PATTERSON, J.—This is a case which was argued in the absence of my Lord, before my brothers Coleridge, and Wightman, and myself, and which stood over in consequence of the dependency, before the House of Lords, of a case of Reg. v. Darley, relating to an office in Ireland, in which it was thought probable that some principles of law applicable to the present case might be laid down. I do not go over what the actual object of this motion was, because it appeared sufficiently upon the argument which took place at the time. It was an application for a quo warranto, calling upon the defendant to shew cause by what authority he exercised the office of master of a hospital that was founded many years ago by a private individual, and there having been a charter granted by the Crown, there had been of late years an Act of Parliament to increase the powers of the corporation under the charter, and to make some alterations with respect to the management of the hospital. The case of Reg. v. Darley has been decided, and undoubtedly extends the limits of the writ of quo warranto, beyond those which at one time were considered proper, inasmuch as it establishes that an office of a public nature, created by Act of Parliament, may be the subject of proceedings by writ of quo warranto, although, strictly speaking, there is no usurpation upon the Crown. That case certainly has established this point. There have been several decisions in this court in which the contrary was held, which must be considered undoubtedly as overruled. But that case leaves the law precisely as it was as to offices of a private nature. Here the office is that of master of a hospital founded by a private individual, by will, having no public duties or jurisdiction of any kind. This was so clear, that the counsel in argument were obliged to contend that the provision in the will, that the master should preach a certain number of sermons in the parish church, created a public duty; but it is obvious that the founder could not confer the right so to preach without the concurrence of the ecclesiastical authority, and the public had nothing to do with it, nor any right to enforce the performance of that duty. It is true a charter was obtained from the Crown, according to the will of the founder, in order to incorporate the members of that foundation; but that alone is immaterial, because the Crown neither acted in the foundation nor reserved to itself any control over it. An Act of Parliament was obtained in modern times to extend that foundation, and make some alterations which, by change of circumstances, had become desirable, but it did not create a new corporation, nor did it confer any jurisdiction of a public nature, nor enjoin any public duty of this sort. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that the writ of quo warranto is not applicable to an office of this sort, and that the rule for granting it must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

REG. V. CONYERS AND OTHERS.

Mandamus to verderers of the forest of Waltham to enrol a license to sport in the forest.

The Chief Justice in Eyre of the Forest of Waltham having granted to one E. J. W. a general license to sport over the whole of the forest, many parts of which were in the occupation of private proprietors, having therein a freehold interest in possession, provided that it was brought to the next forest Court to be enrolled, and the verderers of the forest at the next Court having refused to enrol it, this Court refused to issue a peremptory mandamus to compel the enrolment on the ground that the license was bad in part, so far as it assumed to authorize the grantee to sport over the lands of private proprietors; and that even if they could direct its enrolment, as to the royal lands within the forest, still the Chief Justice in Eyre having power to compel the verderers to do all lawful acts, this Court ought not to interfere.

Mandamus to Henry John Conyers and others, esquires, verderers of the Forest of Waltham, in the county of Essex, reciting that the Right Honourable Thomas Grenville, Warden, Chief Justice, and Justice in Eyre of all Royal Forests, Chases, Parks, and Warrens on the south side of the Trent, did, on the 1st September, 1843, by writing under his hand and the seal of his office, as Chief Justice in Eyre, bearing date, &c. directed to all the officers of the Forest of Waltham, and reciting, &c. will and require all and singular the officers of the said forest, &c. that they, and every of them, should permit and suffer the said Edward Jones Williams, at all seasonable times, with one person in his company, on, from, and after the 1st day of September to the 12th day of February in every year, and at no other times, to hunt, hawk, course, set, shoot and fish in the public waters of the said forest; and to kill and carry away in and from the said forest and the limits thereof, all and all manner of beast and fowl of forest (red and fallow deer only excepted), and to keep and use all sorts of dogs, nets, and guns for that purpose, &c. provided that the said license was brought to the next Court to be held for the said forest, to be there enrolled amongst the records of the said Court; that a Court of Attachment of the said Forest of Waltham was held at Chigwell, in the said county of Essex, on the 11th day of Dec. 1843, before the defendants, then and still being verderers of the said forest, being the next Court held for the said forest after the granting of the said license; that at that Court the said E. J. Williams, by his attorney, brought the said license to be enrolled; and required the defendants to enrol the same, but that they neglected and refused to do so; and commanding the said defendants, at the next Court of Attachment of the said forest, to enrol, or cause to be enrolled, the said license.

Return: setting up in substance that the said E. J. W. was not at the time of granting the license, or since, seized or possessed of, or entitled to, the said forest, and the public waters thereof, or to the soil and land of or in the same, for any estate or interest whatever; that the license extended over lands and waters, in and over which the said E. J. W. had not any lordship, manor, reputed manor, forest, chase, park, or warren, or any estate, right, title, or interest whatsoever; but that it extended over various lands, within the said forest (specifying them), of which different persons named were seized for estates of freehold in possession, and of which they were the occupiers. That before the license had been brought for enrolment, the said E. J. W. had come upon the forest and killed beasts and fowls of the forest; that the defendants had not been required by the Warden, Chief Justice, and Justice in Eyre, or by any justices of the forest, or by any order of any Court of Justice Seat, or other Court, to enrol the said license; and that no appeal or application had been made to the said Warden, Chief Justice, or Justice in Eyre, or to any Court of Justice Seat, or other court of the forest, having appellate jurisdiction from the said Court of Attachment, or over the said verderers.

Demurrer thereto.

Watson, Q.C. (Bovill with him), was heard in support of the demurrer, in Hilary Term last (Jan. 24); and Marsh, contra, and Watson, Q.C. in reply, in last Easter Term (April 25); but it is not considered necessary to publish the arguments at length. The authorities referred to were the Charta Forestæ; Manwood (4th edit.), pp. 235, 865—77, 110, 115, 145, 188, 192, 332, 358, 384; In itinere de Deane, Sir W. Jones's R. 348; in *Itin. JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was a rule for a mandamus to the defendants, the verderers of Waltham Forest, commanding them to enrol a license granted to Edward J. Williams, to kill game in that forest. We have heard in this case a great deal of argument on points of curious learning, and two matters occur to us as raising objections to the issuing of a peremptory writ. The license was admitted to be bad in part, because it is in such general terms, that it gives to the grantee a right to sport over the lands of private proprietors in the forest, but was contended to be good with respect to the royal lands. The learned counsel argued that we ought to command the enrolment of the license as far as it is legal; but we feel an insuperable difficulty in directing the enrolment of a license to authorize unlawful acts; and though we were anxious to have furnished to us some authority on this point, none was found. The other objection is, that the verderers are officers of the court of the Chief Justice in Eyre, and he must have power to compel them to do what the law requires. This court is not to be used as an instrument for enforcing the process or authority of any other court; at least not without some urgent demand for such interference. There will, therefore, be judgment for the defendant.

Judgment for the defendant.

Monday, May 11.

DOE dem. MERRIGAN AND DALY v. DALY.

Ejectment by husband against wife.

There is no abstract rule of law prohibiting a husband from maintaining an action of ejectment against his wife. The Court, therefore, discharged a rule to set aside a verdict obtained upon that ground.

Ejectment.—The declaration contained two demises, one by the defendant's husband. At the trial a verdict was found for the lessor of the plaintiff; and a rule nisi had since been obtained on the part of the defendant for a nonsuit or new trial.

Petersdorff (on Thursday, May 7), shewed cause. The question is, whether ejectment can be brought by husband against wife; but after the wife has entered into the consent rule, she is estopped from raising that question; she has admitted herself a trespasser; and, therefore, the general rule that a husband cannot maintain an action against his wife will not apply. The Courts have, no doubt in many cases, summarily interfered to stop actions brought by the wife without the authority of the husband, in their joint names, or in the name of the husband alone, until indemnity was given, on the ground that the husband was the only person who had any interest in the subject-matter (Morgan v. Thomas, 2 Cr. & Mee. 388; Harrison v. Almond, 4 Dowl. 321); and in this case the wife might have applied for leave to plead specially, or in abatement. Ejectment is an action of trespass in its nature (Peggie's case, 9 Rep. 78), and, therefore, accord and satisfaction has been held a good plea in ejectment; and ancient demesne also has often been pleaded by leave of the Court. Alden's case (5 Rep. 105, a.); so in Phillips v. Bury, (Carth. 180), the Court ordered that defendant might plead specially that he was rector of Exeter college; and in actions of tort the wife could not give in evidence her coverture without pleading it; and in this form of action there is this further objection, that the husband is not the plaintiff; John Doe is the only plaintiff. (Doe dem. Fox v. Bromley, 6 Dowl. & E. 292.) After the consent rule has been entered into, the only question is as to the title; and the husband must have title against his wife. There is, therefore, no ground for disturbing this verdict.

Bramwell, contra.—Though assumpsit remedies may exist, the defendant is not thereby prevented from insisting that the action is not maintainable. The application for a new trial is a convenient substitute for a bill of exceptions; and the objection here taken would have formed the ground of a bill of exception. If the argument used against this rule be correct, every husband in the kingdom may make his wife the defendant in an action of ejectment. [PATTERSON, J.—He would be a bold man who would swear that his wife was tenant in possession.] It would not be very difficult to obtain that affidavit; but the action of ejectment supposes the defendant to be a trespasser against the lessor of the plaintiff at the time when the action is brought (Doe dem. Newby v. Jackson, 1 R. & C. 448, 454, per Bayley, J.); and it will not lie, therefore, where there is a subsisting negotiation for a tenancy; nor against one who has been admitted under an agreement for the sale of the premises, without a demand of possession; for in Doe dem. Lewis v. Beard (13 East, 210), it was held that even considering such lawful possession as a tenancy at will, the defendant's confession of a lease (by entering into the common rule) is not a constructive determination of the will whereon to maintain ejectment. Then, how can the wife, though she remain on the premises against her husband's will, be treated as a trespasser? In R. v. Smyth (1 Moo. & Rob. 157), Lord Tenterden, C. J. said: "A wife certainly cannot commit a trespass on the property of her husband," but added (that being the case of an indictment of the wife and others for a forcible entry on the property of the husband), "I am by no means satisfied that, if she comes with strong hand, she may not be indictable for a forcible entry, which proceeds on the breach of the public peace." Reliance, however, is placed upon the fiction of law, which makes John Doe, and not the husband, the plaintiff in the action; but, first, in actione juris semper subsistit æquitas; the rule being, that no fiction shall extend to work an injury (3 Black. Com. 43); and, secondly, if the fiction is to be employed against the defendant, it may also be used in his favour, and then, but for the lease to John Doe, the possession of the wife would not be unlawful; and John Doe had never demanded possession. Lastly, if it be asked, what remedy the husband has against his wife, the answer is, as to the detention of chattels against his will, none; but as to realty, if she is liable to indictment for forcible entry, she must also be liable to an indictment for a forcible detainer. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict obtained for the plaintiff ought not to be maintained, because it was proved that the defendant was the wife of one of the lessors of the plaintiff. We do not see how this can annul the effect of the consent rule, which puts in issue nothing but her title. It is said, that there is such a common interest between the husband and wife in this property, created by the relation of marriage, that the wife cannot by law be guilty of a trespass upon it. We cannot accede to this doctrine, for the relation of husband and wife at least does not justify her in taking possession of the property, and holding it, to his exclusion. The technical difficulty which is here used for the purpose of preventing the husband from recovering possession of the property, the whole of which undoubtedly belonged to him, is successfully met by a technical answer; for John Doe, and not the husband, is the plaintiff on the record. Something was said as to the necessity of demanding possession; we have seen, my brother Wightman's notes, and there are no circumstances in the case that make that material, or at all interfere with our decision. The rule, therefore, will be discharged. Rule discharged.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

April 21, May 7.

ZULUTKA v. MILLER.

Practice—Pleading—Issuability.

To an action upon a special agreement to construct a steam engine within a given time, whereby the plaintiff contracted to pay one-fourth part of the price immediately, one-fourth when the engine was half finished, and the other two instalments at different times, with a breach that the engine was not completed at the time agreed on, it is an issuable plea that, although the engine was half finished, the plaintiff did not nor would pay the second instalment.

Assumpsit.—The action was brought upon an agreement made between the plaintiff and the defendant, whereby it was agreed that the defendant should furnish for the plaintiff two double acting steam-engines, of the collective power of 250 horses, with every material part complete, and ready to be set to work, for 15,000*l.* and that the engines should be complete and ready to put on board in eight months from the date of the said agreement, and that the plaintiff should pay the said sum in the following manner; viz. one-fourth part on signing the agreement, one-fourth part when the engines were half finished, one-fourth part when the engines should be ready to be put on board, and one-fourth part when the engines were completed and fitted on board. The declaration averred payment by the plaintiff of one-fourth on the signing of the agreement, and alleged the plaintiff's readiness and willingness to perform the other part of the said agreement, with a breach that the engines were not complete and ready to be put on board within the eight months from the date of the agreement, or at any other time before the commencement of the suit. The defendant having obtained time to plead, upon the terms of pleading issuably, pleaded, that although after the making of the said agreement in the declaration mentioned, and within the space of eight months from the date of the said agreement and before the commencement of the suit, the said engines in the declaration mentioned, were by the defendant half finished, according to the terms and meaning of the said agreement, of which the plaintiff had notice, yet the plaintiff did not, nor would then, although requested by the defendant so to do, nor at any other time before the commencement of the suit, pay to the defendant the said one-fourth part of the said sum of 15,000*l.* or any part thereof, according to the terms and meaning of the said agreement, and from thenceforth wholly refused so to do, contrary to the terms and meaning of the said agreement. The plaintiff thereupon signed judgment as for want of a plea. The defendant had obtained a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the judgment should not be set aside, against which, on April 21st,

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. shewed cause.—The plea is not issuable. The effect of it would be, that if the fourth part of the price were not paid within an hour of the engines being half finished, that would be an absolute discharge of the defendant. To constitute a defence of this kind there must be a total failure of consideration. Where part that is to be done is done, there is a partial consideration, and the only remedy is by a cross action. (Pordage v. Cole, 1 Wms. Saunders, 319, 1.) Here there might be a perfect breach upon the part of the defendants, consistently with the plea, which would be sustained by proof that the engines were half finished a moment before the eight months expired. A plea is only issuable when it tenders an issue that would try the cause on the merits. This plea would not decide the merits, and may, therefore, be treated as a nullity. (Carpenter v. Creswell, 4 Bing. 409; Stevens v. Curling, 3 Bing. N.C. 355; Maitlock v. Kinglake, 10 A. & E. 50; Mackay v. Wood, 7 M. & W. 420.) In Steele v. Harmer 14 (M. & W. 136), Parke, B. says, "An issuable plea is one that puts the merits of the cause either on the facts or the law in issue, which will decide the action. A plea may ultimately turn out to be bad, but it is not therefore non-issuable; for if it were, a plea could not be issuable unless it were also a good one." This case is consistent with the general rule. A plea which does tender an issue in law or fact that goes to the merits, is an issuable plea. Even though a bad plea, yet if it appear an honest plea the party may be put to demur. The object of the condition of pleading issuably is to protect the plaintiff from a demurrer and from dilatory pleading. A plea had on demurrer is, therefore, not issuable, unless it raises a fair substantial question of law, really arising in the case, and which will decide the case. In Staples v. Holdsworth (4 Bing. N.C. 144), it was held that a defendant who was under terms could not plead the bankruptcy of one of the plaintiffs since action brought. The rule to be collected from Humphreys v. Earl of Waldegrave (6 M. & W. 622) is, that a plea is an issuable plea which tenders some matter upon which, if issue be taken, the case will be decided upon the merits. This is the leading principle of all the cases. The time granted is a departure from the established rule as to the time to plead in favour of the defendant, and to that indulgence is asured the condition that the defendant should honestly make his defence. The payment of the second instalment is no condition precedent to the defendant's obligation to complete his engagement. [ERLE, J.—Suppose the first instalment had not been paid. The plaintiff avers payment of the first instalment, and treats that as a condition precedent.] I think that averment unnecessary. But there is a difference between a partial and a total failure of consideration. [ERLE, J. referred to Wilkins v. Reynolds (2 B. & Ad. 883).] The foundation of that decision was that the acts were concurrent. That case does not impeach my position. The times for payment are here fixed by events, and it is the same as if particular times were appointed. He referred also to Wilkinson v. Page (7 Scott N.R. 961).

Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule.—Steele v. Harmer (14 M. & W. 136) is in my favour. If the defendant puts on record a plea which has for its object really and fairly to decide the question, either on the law or the facts, that is an issuable plea. It has been repeatedly held that a general demurrer is an issuable plea, and the same doctrine applies to a plea which leads naturally to a general demurrer. There is no more dilatoriness in one than in the other. This is the only plea upon the record, so that it will decide the case. Wilkinson v. Page (7 Scott, N. R. 961) shews that it is not necessary that the plea should go to the merits of the cause in the proper sense. [CRESSWELL, J.—Has it not been usually considered that an issuable plea must tender some issue; that is to say, either you must demur generally, and so tender an issue in law, or you must tender an issue in fact? ERLE, J.—If the plea is a good plea, a traverse of it will decide the matter. The question seems to me to come to this—would a demurrer to this be a frivolous demurrer? All I need establish is, that the plea shews a non-compliance with a condition precedent to that part of the contract which the plaintiff says is broken. The plaintiff's cause is based upon the assumption that time is of the essence of the contract. All he complains of is, that the work is not finished within the eight months. The defendant says that time is only of the essence of the contract upon the condition of the instalments being regularly paid. To treat this plea as a nullity would be going farther than any case that has yet been decided. Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court was now delivered by TINDAL, C. J. (after stating the facts and pleadings in the case).—Upon the present motion the question arises, whether the plea pleaded was an issuable plea. It was put in within the usual order for time to plead, and the plea objected to appears to have been pleaded with a view to raise the question whether the defendant was bound to complete and deliver the engines under the agreement, if the stipulated payments were not made by the plaintiff as the work proceeded. It is not necessary for us, in the present state of proceedings, to pronounce an opinion whether the plea in question is a good plea or not. It is not manifestly a bad plea; on the contrary, it may be thought to raise a fair question of doubt in a matter of law, the decision of which will determine the legal rights of the parties on the merits. It was said by the Court of Exchequer, in the late case of Steele v. Harmer (4 M. & W.) that an issuable plea is that which puts the merits of the case either on the facts or the law in issue, and which would decide the action. A plea may undoubtedly turn out to be bad, but it is not therefore non-issuable. This is in conformity with the case of Mackay v. Wood (7 M. & W.) where it was said by Mr. Baron Parke, that "that is to be considered as an issuable plea on which a decision on demurrer or by a jury would determine the action on the merits." We think the plea in this case does raise a question of law on those points, and that the defendant is entitled to have the deliberate judgment of the Court, or even of a Court of Error. The plea is calculated to bring the question to a decision on the merits without any unfair delay or embarrassment to the plaintiff. We think, therefore, we shall best meet the justice of the case by following the course adopted in the above cited case of Steele v. Harmer, and the rule will be made absolute, the costs to be costs in the cause. Rule accordingly.

May 5 and 7.

KEYS v. HARWOOD.

A entered into a written contract with B, for the board and lodging of A, and it was agreed thereby that B should take certain furniture of A in payment of the debt. Before the time during which the contract was to be performed had elapsed, the furniture was seized by a judgment creditor of A.—Held, that B might recover in an action of debt under the common count for board and lodging.

This was an action of debt containing the common counts for board, lodging, and necessaries, for money lent, and on the account stated. Pleas. 1. Nunquam indebtedus. 2. Payment. 3. Accord and satisfaction. The action was tried before Maule, J. at the second sittings for Middlesex in Easter Term, and a verdict found for the plaintiff for 29*l.* At the trial the defendant put in a written agreement, and then contended that this form of action was not sustainable; or that the agreement amounted to conclusive proof of either the second or third plea.

Byles, Serjt. having moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, the Court took time to consult Maule, J. and then delivered the following judgment, in which all the important facts of the case appear:—

TINDAL, C. J.—The objection raised in this case before my brother Maule was, that the action was wrongly conceived in point of form, and that, instead of being framed as an action of debt for board and lodging, to be paid for on request, the plaintiff ought to have declared on a special agreement, stating that there had been made between the parties the written contract which was produced at the trial. By this agreement the plaintiff agreed to board and lodge the defendant and his family at the weekly sum therein mentioned, and in payment for the board and lodging agreed to take the furniture deposited on the premises, and valued at 28*l.* 10*s.* and undoubtedly if nothing had taken place after the contract was made, so as to prevent the possibility of its performance, the objection would have been sustainable, but after the contract was made, one of the creditors of the defendant recovered judgment against him, and seized and sold the furniture in question under an execution against the defendant. We consider the case, therefore, to be the same in effect as if the defendant had taken away the furniture and sold it himself, and the plaintiff is, in consequence, entitled to recover the value of the board and lodging by the ordinary action of debt, as if the special contract had never existed. This seems to be the principle laid down by Lord Tenterden in the case of Baines v. Payne (1 Chitty on Pleading, 357), and we therefore think the verdict ought not to be disturbed. Rule refused.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE Charitable Trusts Bill has been thrown out of the House of Lords by a majority of one. This is the more remarkable, as last year a measure almost similar to it, but a little more stringent, passed the same House unanimously, and was only prevented from becoming law by the pressure of other business in the Commons, where no serious opposition to it was contemplated. It is obvious that this change in its treatment is the result of the changed position of the government from which it has emanated, rather than of altered views of the utility of the measure itself. The speech of the Lord Chancellor abounded in forcible illustrations of the mischiefs the Bill was intended to meet, and his narratives of the abuses existing in various Charities were demonstrative of the necessity for some interference. Indeed, the abuses were not denied by any of the speakers; they differed only as to the remedy. Lord CAMPBELL thought that the Court of Chancery was the best tribunal for the purpose, but he forgot to inform us how small Charities were to meet the cost of setting that Court in motion. Lord LYNTHURST was more successful in shewing the evils to be overcome than the excellence of the instrument he had devised for the purpose, and on that weak point his adversaries seized. The result is, that the abuses are to thrive for another year at least, and they who objected to the measure, on the ground that it was not sufficiently stringent, will have to wait a long time before another opportunity will offer of carrying out their wishes. They should have modified this bill to their views, made it more efficient for its purpose, and removed some of its objectionable provisions, instead of rejecting it because it was not in all things framed to their fancies. But, perhaps, after all, it was against the authors of the measure, rather than against the measure itself, that the attack was made, and the defeat had other objects than its apparent one. No other Law Bills have made any progress, nor are they likely to advance during the present Session. There are rumours of an almost immediate dissolution.

Bills in Progress.

COUNTY RATES.—By a Bill in the House of Commons (introduced by Mr. Frewen and Sir Howard Elphinstone) it is proposed to amend the law so as to provide more certain means of information for making county-rates, and for the more correctly and equitably making county-rates. After the passing of the bill justices are not to allow rates unless they are satisfied by evidence that all the property in the parish has been rated according to the full and fair value thereof. Within two years after the passing of the measure, justices of the peace are in the several counties to make new rates or assessments, and also, within the period of every seven successive years, make a new rate, according to the returns ordered to be made by virtue of this Act.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

BURDENS AFFECTING REAL PROPERTY.

MONDAY, May 18.—Lord BEAUMONT brought up the report of the select committee appointed to inquire into the burdens affecting real property; and moved that the report and minutes of the proceedings before the committee be printed. Agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SMALL DEBTS ACTS.

MONDAY, May 18.—Mr. R. V. SMITH inquired whether the Government intended to introduce a general small debts Bill, as he understood they had stopped all the local Bills that were before the house. —Sir J. GRAHAM replied, that he had certainly notified to the parties promoting local Bills for the establishment of small debt courts, that they should suspend them till opportunity was afforded to the Government of introducing a general measure. The President of the Council was about to introduce into the other House a Bill, which would be the complement of the measure adopted last session, carrying it into general execution without further legislative interposition. The Bill would enable the Queen in Council to establish courts throughout England and Wales for the trial of causes for the recovery of debts under 20*l.* before a qualified judge, to regulate the procedure universally, and (as we understood) to establish a code of fees.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.

The LORD CHANCELLOR then moved the second reading of the Charitable Trusts Bill, and after expressing his surprise that a measure which had been before the House in two former sessions, and had only been dropped in consequence of the delay occasioned by other business, should now be the object of so much opposition, proceeded to state the grievances which it proposed to remedy. As the law now stood, the Court of Chancery was the sole tribunal which had power to inquire into the administration of charities; but though in some cases it was a proper tribunal, in others, and those the vast majority, it was the worst possible. It was only the large charities, in short, that could afford the expensive machinery of a Chancery suit, which, if applied to the poorer endowments, would swallow up all their funds. In any case of abuse, then, the smaller charities could not complain, because such a complaint would be their ruin; this was a state of things not to be endured, and the present Bill proposed to establish an independent tribunal, exercising a summary jurisdiction, and composed of commissioners who should have a right of calling on all charities for an account of their receipts and disbursements. Now it was this latter provision which had excited so much opposition, as the larger charities were unwilling to have their accounts examined, and declared, especially those of the city of London, that no abuses of administration had been committed, though it could be proved beyond a doubt, that abuses did exist, as in the case of the Mercers' Company, and others against which numerous informations had been filed. Nevertheless this opposition was so violent, that, rather than hazard the success of the whole measure, he had prepared a schedule, into which such of the charities as the House chose to exempt could be inserted in committee. The noble lord then adverted to the condition of the municipal charities, and stated that the present Bill proposed to vest all such trusteeships in the new commissioners; after which he sat down, calling on the House to permit the Bill to be read a second time, in spite of the opposition from without.—Lord COTTENHAM complained of the extraordinary course pursued by the Lord Chancellor with respect to this Bill; it had been before the House since February, and yet no notice had been given of the great alterations about to be proposed in it. It sounded very strange to exempt large companies from the operation of the measure, because they had been guilty of the very malversations which it aimed at preventing. After commenting on the way in which the amendments introduced last session had been treated, the noble lord went on to say that his objections to the Bill in its present form were quite independent of its applicability to charitable trusts. He had remarked that since 1841, the patronage of the Great Seal had enormously increased, while the business before the Court of Chancery had diminished. In its present state, he was quite certain that the machinery of the Court was sufficient, if properly applied, for the administration of all the charitable trusts of the kingdom, and that there was no need to increase the patronage of the Great Seal by a new set of commissioners. He also strongly objected to the inquisitorial powers granted to these commissioners, and, having pointed out the defects of the measure as applied to the different kinds of charities in the kingdom, declared his conviction that nothing could be more unjust or injurious to these charities than the present scheme, and concluded by moving that it should be read a second time that day six months.—Lord BROUGHAM had never heard of any court of justice so summary a condemnation as Lord Cottenham had pronounced against the Bill, and defended the Lord Chancellor from the charge of appointing commissioners for the sake of patronage. Lord Cottenham had avoided the sore subject of malversation, and founded his attacks on matters quite extraneous to the Bill, and yet it was certain that monstrous abuse of charitable funds had been practised and still existed.—Lord CAMPBELL was in favour of the centralization which would be introduced by the present measure, and thought it hard that, being the originator of the Bill in former sessions, he should now be ignorant of the amendments that he introduced in it until the second reading.—The Bishop of SALISBURY and Lord WHARTON expressed their intention of voting for the Bill. The House then divided on the question that the Bill be read a second time, when the numbers were—

THE BURDENS ON LAND.

OUR readers are doubtless aware that a Committee was appointed by the House of Lords in the first part of the present session to inquire into, and report upon, the peculiar burdens, if any, which land has to bear.

The twofold fruit of the Committee's labours is now before us in the shape of two reports, one adopted and presented to the House of Lords on Tuesday last, the other, prepared evidently with elaborate care and with considerable ability, but rejected upon a division by a majority of the Committee. The former may be considered as speaking the opinions of the Protectionist majority, the latter that of the Free Traders.

It is impossible for us to find room for even a summary of these important documents, of which that adopted extends to 12, and that rejected to 49 pages, but we subjoin the "Recommendations," with which each party concludes its report.

The following are the remedies suggested by the Protectionist majority:—

"1. The improvement of the law of real property, the simplification of title, and of the forms of conveyance, the establishment of some effective system for the registration of deeds.

"2. An extension of the measure of 1835, by relieving the counties and boroughs from the portion of expense to which they continue liable for criminal prosecutions as well as the maintenance and conveyance of prisoners. This measure, however, should be accompanied by an adoption on the part of the State of an effective control.

"3. The adoption of the liability of the owner of houses under the annual value of 10*l.* to the rates at which the same are assessed.

"4. Where establishments exist or may be required for the support of lunatics, and where there are obvious reasons, both of economy and of humanity, for centralizing the administration, and where, above all, the resources of the state can be made available, without any risk of aggravating or increasing the evil proposed to be remedied, the committee are not prepared to justify the imposition of the whole cost upon one description of property. The committee therefore submit, that the charge for the maintenance of pauper lunatics throughout the empire ought to be undertaken by the public.

"5. To a certain extent the observations made on lunatic asylums may be applied to some branches of the expenditure for the maintenance and relief of the poor. Mr. Cooke shews, from official documents, that the establishment charges, inclusive of salaries, amount to 17 per cent. on the total expenditure for the relief of the poor, and states that these charges might be provided for by the Government, without leading to any evil consequences in the administration of the Poor-law.

"6. A charge is periodically cast upon the land for the militia rate; this is not now levied, the militia being disembodied; but, considering the object of the militia to be general, and not confined to the interests of a particular class, the committee are of opinion that this charge should be provided for by Parliament, care being, however, taken, that if the public assume the responsibility of the charge, the Government should have authority to ensure the efficiency of the force.

"7. It is most desirable that the experiments for testing the process of malting barley for the purposes of fattening cattle should be repeated, with the co-operation of persons of acknowledged skill in agriculture.

"These measures appear to the committee to be necessary because they are just. They have confined their recommendations of change in the sources from which certain charges should be defrayed to matters in which every interest is equally concerned, and the expense of which ought to be shared by all.

"The committee considered themselves limited to an inquiry into the relative burdens on different descriptions of property within the kingdom: a more important consideration would probably be the proportion of burdens on the cultivators of land in this country as compared with those borne by the cultivators of foreign countries intended to be admitted into competition with them in the same market. On this subject some information has fallen from Messrs. Cramp and Banfield, who have been acquainted with the condition of farming in countries bordering on the Baltic and in the north of France, but the committee were of opinion their instructions precluded them from following up this description of inquiry.

"The committee have directed the minutes of evidence, with an appendix and index thereto, to be laid before your Lordships.

The "Recommendations" of the Free Trade section of the Committee are as follow:—

"1. The improvement of the law of real property, the simplification of titles and the forms of conveyance, the establishment of a general office for the registration of deeds; thus applying principles already adopted in Scotland, Ireland, and almost throughout the continent of Europe, whereby the security to landed property has been increased, and its value augmented several years' purchase.

"2. An extension of the measure of 1835, by relieving the counties and boroughs from the portion of expense to which they continue liable for criminal prosecutions. This measure, however, should be accompanied by an adoption, on the part of the state, of an effective control. The establishment of an office of public prosecutor, and the conduct of all prosecutions, is recommended in the strongest manner by the example of Scotland and of Ireland, as well as by the reason of the case.

"3. The revision of the stamp duties, not with a view to the reduction of revenue, but to a better apportionment of burdens—an adoption of an ad valorem scale of duty, relieving small properties from the present unjust and disproportionate charge, and making an equitable distribution of all duties on the sale and transmission of property, real and personal, whether during life or after decease, both on ordinary conveyances and in the shape of probate or legacy duties, so as to remedy all existing inequalities, and to repeal all undue and partial exemptions.

"4. The adoption of periodical and compulsory revaluations for the levy of all local rates, so as to avoid the injustice and inequality of the present most anomalous system. This is consistent with the recommendation of the commissioners on local rates, and with the evidence now taken.

"5. The consolidation of the present numerous rates, levied by multiplied and sometimes conflicting authorities. There now exist in law, if not in practice, 24 rates, and 54 species of officers for their imposition, levy, and administration. The number of these officers is now estimated at 180,204. The fact that many of these officers perform gratuitous service does not necessarily vary the case; it is far from being universally true that gratuitous service is always the cheapest.

"6. It has been explained by Mr. Blake, that the expense of erecting gaols, bridewells, shire halls, and similar buildings in Ireland is provided for by the public. Advances are made by the Treasury to meet these heavy branches of expenditure; these advances are made on the security of the county-rate, and are repayable, without interest, by easy instalments. There appears every reason why this system should be extended to Great Britain.

"7. Where new establishments are introduced, as in the last session, for the support of lunatics, and where there are obvious reasons, both of economy and of humanity, for centralising the administration, and where, above all, the resources of the State can be made available, without any risk of aggravating or increasing the evil proposed to be remedied, the committee are not prepared to justify the imposition of the whole cost upon one description of property. The committee therefore submit, whether the charge for the maintenance of lunatics in public asylums throughout the empire ought not to be undertaken by the public.

"8. More hesitation should undoubtedly be felt in respect to any part of the expenditure for the maintenance and relief of the poor; but, to a certain extent, the observations made on lunatic asylums may, with proper safeguards, be made applicable to other branches of medical relief.

"9. A charge is periodically cast upon the land for the militia rate; this is not now levied, the militia being disembodied; but, considering the object of the militia to be general, and not confined to the interests of a particular class, the committee are of opinion that this charge should be provided for by Parliament, care being, however, taken, that if the public assume the responsibility of the charge, the Government should have authority to insure the efficiency of the force.

"10. It is most desirable that the practical experiments for testing the chemical conclusions to which Professors Graham, Thomson, and Dr. Lyon Playfair have arrived should be repeated, under proper superintendence, but with the co-operation of persons of acknowledged skill in agriculture. Without impugning the scientific acquirements of the eminent men consulted by the Government, it is highly interesting that this question should be disposed of in a manner to leave no reasonable doubt on the decision which may ultimately be pronounced.

"These measures appear to the committee in themselves to be defensible, because they are just; but, at the same time, in making these suggestions, they are fully aware that the burdens imposed by law directly upon land in England, do not bear so high a proportion in England to the whole taxation of the country as is the case in many foreign states. So far as Prussia and parts of Germany are concerned, this fact may be deduced from the evidence of Mr. Banfield. The same results may be found in respect to France, the Netherlands, Denmark, Sweden, and other foreign states. This fact, however, ought not to vary the views which may be taken either of justice or policy; neither should it be inferred that the proportion of land-taxes borne by foreign countries enters into the cost of production, or raises the price of produce abroad, any more than similar taxation has been shown to do at home. The facts are, therefore, referred to as bearing upon the principle of apportionment between one class of the community and another, and not for the purpose of suggesting that the cost of raising corn and other agricultural produce is governed by one principle in England, and by another principle on the continent of Europe."

NEW PUNISHMENT.—In a Bill introduced into the House of Commons by Sir James Graham, "For preventing malicious injuries to persons and property by fire, or by explosive or destructive substances," it is proposed to be enacted that male offenders under the age of 18 years may be whipped. It is generally understood that it is the intention of the authorities gradually to introduce corporal punishment, with a view to repress crime among the juvenile class of offenders.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

We are glad to see the newspapers again directing attention to the important subject of an Appeal in Criminal Cases. It will be remembered that the present Solicitor-General had identified himself with this question, and by his powerful advocacy had forced a general acknowledgment of the justice of such a provision, or rather, we should say, of the monstrous injustice of its denial. His official cares have prevented Sir F. KELLY from pursuing the noble work he had commenced, and delicacy, perhaps, may have deterred others from seeming to take it out of his hands. But in the meanwhile the wrong continues; the innocent are punished, the guilty escape; errors of unlearned magistrates are irreversible, mistakes of learned judges are uncorrected, and the hasty verdicts of stupid or prejudiced juries are recorded, and cannot be erased. Where life and liberty are at stake there is no appeal; but if 20*l.* be in dispute, a new trial may be had. In Scotland there is an appeal for criminals; so in France, so, we believe, in Germany, and even in despotic Austria and Russia. But in free England, 20*l.* is more cared for than the life or the liberty of a man! It is time that we should wipe out this blot upon our jurisprudence. We commend the subject to the care of some younger member of the House, who may, if he please, thus identify his name with a cause which only needs an earnest advocate to secure a speedy triumph.

THE INCLOSURE COMMISSION.

Report of the Commissioners.—To the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

We have the honour to forward to you, as one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, pursuant to the provisions of the Act passed in the 8th and 9th years of the reign of her present Majesty, c. 118, a general report of our proceedings, specifying such matters as are thereby directed; which report contains a schedule, as a form most easy of reference, by which will be seen the time each inclosure proceeding has occupied in its several stages, which has necessarily varied according to the circumstances of the different cases. The number of applications of all kinds to this office has been forty-six, of which forty-two have been for inclosures; of these thirty-one we are led to believe will require the previous authority of Parliament, and eleven will not. There is one for the conversion of stinted into regulated pasture, one for the exchange of lands, and two to complete proceedings under local acts. 28,231 acres, 1 rood, 22 poles, is the quantity of land comprised in the applications, exclusively of those relating to local acts and exchange.

Our report of any opinion as to the expediency of or inexpediency of inclosure is necessarily confined to these cases with respect to which the proper assents have been given to the provisional order. We have in the schedule given precedence to all those cases which it is confidently expected will require the previous authority of Parliament; of these, taking first such as fall under the 14th section of the Act, in the order observed therein, and followed with those cases which do not require the previous authority of Parliament. In addition to this general statement in the schedule, we proceed now to report specially on these cases (No. 1 to No. 7 inclusive) requiring the previous authority of Parliament, to which the proper assents to the provisional orders have been given, the special grounds on which we think such inclosures expedient, and in those cases where no allotments are made for exercise and recreation or for the labouring poor, the grounds on which we have abstained from requiring such appropriation; and afterwards on case No. 8, which does not require the previous authority of Parliament, and the grounds on which we think such inclosure expedient.

An application has been made for the inclosure of Milton Common Fields, containing 2,090 acres, of which part is waste of a manor on which the tenants have rights of common. We consider this inclosure expedient on the grounds that the open arable land will be doubled in value by allotting, inclosing, and draining it, and the meadows and commons in a still greater degree, and the population fully employed; and besides the village green, of six acres, being allotted for exercise and recreation, 18 acres are allotted for the labouring poor, which, under the circumstances of this case, will be most beneficial to them.

Also for the inclosure of Worsthorne-common, containing 2,425 acres, on which rights are exercised at all times of the year, not being limited by number or stint. We consider this proposed inclosure expedient on the grounds that the value of the land will be increased by drainage and proper cultivation in a four-fold degree, and very great additional employment will be given to the population; that, in addition to allotments for labouring poor, the village green, which is surrounded by cottages, and in a miserable and dirty state, will be allotted to the churchwardens and overseers, improved, and kept in order.

Also for the inclosure of Newton Commons, containing 260 acres waste of a manor on which the tenants have rights of common. We consider this proposed inclosure expedient on the ground that the land is at present of very little value, but capable of very great improvement, and that it will lead to much increased employment of labour. In this case there is an allotment for labouring poor, which is desirable, as they are badly off for gardens; but we have not thought it expedient to allot any portion for exercise and recreation, on the ground that the land, from its locality, is ill suited for that purpose, and such alone as could be made use of is in strips and unfit for it, but of considerable importance to the farmhouses, as being calculated to form homesteads for them.

Also for the inclosure of Instow Marsh, 59*a.* 0*r.* 18*p.*, waste of a manor on which the tenants have rights of common. We think this inclosure expedient on the ground that the land will be greatly improved, especially by drainage, and that the old inclosed land, which also is in a wet state, will derive the benefit of the out-fall into the river Taw, which is secured by the provisional order, and that it will lead to an useful application of capital and labour.

Also for the inclosure of Areley-common, 59*a.* 3*r.* 14*p.*, waste of a manor on which the tenants have rights of common. We consider this proposed inclosure expedient on the ground that the land is now almost wholly unproductive, but susceptible of great improvement, and that it will benefit all classes. The allotment in this case of five acres to the labouring poor is made with a view to an exchange of part of it for land near the dwellings of a portion of the labouring poor, who reside chiefly in two different places.

Also for the inclosure of Salcombe-hill and North-east-hill, 209*a.* 3*r.* 12*p.*, waste of a manor on which the tenants have rights of common. We consider this proposed inclosure expedient on the grounds that the land is at present in a most neglected and unproductive state, though, for the most part, capable of being made as good as the old inclosures adjoining, and would lead to a very useful application of labour and capital.

Also for the inclosure of Corley Moor, containing 50*a.* 2*r.* 15*p.*, waste of a manor on which the tenants have rights of common. We consider this proposed inclosure expedient on the grounds that by drainage and cultivation the productive powers of the land would be much increased and all parties benefited. In this case no allotment for exercise and recreation, nor for the labouring poor, is required by the provisional order. Our reasons for this are, that there is no part of the land convenient for exercise and recreation, whilst there are above two acres of land left untouched by this inclosure admirably adapted for this purpose, and because the poor, who live where they could reap benefit from garden allotments, are in possession of large gardens and other inclosures, originally, as it appears, a part of the common.

And application has also been made for the inclosure of Methwold and Southery Common, containing 135 acres, which does not require the previous authority of Parliament. In this case a notice was issued on the 27th of January instant that we intended to authorize the inclosure. We are of opinion that this proposed inclosure is expedient on the grounds that the land would be greatly improved, a proper road to it insured, and that it will afford profitable employment to the owners, who are chiefly labourers, and who are anxious for it.

We have, in accordance with that which we conceived to be the spirit of the Act, by inviting the parties interested to avail themselves on all occasions of the assistance of this office, endeavoured to carry on the proceedings of each proposed inclosure at the least possible expense, and with as little delay as has been compatible with the proper conduct of each case, and due regard to all rights, however small they may have been.

As regards the allotments for exercise and recreation, and for the labouring poor, inasmuch as the Inclosure Act requires, as to certain descriptions of land, that when allotments for such purposes are not to be made, the Inclosure Commissioners should state specifically their reasons for such a course being adopted, we conceived that the intentions of the Legislature could only be carried out in their true spirit by making generally such allotments a condition of the inclosure of land liable to such condition. We have, therefore, unless some cogent reason has been shewn for a departure from the rule, caused allotments to be set out for these purposes in the various cases of such inclosures, with respect to which a provisional order has been issued, and we have, in adopting such a rule, in some cases where the land does not appear convenient for such a purpose, taken into our consideration the probability of such allotment being exchanged for inclosed land more appropriate; as, if the inclosure had been permitted to proceed without any provision for recreation or garden ground, the opportunity for such provision would have passed away. In some of these cases there has been, in the first instance, an objection on the part of those interested in the land to the apportionment of any part of it for such purposes, they considering it unnecessary; we have, however, the satisfaction to state that in every such case, on further communication and fuller explanation, the views, as we believe, of the Legislature have been acquiesced in by those who had before seen them in a different light, and in a spirit which leads us to hope that, when the provisions relating to this matter and the grounds of them are perfectly understood, no reasonable proposition will meet with opposition.

The short time which has elapsed since the passing of the Act, and the ignorance as to its existence on the part of some, a misapprehension as to its provisions, and of the expenses attending inclosures under it, with regard to others, have, we doubt not, limited the number of cases to those on which we have now to report; but, as we find in these among the applicants for inclosure, persons of all classes, and enjoying a very disproportionate amount of interest, and in one case, to which the assents have been given, the rights enjoyed chiefly by labourers, and, in addition to this, that there is no case yet, as we have reason to believe, which will be abandoned for the want of the necessary assents to the provisional order, our conviction is that the country will generally avail itself of the provisions of the Act; and that conviction is confirmed by the spirit in which we have been met by those interested in the different cases of inclosure with which we have had to deal, even on those occasions when it became necessary to discuss points of difference, and to decide against the opinion of those with whom such discussion had taken place.

As far as we have been able to judge from the limited experience afforded us, we find the machinery of the Act generally adequate to carry out its objects, except where a question arises whether the soil, or a portion thereof, is not in the lord of the manor, or where the manor is claimed by adverse parties: and we would further observe, that when, according to the provisions of the Act, the allotment to the lord is set forth in the provisional order, which, by information subsequent to the assents, is shewn to have been improperly done, or should a claim as lord be advanced at this late period, and be substantiated, inasmuch as the Inclosure Commissioners have no power to issue a supplemental provisional order, they are not aware how that which may afterwards turn out to be an error in the provisional order can be remedied, which error was on their part inevitable, as, on the facts disclosed upon an investigation as complete as was possible, the provisional order was correct; nor are they aware how an inclosure, where such mistake has occurred, can proceed without a fresh application, entailing an additional expense on the parties interested; and the same inconvenience may arise where other claims are unexpectedly shewn to exist at an equally late period.

Note.—We are not in a condition to state, with any great degree of accuracy, the expenses which will be incurred in respect of inclosures generally with which we are now proceeding up to the time, and inclusive of the proper assents being given to the provisional order; and it is probable that the cost of each to which such assents have already been given may not be a just criterion of other cases, as we have been enabled, with one exception, where it was occasioned by the request of the parties interested, to obtain the assents without employment of an assistant commissioner for the purpose, and in a manner perfectly satisfactory. The average of each proceeding in which these assents have been given, as far as this office is concerned, will be about 16l. up to the time of the return of such assents to us, which leaves the case ready either for Parliament to deal with, or for us to signify our intention of authorizing the inclosure.

An appendix is subjoined, and the report is signed,

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

Monday, May 18.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS.—In the course of the day the grand jury came into court with the remainder of the bills.

The Foreman, addressing his lordship, said, he was requested by his brother jurymen to state that they were aware they had been engaged a longer time than usual at the present session; but they thought it right to say that they had devoted no more time to the consideration of each case than was necessary to afford to each party accused that right which the constitution gave him of not being put upon his trial without twelve men expressing their opinion, upon their oaths, that there was ground for such a course being taken; and he begged to state that no bill had been returned except with the consent of twelve of their body. The foreman went on to say that the grand jury had felt great difficulty in disposing of the cases of juvenile offenders. In many cases the parties were unwilling to prosecute them, although the evidence was conclusive, and the grand jury were placed in the position of violating the solemn obligation they were under by the oath they had taken, or else to send such offenders for trial before the petty jury. They had, however, in such cases felt it their duty to act upon the evidence, although it was repugnant to their moral feelings. He then handed the following presentation to the Court:—

"The grand jury respectfully present, at the close of their duties, the solemn conviction forced on them by their recent investigation, that there is something fundamentally defective in legislation, both as it regards the decrease of crime and the reclamation of criminals. The instances of a second conviction coming before them have been numerous, and it would appear to them as though our jurisprudence had it in view that a citizen once charged with guilt should never cease to be a criminal. Beggared by the unnecessary heavy expenses of his defence, and subjected during his confinement to association with characters the most depraved, and forced on the world at the close of his confinement without money or repute—the accused is made for the rest of life a criminal by profession. In the case of the young this is still more deplorable, and is complicated with grievances which the public share. The grand jury, among many similar instances, have had before them the case of Thomas Miller, No. 34, Middlesex, a child of eight years of age, for stealing lead to the value of —, with a former conviction; and the case of two boys of the age of 16, No. 119, Middlesex, for stealing to the value of 1s. with a former conviction against one of them for stealing to the value of 6d. The irrationality of moving the complicated and costly machinery of law for the legal punishment (and for such acts) of children, neglected and untaught, forcibly impressed itself on the minds of the grand jury; and while expressing their surprise and regret that the magistrates of police courts cannot make similar cases to these matters of summary jurisdiction, they would earnestly invite attention to the necessity of some general measure for removing children, charged with such trivial offences, after their release, from the depraving circumstances that must insure their repeated and continued appearance of our law courts in the character of criminals. The grand jury believe it is not out of the sphere of their duties to suggest the importance of doing something which, by diffusing information and improving the reasoning powers of our poorer population, may remove from our calendar numerous crimes which now owe their origin solely to ignorance; and they feel convinced, while an improved agency of this kind, using public means rather for the prevention than the detection and punishment of crime, merits support both as humane and efficient, it shall as strongly appeal to public consideration, on the ground of a judicious and great economy."

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

No incident of the week calls for notice. The Term just begun will be a busy one, and the reports will doubtless claim so large a space as to compel frequent, if not continuous, double numbers during the next five weeks; but of course we shall not trouble our readers with these unless they be actually required to keep pace with the business of the courts, which, we presume, they would wish to receive with speed, even though at the price of two or three extra sixpences. The Law Digest of the last half-year is now finished. Its completion will be judged from this: that the names alone of the cases digested occupy thirty-two columns. It is the only Digest ever made that includes all the reports; hence the number of us which a single half-year has produced, in this consists its utility to the practitioner. It is to him of the utmost importance that he should find all the cases that have been decided on any subject. Until the present attempt, he has never been able to do this, in every other Digest systematically excludes the reports published by rival publishers. It should be observed that this Digest is stamped, so that the numbers can be transmitted by post, and can be bound with the volumes of the Law Times, or separately.

QUESTIONS AT THE EXAMINATION.

Easter Term, 1846.

I. PRELIMINARY.

1. Where, and with whom, did you serve your clerkship?
2. State the particular branch or branches of the law to which you have principally applied yourself during your clerkship.

5. Within what time after the service of a writ of summons is it necessary to indorse thereon the day of the service, and if omitted, what is the effect?
6. In reckoning time, how is the calculation to be made?—for instance, a defendant obtaining a writ for eight days' time to plead on the first of the month, on what day must he deliver the plea?
7. Can a defendant be arrested under any and what circumstances upon mesne process, and what steps are necessary to be taken?
8. In what case can a defendant require the plaintiff to give security for costs? and what is the mode of proceeding to obtain it?
9. What are the different sorts of execution to enforce a judgment?
10. Within what time must application be made to set aside an award?
11. How can a witness not attending on his subpoena be made answerable for his neglect?
12. What is a stet process, and the effect of it?
13. What is the effect of a juror being withdrawn?
14. What is a judgment non obstante veredicto, and the effect of it?
15. What is the commencement of an action of ejectment?
16. In case a landlord wish to defend an action of ejectment brought against his tenant, how can he obtain liberty to do so?
17. Can a declaration in ejectment ever be served on the wife of a tenant, and under what circumstances?
18. How soon after issue joined can a defendant move for judgment, as in case of a nonsuit in a term cause and in a country cause respectively?
19. What cases can a judge of one of the superior courts direct to be tried before the sheriff?

III. CONVEYANCING.

20. Who is tenant in fee simple?
21. If a man purchase lands or tenements in fee simple, what words should he have in his purchase, and why? In what three kinds of hereditaments may a man have a fee simple?
22. By force of what statute is fee tail?
23. What is tenant in tail general; and what tenant in tail special?
24. What is a reversion?
25. If lands be given to a man and the heirs male of his body begotten, who shall, and who shall not inherit?
26. What is a tenancy for term of life? What, by common parlance, is he called who holds for the term of his own life; and what he who holds for term of another's life?

27. If A, tenant in fee simple, make a lease of lands to B, to have and to hold to B. for term of life, without mentioning for whose life it shall be, what shall it be deemed, and why?

28. What is tenancy for term of years? and what is the lessee when he enters by force of the lease?

29. Whence is "lease" derived?

30. What is a tenancy at will? Why is the lessee called tenant at will?

31. Of what two sorts are parceners? Why are they called parceners?

32. Who are joint tenants? Why are joint tenants so called? What quality have joint tenants which co-parceners have not?

33. Who are tenants in common; and why are they so called? By what three means may there be tenants in common? What is the essential difference between joint tenants and tenants in common? What property is common to them both?

34. Define and explain the nature and effect of attornment.

IV. EQUITY, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

35. State the principal heads under which the equity jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery may be described.

36. State some cases in which a court of equity will relieve against the defective execution of a deed.

37. Is there any, and what, advantage in the proceedings of a court of equity over those of a court of common law in questions of account, and state some of the principal cases in account in which recourse is ordinarily had to a court of equity?

38. The Court of Chancery prohibiting persons filling certain characters from becoming purchasers, name the principal of such characters, and upon what ground the prohibition is founded.

39. Enumerate some of the cases in which the Court of Chancery will grant an injunction, and what is the difference between a special and a common injunction, and what are the modes in which they are respectively obtained?

40. Explain the difference between the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery and the ecclesiastical courts in the case of wills?

41. What is the difference between the remedies supplied by the Court of Chancery and the courts of common law in the case of non-performance of a contract or agreement. In what cases of contract will the Court of Chancery enforce a specific performance, and in what cases will it refuse to interfere?

42. State some of the cases in which a Court of Equity will support a voluntary conveyance: and again cases in which the Court will set such a conveyance aside; and when will the Court refuse to interfere?

43. Within what time must a defendant put in his answer to an original bill, an amended bill, and a supplemental bill, respectively; and is there any, and what distinction in this respect between a town and country cause?

44. Under what circumstances, and upon what terms, may a plaintiff and defendant respectively dismiss a bill before decree? and how may a bill be dismissed after decree?

45. How are orders and decrees of the court enforced, particularly where money is directed to be paid into court, or any other act is directed to be done within a limited time, and where money or costs are ordered generally to be paid to a person?

46. In what cases are the vacations not reckoned in the computation of times of procedure?

47. What is the effect of passing publication? when does it pass? how is it passed? and within what time after publication is the cause to be set down for hearing?

48. Name and give a short description of the several writs usually issued in the course of a suit?

49. Describe a traversing note, and the effect of it; and state how is issue joined.

V. BANKRUPTCY, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

50. What are the principal statutes now in force relating to bankrupts?

51. What are usually termed the requisites of a fiat?

52. What are the amounts now required for a petitioning creditor's debt?

53. When, and in what manner, was the power of committal conferred upon the courts of commissioners in bankruptcy, and in what cases is it exercisable?

54. What is the nature of the dealing required to constitute a trading within the meaning of the bankrupt laws?

55. What persons are deemed scrivener within the meaning of the bankrupt laws?

56. When does a trader who has ceased to trade render himself liable to the bankrupt laws?

57. Under what enactment, and in what manner, can a trader issue a fiat against himself?

58. Under what circumstances may a fiat be issued against an executor?

59. In what manner, and at what time, does the estate of a bankrupt become vested in his assignees?

60. State the alterations effected by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, and the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, with regard to conveyances, contracts, and dealings by and with bankrupts.

61. What is the statute under which a fiat in bankruptcy may be issued against a joint-stock company? and what the acts of bankruptcy to warrant the fiat?

62. Before whom are affidavits used in our bankruptcy courts to be sworn as well in England as abroad?

63. In what manner are proceedings in bankruptcy made evidence without formal proof?

64. Does a covenant in a lease net to assign without the landlord's consent remain available against the assignees on the bankruptcy of the lessee? State the reasons for your answer.

VI. CRIMINAL LAW.

65. Which is the supreme court of criminal jurisdiction in this country? And who is the supreme coroner of the realm?

66. Will a writ of error lie for the improper admission of evidence on a trial for a misdemeanour?

67. Does the breach of an Act of Parliament constitute an offence at common law, per se?

68. A man has been convicted of misdemeanour, and been sentenced to imprisonment, which he has suffered in part: the record of his conviction is removed into a court of error, and by that court the judgment of the court below is reversed; upon the ground of error in the indictment, and he is thereupon discharged from prison: Can he be proceeded against de novo for the same offence?

69. Can there be accessories before the fact in murder, manslaughter, treason, or trespass, or in any, and which of them? and give the reason for the distinction.

70. What is the proper venue in an indictment for an offence committed in the district subject to the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court?

71. Is the common law offence of forgery, felony or misdemeanour? And is the offence altered in this respect by any statutes?

72. Is the writ of certiorari in criminal cases demandable of right by prosecutors or defendants, and how is it obtained? What officer is entitled to it as of right?

73. Where several defendants are indicted together, and on the application of one of them a writ of certiorari is obtained, does this in any way affect the other defendants?

74. What is the effect of a writ of procedendo?

75. What is the rule in criminal matters as to controverting the truth of facts alleged in a return to a writ of habeas corpus? and is there any difference in this respect in matters not criminal?

76. How many jurors is a prisoner entitled to challenge peremptorily in the respective cases of treason and felony?

77. Is there any mode of proceeding, other than by impeachment, presentment, or indictment, against persons accused of treason, felony, or misdemeanour? If so, state what it is, and to which of these offences it is applicable?

78. Is the joinder in an indictment of counts charging felony and counts charging misdemeanour allowable?

79. Is a defendant entitled to a copy of the indictment in felony or misdemeanour, or in either, before his trial?

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

TRINITY TERM.—Yesterday Trinity Term began. From an examination of the lists it seems that the arrears have been reduced since the commencement of the Easter Term. With the exception of one cause, the new trial paper of the Court of Queen's Bench goes no further back than Easter Term, 1845. There are 115 rules for new trials in the list, and twenty for the judgment of the Court. In the lists of the Courts of Common Pleas and the Exchequer the rules were obtained in the course of the present year. Several long pending matters in the list of new trials for the Court of Queen's Bench have been disposed of, and the expression that to obtain a rule for a new trial in that court was a delay of two years, in which time the money in dispute might be lost, or the parties escape, will, by the exertions of the learned judges, in a short time be inapplicable.

ADMISSION OF ATTORNEYS.—The number of applicants for admission on the list of attorneys in the ensuing Trinity Term is 147.

LEGAL EXAMINERS.—In pursuance of the new rule of the common law courts at Westminster, respecting the admission of attorneys, which we recently noticed, the undermentioned gentlemen, with the several masters for the time being of the above-mentioned courts, have been appointed examiners for Trinity and Michaelmas Terms next, to examine persons desirous of being admitted attorneys, namely,—Mr. Robert Riddell Bayley, Mr. Edward Smith Bigg, Mr. Thomas Clarke, Mr. John Coverdale, Mr. Alexander Grant, Mr. John Swarbrick Gregory, Mr. George Herbert Kinderley, Mr. Edward Lawford, Mr. William Lowe, Mr. John Metcalfe, Mr. Edward Leigh Pemberton, Mr. Edward Rowland Pickering, Mr. John James Pocock, Mr. John James J. Sudlow, Mr. Robert Whitmore, and Mr. Thomas Wing, attorneys-at-law.

WARRANT AGAINST MR. SMITH O'BRIEN.—The following is a copy "of the warrant under which William Smith O'Brien, esq. was committed to the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms:"—"Jovis, 30 die Aprilis, 1846. Whereas the House of Commons has this day resolved that William Smith O'Brien, esq. a member of the said house, having been guilty of a contempt of the said house, be for his said offence committed to the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms attending the said house, during the pleasure of the said house:—these are therefore to require you forthwith to take into your custody the said William Smith O'Brien, and him safely to keep during the pleasure of the said house. And all mayors, sheriffs, under-sheriffs, bailiffs, constables, headboroughs, and officers of the said house are required to be aiding and assisting to you in the execution hereof. For which this shall be your sufficient warrant. Given under my hand, this 30th day of April, 1846.—Charles Shaw Lefevre, Speaker. To the Serjeant-at-Arms attending the House of Commons, or his deputy."

RETURN OF AN INNOCENT CONVICT.—Joseph Mason, late of Clifton, Yorkshire, who was at the York Lent Assizes, 1843, unjustly sentenced to twenty years' transportation, reached London on the afternoon of Wednesday week, and on the following day appeared at the Home-office, where sufficient money was given him to convey him to his native home, near the city of York, where he arrived on Saturday night. He was welcomed by his wife and children, and, as may naturally be supposed, both husband and wife were much affected after so long and so unjust a separation. Before Mason left London he waited upon his benefactor, Mr. R. H. Yorke, M.P. to express to that gentleman his gratitude for his unwearied exertions on his behalf. On Sunday a party of Mason's relatives arrived in York to welcome his return, and were delighted to find him in such good health and spirits. It is a remarkable fact, that previous to Mason leaving Norfolk Island, he personally witnessed the arrival of Thompson, alias "Blueskin," one of the real accomplices who attacked Mr. Carr's house, and for which he was sentenced by Mr. Justice Coleridge to the same punishment as that which Mason was ordered to undergo—namely, twenty years' transportation. Mason also brings important information, that "Blueskin" had made a deposition and confession to Mr. Naylor, the officiating clergyman at Norfolk Island, to the effect that he was an accomplice in the robbery at Goodmanham (so graphically described by Haythorne before Mr. Justice Coleridge, at York Castle, on the 7th of September last), and that the four men now at Norfolk Island undergoing punishment for that robbery are totally innocent of it. —Doncaster Chronicle.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

POOR REMOVAL.—Return specifying the number of families and persons removed by any local order, or other authority, to their place of settlement, from each manufacturing town in Yorkshire, Lancashire, and Cheshire, during the years 1841, 1842, and 1843; the date of such removal, the name of the parish to which removed, and the occupation or trade, and length of residence in the town from which such families and persons were so removed. The towns enumerated are, Congleton, Macclesfield, Sandbach, Ashton-under-Lyne, Great Bolton, Little Bolton, Bromley, Habergham Eaves, Padham, Colne, Chorley, Charlton-upon-Medlock, Ardwick, Hulme, Clitheroe, Wiswell, Pendleton, Lancaster, Manchester, Salford, Oldham, Preston, Rochdale, Todmorden (including Hebdenbridge), Warrington, Wigan, Bradford (including Bowling, Horton, and Manningham), Halifax, Rotherham, Sheffield, Wakefield, and part of the borough of Leeds. The aggregate number of families and persons removed from these places to their places of settlement were as under:—

	No. of Families	Persons comprised therein.
1842	1,393	3,922
1843	1,745	5,168

In the three years, 3,856

DIOCESAN RETURNS.—Copy of the abstracts of the Diocesan Returns, made to her Majesty in council, for the year 1844, by the Archbishops and Bishops of England and Wales. The total number of resident incumbents is, it appears, 7,246. Of these, 6,332 are resident in parsonage houses; 929 in houses appointed by the Bishop's license; and 985 elsewhere, within the limits of the diocese, there being no parsonage house. The total number holding benefices, but not resident within them, is 3,454. Of these the number doing duty is 1,061. There are 1,768 cases of special exemption; and 1,594 of these are on the ground of the parties holding and residing in other benefices. Licenses of non-residence are held by 785 others on various grounds, the chief of which are, infirmity or illness of the incumbent or his family, or want of a parsonage house, or one considered fit to reside in; and no less than 901 returned as non-resident, without license or exemption. There is a third class of "miscellaneous cases," including vacancies and recent institutions, sequestrations and suspensions, and cases in which no returns have been made. The number of these is 427. The total is 11,127 benefices and incumbents. The total number of glebe-houses is 7,792. The number of curates serving benefices on which the incumbents are non-resident, is 2,409. Of these, 2,113 are licensed, 1,043 resident in the glebe-house, and 434 resident elsewhere in the parish. In 1,533 cases the annual stipend is more than 50*l.* and less than 110*l.* In 152 cases it is under 50*l.* and in 37 it is the whole value of the benefice. The number of curates acting as assistants to incumbents resident on their benefices is 2,361, of which number 1,865 are licensed. The stipends range nearly as above.

METROPOLITAN BUILDINGS ACT.—A return of eighteen folio pages has been printed (procured by Mr. Forster, the member for Berwick-on-Tweed), showing the number of informations laid by the surveyors of districts under the Metropolitan Buildings Act. The informations laid under the Building Act of the 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, numbered 50 in 1844-5, and 11 in the present year. The informations laid under the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 84, in 1845 and 1846, were 61 in old districts, and 47 in new districts. The fees awarded by the special referees amounted to 61*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* in old districts, and 29*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* in new districts; and to the office of the Metropolitan Buildings in those districts 301*l.* 2*s.* 10*d.* of which 180*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* was in old districts, and 120*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.* in new districts. In the year ending the 1st of January last there were 61 informations laid at the office of Metropolitan Buildings by the surveyors of districts under the 7 and 8 Vict. being districts under the 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, and 47 by the surveyors of new districts in that period under the same Act. The fees awarded by the official referees in the last-mentioned class were 29*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* to district surveyors, and 120*l.* 11*s.* 2*d.* to the office of Metropolitan Buildings.

ENCLOSURE COMMISSION.—A return has been printed of all applications made for enclosures to the Enclosure Commissioners. It seems that 42 applications were made to the commissioners which were returned in the general annual report, and 27 have been received since the report was presented. The extent of the former applications was 27,249*a.* 1*r.* 9*p.*; and of the latter 23,352*a.* 3*r.* 4*p.* The dates and other particulars are given in the return, which was applied for by Viscount Clive.

WINDOW DUTY.—Captain Pechell (Brighton) has obtained an account (now printed) of the amount of the window duty paid in each of the last six years, as also of the twelve towns paying the largest amount of window duty. The following results appear in the first branch of the return, ending on the 5th April in each year:—In 1840, the duty was 1,486,023*l.*; in 1841, 1,774,638*l.*; in 1842, 1,775,151*l.*; in 1843, 1,776,789*l.*; in 1844, 1,786,514*l.*; and in 1845, 1,812,035*l.* The twelve towns mentioned are Bath, Birmingham, Brighton, Bristol, Cheltenham, Clifton, Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Norwich, Plymouth, and York. The following sums appear for the year ending on the 5th April, opposite the towns stated:—21,722*l.*, 10,715*l.*, 16,191*l.*, 14,955*l.*, 7,208*l.*, 8,430*l.*, 7,999*l.*, 29,929*l.*, 20,394*l.*, 5,990*l.*, 6,571*l.*, and 11,484*l.* It will be seen that the largest amount was paid by Liverpool (the eighth town), 29,929*l.*; and the smallest by Newcastle (the tenth), of 5,990*l.*

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

THE FORENSIC SOCIETY.

The anniversary dinner of this Society took place at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street, on Wednesday last. The ATTORNEY-GENERAL presided, and was supported by Mr. Watson, Q.C. Mr. Stuart, Q.C. and other distinguished members of the Society. The Vice Chair was occupied by the Secretary, Mr. Brewer. About sixty members were present. Appropriate toasts were duly proposed and honoured, such as "the President," "the Forensic Judges," "the Forensic Silks," "the Forensic Authors," "the prosperity of the Forensic Society," "The Secretary," and so forth. The banquet was magnificent, and a most agreeable evening was passed by all present.

DEATH BY ACCIDENTS COMPENSATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—My attention has been directed to the "Death by Accidents Compensation" Bill, which has just appeared in your columns, and which, in its present form, proposes to enact, that in cases of accidental death, the person causing it shall be liable to an action for damages, provided the deceased (had death not ensued) would have been entitled to maintain an action against such person. This provision is alleged to be necessary, on account of the abolition of deodands. There can be no doubt that the law of deodands has not operated well. Many cases have occurred in which parties have been fined unjustly; still, in a few instances, it had a salutary effect, acting as a check upon wantonness and neglect. Does the new bill remove the evil, and retain the check, without expensiveness in its application? A case occurred in my jurisdiction in which a cart was compelled to drive an unruly horse, which caused his death; his master being the head farmer of the parish in which his relatives resided, not one of them would have dared to sue him for damages. And this, I apprehend, is the case in many parts of the country. I venture to suggest that it would be a much simpler and better plan for the jury serving on the inquest (after due notice given to the parties) to assess the damages. They would have the whole case before them, and would be likely to arrive at a correct conclusion, when the coroner might issue execution. Of course there would be a power of appeal for either party to the Court of Queen's Bench.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.
A BOROUGH COUNCIL.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

R. transmits this reply to the question in a statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76:—

The only doubt which can exist of the effect of the conveyance made in March 1845, as stated, was under the 13th sec. of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, as to effect of the word "created" in reference to any estate, right, or interest existing prior to the day of January, 1845. The conveyance in question was doubtless grounded upon some estate created before that time; and if so, by the terms of the relation referred to, the deed cannot have the operation intended by the second section, which, indeed, has the principal feature of the Act. Such a construction, however, would have the effect of nullifying the Act, as a whole, beyond the exception in the thirteenth section; still that view of the Act might have been the cause of the repeal of it, which did place in the last session. Nevertheless, whilst it was in operation, so to speak, it was relied upon in practice, as appears by the case now in question. The rule, that every statute shall have operation if possible, and shall not be treated as nugatory if effect can be reasonably given to it; and it is conceived that the absence of the word "convey" is not, as it appears to be apprehended, material. By the interpretation clause, the word "conveyance" extends to a feoffment, grant, release, surrender, or other assurance of freehold land; and as the deed is stated to contain the usual operative words of release, the statute has thus been sufficiently complied with.

C. J. G. E. submits the following remarks on STAMPS ON LEASES.

It has recently occurred to me to have a question raised with regard to the stamps requisite upon a lease, and as the case is one that must be of daily occurrence, I think it may be serviceable to call attention to it through your columns.

A entered into an agreement to grant a lease to B, or his nominee, at a rent under 20*l.* and without premium.

B sold his interest to C, who afterwards agreed to take 180*l.* from D as a consideration for transferring to him the right to call for the lease, which B then requested A to grant to D.

I, as A's solicitor, accordingly prepared a draft by which A, by the direction of B, was to demise to D, whose solicitor, however, required that C should also be a consenting party; that the consideration paid to him should be stated; and that the lease (the costs of which, it should be observed, C had agreed to pay) should bear two ad valorem stamps, one in respect of the 180*l.* another in respect of the rent.

Upon my objecting to this, I was met by counsel's opinion, to the effect that such stamps were necessary, and the result was that C, rather than become involved in litigation, agreed to what was required of him.

The opinion which I have mentioned referred to the case of Boone v. Mitchell (1 B. & C. 18), in which, under similar circumstances, it was held that a lease, omitting all mention of the consideration paid by the lessee to the intermediate party, and bearing a stamp in respect of the rent only, was valid; but although in that case the Court said, "the Stamp Act requiring the consideration to be set out, and imposing an ad valorem duty on the consideration, applies only in the case of a consideration passing between the lessor and lessee;" yet counsel considered that, as the decision was capable of being supported on the ground that as the duty attached only on the consideration expressed to be paid, non constat that the parties and their solicitors were not liable to penalties for omitting to state the true consideration.

The fact of the premium going to C, and the rent to A, was the ground assigned for requiring the payment in my case of an ad valorem on the rent, as well as on the premium, notwithstanding the general terms of the enactment requiring, in case of a lease, in consideration of a premium with any yearly rent "under 20*l.*" an ad valorem stamp in respect of the premium only. The argument was, that there must be considered to be two separate transactions, viz. a sale of C's interest, and a lease to D, and that duty was consequently payable on each.

It is, I believe, the constant practice to omit all mention in a lease of the money that may have been paid by the lessee to any person other than the lessor; and it is, therefore, of great importance that if penalties are incurred by following such practice, the fact should be made known as widely as possible.

The view taken by some gentlemen, I understand, is, that in such a case the lease is not, within the meaning of the Stamp Act, "a lease granted in consideration of a sum of money by way of premium;" and that, even if the whole facts appeared on the face of it, a stamp in respect of the rent only would be sufficient. Of course, if this be so, the omission is not an omission to state the "true consideration" for the lease, so as to subject the parties to penalties. I find, however, that Mr. Coventry, in his work on the Stamp Laws (p. 382) expresses an opinion that the stamp on the premium is necessary.

COURT FEES.

THE emphatic condemnation of the fee system in the Courts of Law and Equity, elicited from the Premier and other influential speakers in the recent debate on Mr. WATSON'S motion for an inquiry into the Chancery Compensation job, encourages the hope that ere long we shall witness a sweeping reform of a practice which only ancient custom could have induced the Profession and the public to endure without complaint or remonstrance. A cause may be imagined for the silent endurance of the public. The Court Fees come not directly out of the client's pocket: they are paid in the first instance by the attorney, and form a part of his bill of costs, not charged separately, under their proper designation, but blended with his own fees, so that the luckless client, when he casts his eye over the formidable total and the provoking items, believes that this alarming array of figures indicates the personal profits of his attorney, on whose absent head is accordingly vented the torrent of abuse that rises even to polite lips when suspicious of being the subject of an imposition.

Thus has the Profession endured a double martyrdom in this matter of Court Fees. They must pay them from their own pockets, and run the risk of their loss by means of a poor client. Having paid, they must put them into their bills, not as items of money paid, but as a part of the charge that includes their own profit; as clients are somewhat touchy in this respect, they are often compelled to curtail their own fair remuneration, because the united fees would try the client's temper too much; finally, upon them is visited the blame that belongs to the Court Fees, and they are abused for bills, one half of whose charges are not their own.

This grievous tax of the Court Fees not only produces this indirect mischief to the Profession, but it inflicts a direct injury. The burden of the fees materially affects the amount of business. The cost of "going to law," to use a popular phrase, results in great part from the taxes imposed upon the suitor by the Courts. But for this burden, law would be more often invoked for redress of wrong, and consequently there would be more business. Let us not be misunderstood. We are no lovers of litigation; we do not desire more lawsuits for the sake of increasing the profits of the lawyers. But at present it is notorious that the expense of obtaining redress of an injury from the law is in itself a greater injury than that complained of, and persons are compelled to submit to wrongs, because, by the taxes it imposes, the law virtually closes its door against the suitor who cannot command the golden key by which alone it can be opened. This is a positive injustice, which has long called loudly for redress. The claim is now recognized by our rulers, and only a determined effort is needed to secure its practical concession.

But by whom should the task be undertaken? By the public? True it is, that they are really as deeply interested in the result as the lawyers: but not so directly; and for indirect benefits men will not exert themselves. Every individual of the general public would probably admit that taxes on suitors were very improper, and ought to be abolished; but in the hope that it would never be his misfortune, at least, to be a suitor, he declines the trouble of an agitation against a wrong from which he trusts to escape. The lawyers only are, all of them, directly and greatly interested in procuring a redress of the grievance. Upon their shoulders falls the weight of the burden; to them attaches the discredit of the system; they would feel most immediately the benefits of its abolition. They are a body to some extent organized, and having within themselves easy means of co-operation, if inclined to use them.

To the lawyers now belongs the duty of taking up the challenge thrown down by the Government. They should strenuously urge the actual accomplishment of an object which all parties in the Legislature have pronounced to be so desirable. The hands of the ministry are too full of matters of more vital moment to undertake the task, but they promise cordial aid to those who will set themselves to the work. If the Profession will, through its various Law Societies, resolutely apply itself to the subject, early and complete success would be certain.

But here again the obstacle arises, which presents itself whenever the Profession has an object to attain in the Legislature. It is entirely wanting in a mouth-piece there. In reality returning three-fourths of the members, the Lawyers are themselves altogether unrepresented. They whose interests are more affected by legislation than those of any other class of the community—who are concerned directly in four-fifths of all the measures submitted to Parliament—whose opinions and suggestions would be of infinite worth, because the results of practical experience—are probably the only large and intelligent class of the community whose voice has no mouth-piece, whose mind has no influence, whose welfare has none to watch over it in the House of Commons. And yet do we read in newspapers of the Legislature being lawyer-ridden! It is true that there are many Lawyers in the House; but who are they? Either men of large practice, who make politics the path to preferment, and are too busy to play the part of representatives of any but themselves; or gentlemen who are lawyers only in name—who have been called to the Bar as a matter of form, without any purpose to practice, and necessarily unacquainted with the practical workings of the law, or the interests of the Profession to which they are attached by title alone.

A general election is nigh at hand. Earnestly do we exhort the Attorneys not to permit the opportunity to pass of placing in the House of Commons a representative of their own, in whom they could trust for industry, zeal, and practical knowledge of their interests. Perhaps they might not find one who would be willing of himself to bear the entire cost of an election. But a seat could be secured for a sum that might readily be raised for a purpose so manifestly advantageous.

But these remarks, though suggested by the immediate subject with which we started, only belong to it incidentally. The fee system is doomed; it is only for the Profession to exert themselves, and the judgment will be followed by a speedy execution.

SHAM LAWYERS.

NOTWITHSTANDING the transportation of the Sham Lawyer at Birmingham, and the conviction of Mr. BUCHANAN for practising in the Court of Quarter Sessions, not being an attorney, supported by the opinion of the judges during the last Term, we are informed that the race is daily multiplying, more especially in the inferior courts of the Metropolis. The Central Criminal Court, the Middlesex and Surrey Sessions, the Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts, and the Police Courts, are infested by them, to the serious damage of the regular practitioners, to the infinite annoyance of the courts themselves, and to the plunder and discomfiture of the suitors they impose upon.

And why is this wholesale trespassing upon the Profession permitted? Simply because, while all acknowledge the evil, no single man is willing to incur the trouble and cost of enforcing the remedy. It was in order to accomplish by union that which individuals could not be found to undertake, that the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association was established. For the first year it was well supported, and many were the services it performed to the Profession in the suppression of abuses existing within and without its pale. But we lament to learn that, instead of its numbers increasing with this evidence of its utility, the subscriptions for the present year are insufficient to meet the ordinary expenses, and it is deprived of the power of continuing its task of protecting the Profession against sham lawyers who invade, and real lawyers who disgrace, it, for want of the necessary funds. It would, indeed, be a shame, were the Profession to permit the only society ever established for so excellent a purpose to become extinct, when every day makes more and more apparent the necessity for union, if it be only to provide the means for effectually resisting the daring and fast extending invasions of the sham lawyers.

At present the subscription to the society is one guinea per annum. We would suggest whether half-a-guinea would not be preferable, as likely to unite a much wider circle of members.

New Books.

The Means of Dissettling and Dealing with Personal Funds settled upon Trusts involving Reversionary Interests in married Women, suggested and explained. By THOMAS SWINBURNE, M.A. of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister. London: Blenkarn.

THE practical importance of the question discussed in this pamphlet will be recognized by every lawyer. It is one of those legal difficulties which have baffled the astuteness of the conveyancer, who has in vain sought to effect an object often, undoubtedly, both just and desirable, and for which the interference of legislation is demanded by the wants of society. But until Parliament shall formally legalize a simple method of dissettling personal funds, when the purposes of the settlement are fulfilled, or altered circumstances require altered provisions, any endeavours to point a path by which the end may be safely attained under existing impediments, will be gratefully received by the Profession.

Such is the design of Mr. SWINBURNE'S pamphlet, as set forth at the opening:—

In the simple case of a fund settled on A for life, with remainder to B, a married woman, the Profession has for some time been advised that by A's surrendering his life interest to B she would become entitled to the entire immediate interest in the fund, which would accordingly become disposable by her husband, like any other immediately recoverable chose in action; but it would appear that, previously to the case which the writer is about to introduce to the reader, it had never been attempted to effect the dissettlement of a fund standing in any other than the particular position just mentioned; and the actual instances of dissettlement, even under these circumstances, appear to have been very few.

The author having been called upon to advise upon the means of making a title to a fund which stood settled upon trusts involving reversionary interests in a married woman, under circumstances more complex, and having, as he believes, discovered a means of effecting the desired object, has been induced to submit his plan to the consideration of the Profession.

A copy of the case, and the author's first opinion upon it, will best convey to the reader the precise point at issue, and the proposed mode of meeting it:—

CASE.

On the marriage of G. H. esq. with Miss M. W. W. a sum of 15,000*l.* (the property of Mr. H.) was vested in trustees upon trust, to pay unto, or permit Mr. H. to receive the interest and dividends for his life, and immediately after his decease, in case the said M. W. W. should survive him, upon trust to pay unto, or permit her to receive, the said interest and dividends during the then remainder of her life; and on the decease of the survivor of Mr. H. and his said intended wife, upon trust for the children of the marriage, as the parents or the survivors should appoint, &c. and in default of children, then, in case the said M. W. W. should survive her intended husband, upon trust for the said M. W. W. her executors, administrators, and assigns; but in case she should happen to die in the lifetime of the said G. H. upon trust for the said G. H. his executors, administrators, and assigns.

Mr. H. some time since, granted two annuities respectively determinable on his death, and assigned his life interest in the before-mentioned sum of 15,000*l.*

for securing the payment of the same. The surplus interest and dividends of the fund, after paying the annuities, amount to 160*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.* which (subject to some charges of arrangement) are paid to Mr. H.

Mr. and Mrs. H. have never had, and in the ordinary course of nature, cannot now expect to have, any child, and they are desirous of disposing of a part of this sum of 15,000*l.* or of borrowing money upon it. It has been suggested that, as the trusts involve reversionary interests in a married woman, this cannot be done; but there being the most urgent necessity that a sum of money should be immediately raised upon the surplus income and on the reversion,

Your opinion is requested whether there is any mode by which a good title could be made to a purchaser or mortgagee.

OPINION.

"I have never known or heard of a good title being made in case of a fund situated as this 15,000*l.* is, though the occasion must often have arisen, but I know no other reason why it cannot be done; for, upon principle, it appears to me, that if Mr. H. were to assign all his interest in the fund to a trustee, such trusts as Mrs. H. should appoint, and Mrs. H. were afterwards to appoint in favour of herself, her executors, or administrators, Mrs. H. would have an immediate absolute interest in the fund, subject to the annuities and the now next to impossible emergency of the birth of children; and that the fund subject would be brought within the disposition of Mr. H.; and if with the consent of the annuitants, it were to be transferred to Mr. H. and a trustee for the annuitants, or to a purchaser and such trustee, a reduction into possession would be effected, and all claim of Mrs. H. in the event of her surviving Mr. H. would be defeated. I have never known an instance of a settlement with such limitations being unobscured in this way, but the result appears to me inevitable."

This opinion was, it seems, approved by a distinguished conveyancer, to whom it was referred, before it was acted upon, the case of Bar v. Bar (2 Con. & Law, 605) appeared, and was supposed to affect the question. It was accordingly again returned for further consideration with reference to that decision.

The further opinion is here given at great length, and all the cases bearing on the question are reviewed, the author adhering to his original view as to the practicability of his plan. But for all this the reader is referred to the pamphlet.

SALE OF OATLANDS ESTATE.—On Tuesday, the valuable freehold property of Oatlands, which was for upwards of 40 years the favourite residence of his Royal Highness the Duke of York, and for some years in the occupation of Lord Francis Egerton, but which was latterly in the possession of Mr. Hughes Ball Hughes, was disposed of by auction, at the Auction Mart, by Mr. Driver. The estate comprised the mansion, park, pleasure grounds, several freehold farms, and villa residences, &c. consisting of 878 acres, the whole in the parish of Walton, being tithe free. The estate was divided into 64 lots. Of this 336 acres were apportioned for building sites, and as these abutted upon the line of the South Western Railway, the land fetched very high prices, averaging above 100*l.* an acre. The mansion, with its extensive lawn, pleasure grounds, and park, containing about 97 acres, went for 11,000*l.*; the farm, with 27 acres, was sold for 2,400*l.*; lot 20, Westbridge Lodge entrance, with 4 acres, produced 610*l.*; lot 38, the dairy, with 113 acres, was knocked down for 8,500*l.*; lot 40, a walled kitchen garden, 18 acres, was sold for 2,000*l.*; lot 42, about 11 acres, realised 1,810*l.*; and lot 46, with a lodge, and 2 acres, 440*l.* The whole property fetched 64,496*l.*, exclusive of the timber valued at about 6,142*l.* and upwards.

[We have received the particulars of this important sale, which, at a moment when the value of property under impending changes is so much questioned, will be found both interesting and useful; but press of matter compels us to postpone them until next week.]

The following scale of charges, reduced more than one-third, has been adopted for Advertisements of Estates for Sale, &c. exceeding 10 lines in length:

For the first 70 words 5*s.*

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Ex parte VAN SANDAU.

May 9.

Practice—Costs of Consequential Proceedings—Costs of Injunction.

Enforcing Payment of Costs in Bankruptcy.
In this matter the petition was again placed in the paper for the purpose of taking the decision of the Court on two points which had not been mentioned in the former judgment.

Bayshore and Holt said, that on deciding the injunction granted by the Court of Review to be invalid, the Lord Chancellor reserved the question of costs until after the trial of the action then pending by Mr. Van Sandau against Messrs. Turner and Hensman, inasmuch as the jury, in assessing damages, might take into their consideration the amount of those costs; and therefore his Lordship should be of opinion that Mr. Van Sandau was entitled to such costs, and they should also be awarded to him by the jury, he would be paid twice over. That was the first point now to be decided.

The second point was this: when it was agreed to leave the whole matter of the petition and the action to the decision of the Lord Chancellor, Mr. Swanton, on the part of his clients, consented, subject to the question whether any action at all would lie; and claimed to have that point argued before his lordship by two common law counsel. That argument was made by Mr. Humphrey and Mr. Cleasby, and it was now asked on the behalf of Mr. Van Sandau, that the costs of that argument should be considered costs in the action. On the same occasion affidavits were necessary to explain to the Court some facts with respect to the course of proceeding in bankruptcy, and the petitioner also asked that the costs of those affidavits should be allowed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In assessing the damages I did not include any costs. I did not say I should give the petitioner the costs on the injunction. I simply reserved those costs.

Swanton and Sims contended that this was in substance a rehearing, and that although the decision of the chief judge had been overturned, still, as the whole matter arose out of a gross libel on the part of Mr. Van Sandau, he ought not to have his costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The question for my consideration is, what would the chief judge have done as to costs, had he refused the injunction?

Swanton.—It was an application to restrain an action for an act done in obedience to the order of the Court; and, in such case, had the application been refused, it would have been without costs. The costs of affidavits asked for by the petitioner are not within the principle of the judgment delivered a few days ago.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I do not consider this to be out of the order; a circumstance has occurred which required inquiry, and I think these affidavits in explanation fall within the same principle.

Swanton then mentioned a cross-application on the petition of Messrs. Turner and Hensman, which asked that the minutes of the order may be amended, by directing that Mr. Van Sandau pay the costs of Messrs. Turner and Hensman in the court below, on the order of the 3rd February. The Court had given them the costs of the appeal on that order.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I varied the order; if I vary the order, how can I give the party supporting the order the costs of it? On the plaintiff obtaining a verdict in a court of law, the costs follow of course. I thought the plaintiff here entitled to a verdict, upon the ground of the informality of the order under which he had been imprisoned. Whoever has the carriage of an order of the Court is liable for the consequences. If the petitioner was arrested upon a warrant which is no warrant, the party having the carriage of it must be responsible.

Bayshore, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I am to consider the question of costs upon this order, as if the chief judge had refused the motion for an injunction. In the usual course Mr. Van Sandau would have been entitled to costs. The parties had requested me to determine all the questions between them, including the action at law, and to put an end to all further litigation. There were costs incurred by the argument of the common law counsel as to the petitioner's right to maintain the action; and some further affidavits were required; and I think Mr. Van Sandau is entitled to the costs of both, as having a decision in his favour upon the action. Then there are the costs of the appeal against the various orders; the respondents succeeded as to one order; one was varied, and another of the orders was rescinded. I shall give no costs on either side.

Bayshore asked that the costs should be taxed by the taxing officer of the Court of Queen's Bench, because, if they were taxed in bankruptcy, there was no summary means of enforcing payment by any order or form used in the Court of Bankruptcy.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The order for taxing costs is one made on appeal to me; if the costs are not paid you can make an application here upon the subject.

Bayshore asked that the cross-petition of Messrs. Turner and Hensman should be dismissed with costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—No; I give no costs.

The following is the order made by his Lordship upon the whole matter, as decided by him, with the consent of the parties:—

Order.—That so much of the Order of the Court of Review of the 3d day of February, 1844, as directs the petitioner to pay to the said respondents their costs, charges, and expenses, be varied by expanding therefrom the words "charges and expenses," and in other respects I confirm the said order. That it be referred back to Mr. Visard, an officer of the Court of Bankruptcy, to re-tax the bill of costs of the respondents under the aforesaid order. Order, that the respondents do pay to the said petitioner what (if anything) after such taxation, shall be found due to the said petitioner from the said respondents. Order, that the order of the Court of Review, made in the above matter, or on the 21st day of February, 1844, whereby it is ordered, that upon the said petitioner depositing the sum of 200*l.*, as therein mentioned, the said petitioner should be discharged from the custody of the Keeper of the Queen's prison, in which he then was under the order of the Court of Review of the 4th day of February, 1844; and the parties to the said order or either of them were to be at liberty to apply to the Court touching the matters of the petition upon which the said order of the 3d day of February was founded, without petition be discharged. Order, that the costs of and occasioned thereby, which have been taxed and paid by the said petitioner to the said respondents; declare that the said petitioner is entitled to a verdict against the said respondents upon the issue joined upon the plea of not guilty in the action brought by the said petitioner against the said respondents in the Court of Queen's Bench; assess the damages in such action at 10*l.* on the whole record. Order, that the respondents do pay to the said petitioner the said sum of 10*l.* being the sum so assessed by me as and for damages accruing to the said petitioner as aforesaid. Direct the taxing master of the Court of Bankruptcy to tax the costs of the said action and of the argument on the said demurrer, in the same manner and form as they would be taxed in the Court of Queen's Bench. Order, that the said respondents do pay to the said petitioner such last-mentioned costs.

IMPORTANT JUDGMENT.

Re THE SUITORS OF THE COURT.

Re WHITING.

Master's Office—Practice.

This was a petition presented by thirty-two of the suitors of the Court, complaining of the course adopted by Master Lynch in the employment of the clerks in his office, which they alleged to be injurious to the Profession and a violation of the Act of Parliament for the regulation of the Court of Chancery. The grievance was in substance that Master Lynch, under the pretence of employing the two clerks indiscriminately in the performance of the duties, was evading the Act of Parliament, which required that the person who performed the duties of chief clerk should be a person who had been for ten years a junior clerk, and it was insinuated that he did so in order to favour Mr. Wright, the junior clerk, who, although he was not qualified, did the duties of chief clerk, and was intended to receive the appointment when he had served the necessary period. The matter was argued at some length before the Lord Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls in June, last year, when Mr. Romilly and Mr. R. Palmer appeared for the petition, and Mr. Stuart (with Mr. Campbell) for Master Lynch. The argument was not then concluded, and it stood over for the vacation, on an understanding that some communication would take place between the Court and Mr. Lynch. That communication did take place, but Mr. Lynch persevered in the same course, and the question was again argued in November, before the Lord Chancellor and Lord Langdale, by the same counsel. The matter then stood over for consideration.

This morning the Lord Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls came into court, and gave their formal opinions, the Master of the Rolls reading an elaborate statement of his view of the question raised by the petition.

The MASTER of the ROLLS commenced by observing that he attended for the purpose of submitting to his lordship (the Lord Chancellor) his opinion on a case to which he had given his most earnest attention. It had been represented by certain solicitors of the Court, who in that character were important officers of the Court, that in the office of Master Lynch the business of suitors was not conducted in a manner consistent with the policy and intention of the Chancery Regulation Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 18), or with the accustomed practice and well-known duties of the clerks employed by the Master. The question was one of great public importance, as affecting the administration of justice, and the case was of such a nature that his lordship thought it ought to be considered purely on public grounds, and that all matters of a personal nature were to be entirely disregarded. It appeared that in the year 1843, on the death of the chief clerk of Master Lynch, a Mr. Wright was the junior clerk in the office, and Mr. Whiting had been employed as the assistant of Mr. Wright. Neither Mr. Wright nor Mr. Whiting had been admitted as a solicitor, nor had Mr. Wright been a junior clerk in the office of a Master for the period of ten years. Wright was not, therefore, qualified by law for the office of chief clerk, but Whiting had been employed for more than ten years as junior clerk in the office of Master Cross, and was qualified. Whiting was accordingly appointed chief clerk. In the year 1845, a petition was presented to the Court by certain solicitors, complaining that notwithstanding this appointment of Whiting to the office of chief clerk, he did not perform the duties of chief clerk, but that those duties were performed by Wright, the junior or copying clerk, who was not a person qualified by law to perform the duties of chief clerk, and praying the Court to make such order as the nature of the case seemed to require. The answer made to the complaint in that petition was, that there were no peculiar duties which could be exclusively called the duties of the chief clerk in the office of a Master, for the Master had a right so to distribute the duties of his office between his two clerks as to render their services most efficient and most conducive for the proper and speedy transaction of the business before him. The question to be determined was the correctness of the proposition laid down in the answer on the part of the Master. The Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 94, sec. 18, known as the Chancery Regulation Act, it was enacted that no person should be hereafter appointed to the office of chief clerk unless he had been admitted a solicitor of the court for not less than five years, or had been a junior or copying clerk in the Master's office for ten years. Considering the very peculiar and imperfect nature of the business transacted in the Master's office, the responsibility of the Master himself for the proper transaction of that business, and the urgent necessity for the avoidance of all interruption in the course of judicial inquiries, it certainly appeared reasonable, that if due vigilance and personal supervision were exercised by the Master, little danger could arise from the exercise of the discretion of the Master in apportioning the business of his office, and that it would be very inconvenient to restrain the Master from employing one clerk, being competent, to assist in the performance of duties not ordinarily belonging to him. In the case of sickness or accident, or great pressure of one kind of business, or in such an emergency as to require and justify a departure from ordinary rules, it was in the power of the Master, in the exercise of his discretion, using due vigilance, to employ the clerks in the manner in which he might upon due consideration think the emergency of the case required. If that had been the sort of distribution which had really taken place, and which the argument against the petition referred to, it ought, with some qualification, to have been acceded to; but an authority to direct clerks to assist each other occasionally in the performance of each others' duties did not appear to his lordship to afford support to the proposition that neither clerk had any peculiar duties, or imply such an authority on the part of the Master to change the nature of the office of the two clerks, so as to transfer permanently or habitually the most important duties from the one to the other. Looking at the provisions of the Chancery Regulation Act, the Master appeared to have no such authority. That Act expressly recognized two clerks holding two different offices, and receiving a different measure of remuneration. A specific legal qualification was required for the person to be appointed to the office of chief clerk, but no such qualification was required for the junior or copying clerk. The appointment of the junior clerk was left to the discretion of the Master, under the presumption that he would take care to select a competent person for the performance of its duties. To the chief clerk there was given a salary of 1,000*l.* a year, with an express prohibition against receiving any fee or gratuity. To the junior clerk there was given a salary of 150*l.* a year, but with an allowance of copying money, at the rate of three-halfpence a folio. The amount of that copying money was uncertain, depending on the length of the documents in the office, of which copies, he was afraid to say, were not at all times required, but nevertheless allowed. The reason for the remarkable difference in the name, qualification, and mode of remuneration of the two clerks was not stated in the Act of Parliament, but it must be presumed they were founded upon the difference of the duties to be performed by the respective holders of the offices; neither could it have been intended to thus fetter the Master in his choice of a chief clerk by requiring a qualification, and yet permit him to delegate the performance of the duties in respect of which the qualification was imposed, to a person not possessing the qualification. Neither could it be intended that the Master should delegate to the junior clerk, who had an express interest in the copying money, the performance of the same duties which had previously been performed by the chief clerk, from whom all interest in fees and copying money was expressly taken away. Looking at the provisions of the Act of Parliament, his lordship could entertain no doubt that the Master had not a power to distribute the business of his office between the two clerks, or habitually to allot to the one who was not legally qualified, and who had an interest in copying money, those duties in respect of which the Legislature had thought fit to require that the person performing them should have a specific qualification, should not have an interest in the copying money, and in the absence of that interest should be kept free from the temptation of increasing the amount of copying money. The question, then, to be determined was, what were the duties of these offices? The Legislature had not attempted to define them; it had not even mentioned them; and therefore it had been contended at the bar that the Master had an undoubted right to determine what they should be, and how they were to be distributed. That would be much the same thing as conferring on the Master a power of allotting to the unqualified person the duties intended by the Legislature to be performed by the qualified person. The allegation of such unlimited power being invested in the Master appeared to be unfounded. Notwithstanding some varieties in the duties of the clerks, and notwithstanding the authority the Master had to exercise considerable discretion on the apportionment of the duties, there was no man of learning and experience in the business of the court who did not well and familiarly know the broad distinction between the general duties of the chief clerk and those of the copying or junior clerk. Any attempt to define these duties accurately might be difficult, and even if it succeeded it would probably tend rather to embarrass than to expedite the performance of the business of the office. The circumstances of the case did not appear to require that such an attempt should be made, but as an argument had been deduced from it, some investigation might not appear unnecessary. His lordship, in pursuance of that view, stated very minutely the original duties of the Master's clerks, taken from the earliest records of the court. He then cited the evidence before the parliamentary commission in the year 1826, and read the provisions of the Chancery Regulation Act of 1833, for the purpose of shewing that a broad distinction between the duties of the chief and junior clerk had been uniformly recognised, the duties of the chief clerk being, like those of the Master himself, of a character almost judicial while those of the junior clerk were purely ministerial, and even mechanical, so much so indeed, that one of the witnesses stated they might be performed by a boy from Christ's Hospital after a very brief instruction. His lordship also proved from the same documents and authorities that the Masters, in the performance of their duties and the regulation of their offices, were, and always had been, under the control and supervision of the Lord Chancellor. His lordship thought that there was not the slightest reason for suggesting that the business of the office of Master Lynch was in the least degree neglected or ill conducted, or that there was any temptation offered to the junior clerk, in the nature of the duties assigned to him, to increase the amount of copying money. No complaint on that subject had indeed been made or ever hinted at in the course of the argument. The strict attention to the duties of his own office, for which Master Lynch was so honourably distinguished, and in support of which his lordship was happy to bear his own testimony, together with the virtue of Mr. Wright in the discharge of his duties, might have saved the office from the commission of any wrong; but the nature of the duties confided to Mr. Wright was such that the Legislature had been induced to exclude all temptation to wrong. The mischief attempted to be guarded against by the Legislature might be almost insensible, and might escape even the vigilant attention of such a Master as Mr. Lynch. If these mischiefs were even to arise, and were to exist to a considerable extent, no evidence of it might be capable of being produced; for unfortunately it was not the interest of any one practising the law to complain of the length of the documents; a long document being not only a source of profit to the clerk who drew it up, to the stationer who wrote it, and to the office who obtained the copying money, but to every one who received remuneration in connection with it. His lordship was much afraid that in such a case, the absence of complaint would not establish the absence of all ground of complaint; but assuming, as he probably ought to do, that mischief did not at present exist, still it was necessary to guard against its occurrence in the manner provided by the Legislature. The law at present was not obeyed, and the risk remained, which obedience to the law would remove. Under all these circumstances, his lordship was of opinion that the business of the office of Mr. Lynch was not distributed in conformity with the intentions of the Legislature. If that should ultimately be also the opinion of the Lord Chancellor, his lordship ventured to presume that Mr. Lynch would not require any special direction as to what ought to be done, or any other inducement to his adoption of the necessary proceedings for putting the business of his office on a safe foundation.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said he had requested the assistance of the Master of the Rolls upon the hearing of this petition, on the ground that his lordship was the head of the department to which the case referred. It was hardly necessary to say, that he entirely concurred in the very full and elaborate opinion which the Master of the Rolls had given on the occasion. In fact, he himself had expressed the same opinion to Master Lynch several months before, when the question was originally brought before the Court. The commissioners of 1740, in the time of Lord Hardwicke, and the commission of 1816, both drew a marked distinction between the two offices of chief and junior clerk, the chief commissioner in 1816, Sir W. Alexander, being himself a Master. They thought the junior clerk a person very inferior to the other, and not as a clerk or a minister of justice. When they came, however, to consider the office of chief clerk, they went into considerable detail as to the duties. The Legislature seemed to have taken the same view of the subject when they passed the 3 & 4 Wm. 4. It was probable, in framing the provisions of that Act, they had reviewed the report of the commission of 1816. In that Act, a marked distinction was drawn between the two clerks. It was quite inconsistent with the provisions of that Act that the Master should have the power of directing the duties of the senior clerk to be performed by a person not having the required qualifications. It was no answer to say that the person performing those duties would, from long experience, be competent to discharge them. The Legislature had thought it right, for the purpose of securing, so far as it could be secured by legislative enactment, a competent qualification for the proper discharge of the duties of the office to require a particular test, and that test must be adhered to. He did not mean to say, and he agreed with the Master of the Rolls, that no part of the ministerial duties of the chief clerk might, under the direction of the Master, be performed by the junior clerk. That would be to draw the rule too tightly. But, in fact and in substance, what was meant was this, that the spirit of the Act of Parliament must not be evaded. The Master was not justified by any contrivance or management to get rid of the qualification. It was because he thought that in this case there had been a departure from the spirit and principle of the Act of Parliament, that he thought he was bound to come to the conclusion that the Master had acted in this respect with irregularity. He agreed with the Master of the Rolls, that it was unnecessary at present to make any order on the subject. This intimation of opinion would be sufficient, he was sure, to induce Mr. Lynch, or any other Master, to perform his duty. But from all he had observed of Mr. Lynch, and of his personal conduct, no individual could by possibility perform the duties of the responsible office which he held with more assiduity, intelligence, and ability, than he did. He had already intimated, and he should take care to communicate to Mr. Lynch the opinion of the Court on the subject of the petition, and he had no doubt that would render all further proceedings unnecessary.

Stuart, on the part of Mr. Lynch, admitted that an intimation such as the Lord Chancellor alluded to, had been given to him, but in consequence of some understanding that a difference of opinion prevailed on the subject, he had not changed the course of proceeding in his office. As, however, their lordships had now expressed an opinion adverse to that course, he had to suggest, on the part of Mr. Lynch, that their lordships, in conformity with the prayer of the petition, might make a formal order on the subject.

The LORD CHANCELLOR thought that Mr. Lynch had no right to complain of the manner in which the subject had been discussed and treated in that court. So far as the Master was concerned, every one had concurred in expressing a favourable opinion of the honourable manner in which he had performed the duties of his office. He had himself expressed to Master Lynch, in the first instance, the opinion which he had expressed to-day. He had never departed from that opinion, nor had he ever entertained a doubt about it. He believed that Master Lynch, from some other quarter, had been led to suppose that the question was not so clear as he (the Lord Chancellor) had always considered it. Certainly the Master had never received from him any intimation of the slightest doubt of his opinion. The construction of the Act of Parliament was so obvious as to render it hardly possible to evade its operation. The Court was thought it sufficient to intimate its opinion without doing any thing further.

A great number of solicitors attended the delivery of this judgment, as the question has produced much excitement among the Profession.

VICAR-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Monday, March 16.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL W. HODGSON.

Bequest for purposes of charity—Mortmain—Interdict in land.

C. F. by his will bequeathed unto his executors in trust for the establishment or institution of a charitable receptacle, if the same could be done, for a certain number of old men; but if no such institution could conveniently be established, he requested the same might be disposed of in charitable donations. Held, that the primary object being the acquisition of land, such bequest was void.

This question arose out of an information filed Feb. 3, 1846, at the relation of Thomas Geo. Grove, against Frederick Hodgson and Henry Pomeoy, executors of the will of Mary Flaherty. It stated that Christopher Flaherty made his will in 1804, wherein, after giving certain bequests, and appointing Thos. Wright and Henry Hudson executors, proceeded as follows:—"I also request that all my just debts and funeral expences may be defrayed, and the rest, residue, and remainder of my personal property and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, I give, devise, and bequeath, unto my said executors in trust for the establishment or institution of a charitable receptacle, if the same can be done, for twenty-seven poor old men of England, and the same number of Ireland, to be under the Roman Catholic Bishop of London, and the Roman Catholic Bishop of Dublin; but if no such institution can be conveniently established, I request that the same may be disposed of in charitable donations to persons of the above description of 6*l.* each, and whenever an opportunity offers, that it may be added to any contributions for a similar purpose; 30*l.* of which sum I give to each of my executors." That the said Christopher Flaherty departed this life shortly after the date of his said will, leaving Mary Flaherty, his daughter and only child, his sole next of kin, him surviving. That the said Thomas Wright and Henry Hudson duly renounced probate of the said will, and thereupon letters of administration of the personal estate and effects of the said Christopher Flaherty, with the will annexed, were granted to the said Mary Flaherty, who thereby became the sole legal personal representative of the said Christopher Flaherty, and as such got in the whole of the personal estate of the said C. Flaherty, to a very considerable amount, and thereout paid and satisfied the funeral and testamentary expences, and all the debts of the said testator, together with the whole of the legacies given by the said will; and after payment and satisfaction thereof, there remained in her hands a very considerable sum, the residue of the said testator's estate. That the said Mary Flaherty never applied any part of such residuary estate to the charitable purposes in the said will contained, but applied the whole of such surplus to her own use and benefit. That the said Mary Flaherty departed this life in November, 1845, having, by her will, appointed Frederick Hodgson and Henry Pomeoy her executors. The information charged that the said Mary Flaherty retained the whole of the residue, and applied the same to her own use, in fraud of the charitable intentions and direction of the said testator, and prayed that the bequest of the rest and residue might be declared to be a good and valid charitable bequest, and that the same might be established and carried out under the decree of the Court, and that the defendants might be directed and decreed to make good out of the assets of the said Mary Flaherty received by them, the full amount of the said residuary estate so retained by her as aforesaid, with interest. To this the defendants put in a general demurrer.

Bethell and Abraham, in support of the demurrer, contended, first, that the bequest was within the provisions of the Statute of Mortmain, and consequently void. Secondly, that after such a lapse of time from the testator's death, the Court would not interfere. Thirdly, that the bequest was of so uncertain a character that there could not be any decree made upon it. With respect to the first point, the word "receptacle" clearly denoted an intention of acquiring land and buildings. In one sense, a "receptacle" meant an almshouse; and the expression, "if no such institution can conveniently be established," was intended to mean a physical and not a legal disability; and, according to the decision of Giblett v. Hobson (3 My. & K. 530), where there is a possibility for the money to be laid out in land, the bequest is void. A clear intention is shown of acquiring freehold land and buildings. As to the second point, as this is not a case of trust, the lapse of time is, prima facie, a bar. The property was given to his executors, as trustees, but the testator's daughter, Mrs. Flaherty, was no trustee, and her possession being adverse entitles her to the property.

Cases cited: Attorney-General v. Tyndall (2 Eden, 207; cases in p. 211); Attorney-General v. Parsons (8 Ves. 186); Henshaw v. Atkinson (3 Madd. 306); Blanford v. Thackerell (2 Ves. jun. 338); Attorney-General v. Rogers (2 Ves. 714); Mather v. Scott (3 Kcc. 172); Ingleby v. Dobson (4 Russ. 342; Shelford on Mortmain, 173).

Stuart and Blunt, for the information, contended that to render a bequest void, there ought to be a clear and explicit direction to invest the money in land, which was not so in the present case; and that the word "receptacle" was capable of a much wider signification than that attempted to be assigned to it by the other side. The testator might have intended that a place should be hired which would be good. But even supposing he did intend that a place should be built, it might have been erected on land already in mortmain, which would have been legal. As it respected the lapse of time, Mrs. Flaherty was an executrix, and got possession of the property, which constituted her a trustee for those who claimed to be beneficially entitled under the will. The testator having left a discretionary power with the trustees, the Court will see that they exercise that discretion in behalf of the charitable institution. (Johnson v. Swann, 3 Mad. 457; Attorney-General v. Williams, 4 Bro. C. C. 526; 2 Cox, 387; Attorney-General v. Stepany, 10 Ves. 22.)

Bethell, in reply, referred to Facciolati, voce "Receptaculum," to prove that it signified land; and contended that there must be no option left in the trustees, for that in order to make such a bequest valid, there ought to be nothing which would give them a power to buy and build; and supposing an option might be exercised, it would be necessary for an inquiry to be had before the Master whether it could conveniently be done, and this would decide that the bequest was good.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Upon this question, I must decide, as well as I am able, what it is the testator meant. That he was an illiterate person is quite clear, because, after giving to his trustees all the rest, residue, and remainder of his personal property and effects, he proceeds to declare the trusts; and then he says, "if no such institution can be conveniently established, I request that the same may be disposed of." He then mentions the disposition, and that they were to endeavour, when an opportunity should offer, that it might be added to his contributions for a similar purpose, "30l. of which sum," he having mentioned no sum before, except so far as the general corpus of his estate went. Now, although in point of law it might be said that the persons whom he appointed his executors and trustees were not entitled to receive their legacies, seeing they did not prove the will, yet the information states that the whole of the legacies were paid; and I mention this for the sake of shewing that notwithstanding they had renounced and declined to take out administration, they nevertheless continued trustees, not merely by operation of law, but by receiving their legacies. Indeed I was struck with the singularity that such a question should be allowed to sleep for forty years, and that no attempt should have been made by the trustees to enforce the bequest. Then the question is, what the testator really did mean? He gives the residue to his executors in trust, for the establishment of a charitable receptacle, if the same can be done, for twenty-seven poor old men of England, and the same number of Ireland. Now the word "receptacle," when applied to human beings, does not imply a dwelling-place; then there is a direction to procure a dwelling place for fifty-four old people; and what is that but a direction that land shall be procured? Now there seems to be nothing in this case that points out hiring and taking first of all one tenement and then another, but there is to be one receptacle; and there is no direction to apply a portion of the property, as in the case before Sir John Leach (Johnson v. Swann, ante), but the whole corpus is to be immediately applied to the procurement of a receptacle for fifty-four people. Then he says "if it can be done." Of course he meant that; but he means not only the procurement of a dwelling place, but also the system of government: he refers to it as being intended to be under the management of two bishops. Again, when he says, "but if no such institution can be conveniently established," he does not apply it to the law, but to the difficulty of lodging so many, and of the manner in which the management of this institution shall be carried out. He then goes on to say, "if no such institution can be conveniently established, I request that the same may be disposed of in charitable donations to persons of the above description." It appears to me, therefore, that the primary and direct object was the acquisition of a dwelling place, and it is only upon the contingency of the affair not being established that he makes the disposition over. He was, upon this construction, merely pointing to the contingency, from want of convenience, which might frustrate his intention. Upon the whole I cannot but think that this is within the Statute of Mortmain, according to the rules established, and I must therefore allow the demurrer.

ROLLS COURT.

March 7 and 9.

MUGGERIDGE v. SLOWMAN.

Practice—New Orders of the 8th May, 1845—Reference of Exceptions instanter—Affidavit as to delay, &c.—Injunction cause.

The Court will in some cases, on an ex parte application of the plaintiff, order exceptions to an answer to be referred instanter, and without waiting for the expiration of the time limited by the 16th of the New Orders, Article 25; but the application must be supported by an affidavit as to the facts, stating that the plaintiff will be prejudiced unless the exceptions are immediately referred to the Master, and that the application is bond fide, and not intended to create delay.

This was an ex parte application to the Court, in a common injunction cause, for leave to refer exceptions which had been taken to the answer for insufficiency, immediately and without waiting for the expiration of the eight days after the filing of the exceptions, as directed by the 25th Article of the 16th of the New Orders of the 8th May, 1845. It appeared that the answer had been filed upon the 23rd of February last, and that exceptions thereto for insufficiency were filed on the 5th of March instant, and that notice of trial of an action at law was served on the 3rd for the 23rd of March instant; hence the necessity of the present application.

Rolls, for the motion, said it was absolutely necessary, for the purposes of justice, to have the exceptions referred instanter, as the trial at law was so near; but he did not produce any affidavit in support of the application.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said, he saw no objection to making the order sought, provided that a proper affidavit was produced, shewing that the plaintiff would be prejudiced by the delay that would arise from not being allowed to refer the exceptions till after the expiration of the eight days mentioned in the Order.

9th March. Rolls now produced an affidavit by the plaintiff's solicitor, stating the dates of the proceedings in the cause and the day of trial of the action; and that the plaintiff in the action, as the trustee and friend of a third party, was suing to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. There was no statement, however, in the affidavits that the application to the Court was bond fide, and not for the purpose of delay.

The MASTER of the ROLLS made the order, but, in doing so, he observed there could be no doubt that orders such as that then made might be made in proper cases; but that it ought to be stated by affidavit that the plaintiff would be prejudiced, if not allowed to refer the exceptions immediately, and that that proceeding was not taken for the purpose of delay. Though the Court would not, so soon after the New Orders coming into operation, be very strict, still it was not quite of course to grant applications like the present. The affidavit in this case was not in the best shape, and he would consider what would be a proper form for affidavits in reference to future applications.

April 15 and 30.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. ROOSE.

Practice—New Orders—Dismissal of information—Attorney-General—Privilege—Rehearing—Restoring cause to paper, An information by the Attorney-General without a relator being dismissed at the hearing by reason of the plaintiff's default in appearing, will not be restored to the paper on a motion for that purpose, as if it had been merely struck out, the dismissal being, by the 117th of the New Orders, a decree.

By the 4th of the New Orders, an information is included in the term "bill," and, by the 117th, dismissal of a bill at the hearing, by reason of the plaintiff making default, is equivalent to a dismissal on the merits: quare, whether these orders apply to an information by the Attorney-General without a relator, and if not, whether such an information can be dismissed, first, generally, and if not, then, secondly, for want of prosecution.

Quere, whether the equity jurisdiction of the Exchequer being transferred to the Court of Chancery, the rights and privileges of the Crown are not also transferred, such as that there is no dismissal in the case of the Crown, but that the judgment should be "let the defendant go without a day," analogous to a nonsuit at law, though the 5 Vict. c. 5, directs the proceedings to be conducted as Chancery proceedings.

This was an information filed by the Attorney-General without a relator, against Lady Roose, the defendant, as representative of her late husband, Sir David Roose, for an account of moneys received by him, and for which he was accountable to the Board of Stamps and Taxes. An answer having been put in to the information, the plaintiff filed a replication thereto, and in due course it was the duty of the solicitor of the Board to set down the cause for hearing. The solicitor having neglected to do so within the proper time, the defendant set it down, and on the 16th of March served the solicitor with a subpoena to hear judgment; and on the 19th, no one appearing for the plaintiff when the cause was called on, an order was made dismissing the information. This, by the effect of the 4th and 117th of the New Orders, was equivalent to a dismissal on the merits, if an information by the Attorney-General could be so dismissed.

Maule moved to have the cause restored to the paper on the ground of surprise, and of its being struck out of the paper by accident; and he relied also on the prerogative of the Crown, in respect of which an information by the Attorney-General, without a relator, could not be dismissed.

Kindersley, for Lady Roose, said, that no one appearing for the Attorney-General, the Court had been asked to dismiss with costs, which was accordingly done; and now the application was to restore the cause to the paper as if merely struck out; whereas, an order being made to dismiss it is equivalent to a decree, and may be pleaded in bar to another suit.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said, he would allow the motion to stand over, to afford an opportunity of modifying it, and putting it in a different shape. It was, at present, adapted to an existent cause, but this cause was now non-existent, and the motion must be moulded accordingly. Besides, there must be an affidavit to show that no hardship or oppression was intended; the prerogative must be saved, but it must not be abused to the oppression of the subject.

Thursday, April 30.—An affidavit of the solicitor of the Board of Stamps and Taxes was produced, stating that when he was served with the subpoena he examined the paper of causes, and found this one so far down that it could not be expected to come on for some time; but that, subsequently, by reason of the transfer of several causes from the Rolls to the paper of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, it came on to be heard, and that he was not aware of its coming on at the time it did; and that he, unlike other solicitors, was so much occupied in the public business, that accidents of this sort might readily happen. This affidavit being read, a motion was made to discharge the order of dismissal made on the 19th of March.

The Attorney-General (with him Maule) said that he had offered the defendant her costs if she would allow the cause to be restored, but as she had refused he must stand upon his strict rights. There is no precedent for the order of dismissal, and it cannot be made, and it must now be discharged. These informations were formerly brought in the Exchequer only, but by the 5 Vict. c. 5, the equity jurisdiction of the Exchequer was transferred to the Court of Chancery, and being now exercised here, must be so with all the rights and privileges the Crown formerly possessed, for there is nothing in the 5 Vict. c. 5, which takes away the rights of the Crown, and no general words bind or affect the prerogative. And if the rights of the Crown are not bound by the Act, a fortiori they are not bound by any Order or rule of Court, much less by one in general terms, and not expressly including the Crown. It is an undoubted principle that the Crown never pays costs, and it cannot be maintained that the Court could make a rule that the Crown shall pay costs. So the Queen is always present, and cannot be nonsuited, and no rule of Court could deprive her of that privilege. The New Orders, therefore, cannot affect the Crown. There is no instance of an information by the Attorney-General being dismissed for want of prosecution, but the contrary is the case; and the form of the judgment always is not dismissed, but "let the defendant go without a day." (1 Fowl.

Exch. Pract. 34; 2 Fowl. Mach. Pract. 33; Attorney-General v. Hession, 6 Price, 312; Attorney-General v. Lord Burdley, 6 Price, 32.) It may be said, then, is there no way of compelling a determination of a suit? Yes, there is, by entering a nolle prosequi. (The King v. Robert Masters, Parker, 50.) It is clear the Attorney-General cannot at least be nonsuited, and this order sought to be discharged is a nonvult. [THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—It turns on the New Orders, which you say do not apply. By the 4th, an information is comprehended in the term "bill;" and by the 117th, an order of dismissal by reason of the plaintiff's default at the hearing is equivalent to a dismissal on the merits, and is a bar to another suit.] The Order says it is to be dismissed with costs; shewing, therefore, that it is not intended to apply to the Crown, which pays no costs. [THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—This dismissal must be considered a decree for the defendant. You may have a re-hearing in the same manner as an ordinary subject, on the ground of surprise or other reasonable ground; but you now want to discharge this order, and to have the cause set down again.] A re-hearing would admit the validity of the decree, for which it is submitted there is no precedent; and as a nonsuit might take place at any stage of the proceedings, but not against the Crown, so an information could not be dismissed at any stage, and the matter must have been res judicata to bar another suit. (Pickett v. Loggon, 14 Ves. 232; Brandling v. Ord, 1 Atk. 571.) If there was any privilege in point of pleading in the Exchequer, the transfer of the equity jurisdiction to the Court of Chancery would not destroy it.

Kindersley, for the defendant.—The case of a nonsuit is not analogous to the proceedings in this court. In the common law courts they have a roll and a history of the proceedings from day to day; but here we join issue at once, and there is an end. The order of dismissal is tantamount to a decree on the merits; and to take this case out of the rule, authorities are produced to shew the practice of the Exchequer in such cases; but there is no Act providing that the practice in the Exchequer shall be the practice here. The Attorney-General must contend that the prerogative prevents dismissal here at all. [THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—He says there can be no dismissal generally; secondly, not for want of prosecution; and, thirdly, the New Orders don't apply.] There is no authority here to shew the practice is so; and in the case of Attorney-General v. Dulwich College (3 Beav. 255) the information of the Attorney-General was dismissed. As to an order "to go without a day," no one ever heard of such a thing in this Court. [THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—Put the case as high as you will, it does not preclude a re-hearing of it on sufficient grounds, for nobody, not the Attorney-General alone, can be allowed to be taken by surprise in this court. The order in the Dulwich College case may have been made without consideration.]

The Attorney-General, in reply, was unwilling to admit the validity of the decree by asking a re-hearing.

Kindersley now offered to accept costs, and let the cause be restored.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS thought that was much the better course. He would, however, for the satisfaction of the Attorney-General, look into the practice of the Court as to the point of form raised, and ascertain whether the order should be in the form of dismissal, or "to go without a day."

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Friday, April 24.

WILSON v. STANHOPE.

Practice—Railway—Demurrer—Want of parties. Where a bill, filed by a shareholder on behalf of himself and all the other shareholders of a railway company, which had been amalgamated with another company, against the provisional committee, for an account, charged that the number of shareholders was so great, and their rights and liabilities so subject to change and fluctuation, by death or otherwise, that the plaintiff did not know, and was wholly unable to discover, the names of the other shareholders; and if he had been able to discover their names, it would not be possible, without the greatest inconvenience, to make them parties to the suit, and so to do would render it impossible to bring the suit to a hearing; and that the interests of the said shareholders, except the defendants, were identical with those of the plaintiff, &c.; a demurrer for want of parties was overruled, without prejudice to any question in the cause.

This case was argued upon a demurrer for want of equity and for want of parties, to a bill filed by Mr. R. H. H. Wilson, on behalf of himself and all other shareholders in a company provisionally registered, called the London and Manchester Direct Independent Railway Company (Remington's line) against the Hon. Leicester Stanhope, and others. The bill stated, that a scheme was projected and duly registered in April 1835; for carrying on a direct line of railway between London and Manchester, by means of a capital of 3,000,000*l.* in 60,000 shares of 50*l.* each; that other steps were taken as to borrowing and increase of capital; that the original provisional committee, in association with other defendants on the record, continued to act as the provisional committee; and that the plaintiff had, upon his application, thirty shares allotted to him, and paid his deposit, and signed the Parliamentary contract. The bill then stated that the scheme being at a premium, a rival line was started, under the name of "Rastrick's line," and that the defendants had improperly abandoned Remington's line in favour of Rastrick's line, contrary to the desire of the shareholders. The bill then charged, that the number of shareholders in the said London and Manchester Direct Independent Railway (Remington's line) was so great, and the rights and liabilities of the shareholders were so subject to change and fluctuation by death and otherwise, that, save as therein was stated, the plaintiff did not know, and was wholly unable, to discover the names of the other shareholders; and even if the plaintiff were able to discover their names, it would not be possible, without the greatest inconvenience, to make them parties to the suit, and so to do would render it impossible to bring the suit to a hearing; and also, that the interest of the said shareholders, except the said defendants, were identical with those of the plaintiff in respect of the matters therein stated, or in respect of the property of the said company, and the surplus thereof; and all the said shareholders, other than the said defendants, were fully represented by the plaintiff, and had a common interest in obtaining the relief thereby prayed. The bill then prayed an account of all costs properly incurred by the defendants in the formation of Remington's line; and that, when ascertained, they might be distributed rateably on each share; and that, as to all reserved shares, the defendants might be declared liable to those costs; that the defendants might be directed to pay the remainder of the money received for deposits, after paying the costs, to the plaintiffs, and retain it among themselves for their own propositions; and that an account might be taken of all dealings and transactions of the defendants relating to the company during the time they had acted as the managing committee or provisional directors; and that in taking such account the defendants might be charged with the full amount of the deposits which were or ought to have been payable upon the shares which were reserved and not allotted, and also of all moneys expended by them out of the company's assets in the purchase of shares in the same company, or of stocks or shares in any other company, and received by them by way of profit on the resale of any shares or stocks so purchased by them; also an account of all moneys received for the consideration of abandoning Remington's line in favour of Rastrick's line, and other accounts; and the bill also prayed other relief. The demurrer for want of equity and of parties now coming on.

Cooper and Goodere appeared for the demurring defendant, Stanhope.

Bacon and Colvins for the plaintiff.

The following cases were cited: Richardson v. Larpent (2 Y. & C. 507); Cockburn v. Thompson (16 Ves. 321); Richardson v. Hastings (7 Beav. 306); and Heakes v. Stanhope (8 Jurist, 351).

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The failure of the demurrer for want of equity in this case is too manifest to require any remark. The only other ground alleged by way of demurrer is, the want of parties. The bill states various circumstances of alleged misconduct on the part of persons to whom the conduct of the whole scheme, and the steps towards the perfection of that scheme, were intrusted. It alleges that improper acts have been done, or acts of such a nature and to such an extent improper, as to render it impossible to pursue the scheme. It alleges, besides the matters of detail to which I have referred, that the names of the plaintiff and of the other shareholders on whose behalf the plaintiff sues, have been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation, and for a purpose which has wholly failed. The latter part of the record is thus: [His Honour here read the charge as to the parties before stated.] As to the non-ability to discover the names of the shareholders, I consider that so much of the charge I have read must, for the present argument, be rejected by reason of the late Act of Parliament referred to by Mr. Cooper for the registration of Joint Stock Companies. I think that the allegation of ignorance is one that must be rejected; but the allegation that a greater number remains, although there may possibly be cases in which that allegation would be too vague and loose, yet when it is considered as applying to such an amount as those in question here, it does appear to me not too wide or vague. But with regard to the latter part of those charges, I am of opinion that, upon this record, the principle upon which one of our greatest judges has laid down, and upon which he acted in the case of Cockburn v. Thompson, renders it necessary to overrule the demurrer for want of parties. It is not, however, necessary positively to decide that, because it is the rule of the Court, formerly practised, more generally practised than it is at present or has been of late years, that upon a demurrer where the question is one of any difficulty, it is not necessary to pronounce a final or conclusive opinion; but that the Court sees that it is matter of difficult argument or of reasonable discussion, it may, and often does, overrule the demurrer, saving the benefit of the question raised by it till the hearing of the cause, or in other language, without prejudice to the question. That is the course I propose to take here—to overrule the demurrer without prejudice to any question in the cause; and I shall reserve the costs, unless the plaintiff can shew me that they ought to be taxed of now.

Bacon and Colvins, for the plaintiff, having expressed their willingness that the costs should be taxed, the order was so made, allowing the defendant six weeks within which he was to put in his answer.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WILKINS COURT.

March 22, and May 5.

FREEMAN v. TATHAM.

Trust—Reading answer—Practice.

Where a defendant admits, by his answer, the possession of property charged by the bill, and states the trust upon which he holds it, should the plaintiff read the admission in the answer to prove his case, he will be bound to read the trusts there stated in connection with the possession of property.

The defendant, Martha Tatham, had spent some time in Sion College, and allowed Sarah Freeman to reside with her, as a humble friend and companion. In Feb. 1831, during the time of Sarah Freeman's residence at Sion College, she transferred a small sum of money she had in the public funds into the joint name of the defendant, Martha Tatham, and her own; this transfer was unnotified by the defendant, and she did not even know of it at the time it was effected; Sarah Freeman shortly after informed her of it, and told her that she intended to apply the subsequent savings she should be able to make in the same mode of investment, and that the transfer she had just made, and all subsequent investments were, and would be, with the interest and desire that she, Sarah Freeman, should receive the dividends for herself during their joint lives, and if the defendant survived her, she was to have the entire and absolute benefit of all such Bank Annuities which had been so transferred and might be standing in their joint names, and Sarah Freeman, expressing her entire confidence that the defendant would fulfil every wish and direction which she might give to the defendant concerning the same.

Sarah Freeman continued to reside at Sion College, and at different times told the defendant that it was her wish after her death that the plaintiff should have the sum of 300*l.* If defendant considered her deserving of it, and if not, she should have the interest of 300*l.* for her life only, and that others of her relations, naming them, should have small legacies paid to them, and that the defendant should have the residue.

Sarah Freeman died intestate in the year 1839, without having made any further declaration of trust. At the death of Sarah Freeman, there was the sum of 673*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* Bank Annuities standing in the joint names of herself and the defendant.

Sarah Freeman received the interest upon the Bank Annuities up to the time of her death. After the death of Sarah Freeman, the defendant transferred the sum of 350*l.* Bank Annuities into the names of the plaintiff, and three other defendants, and declared the trust to be for the plaintiff for life, and after her death to the defendant Martha Tatham, absolutely, according to the directions given her by Sarah Freeman, and also paid several small legacies to relations of Sarah Freeman, as she had directed her.

The plaintiff, as sister and next of kin of Sarah Freeman, in March, 1844, filed the present suit, to have an account of all the moneys transferred, and of the estate of Sarah Freeman, and to have it administered under the decree of the Court.

Wood and Prior, for the plaintiff, read only so much of the answer as admitted the investment, and the statement of Sarah Freeman to Martha Tatham of her object in doing so, and what shewed the amount standing in the joint names at the decease of Sarah Freeman, and declined to read any further part of the answer.

Romilly, for the defendant, insisted on reading the subsequent declarations of the wishes of Sarah Freeman in respect to the distribution of the fund as set out in the answer, and, in support of this, cited Bartlett v. Gillon (3 Russ. 167); Davis v. Spawling (1 Russ. & Mylne, 68); Reede v. Whitechurch (3 Sim. 553); Nurse v. Buns (5 Sim. 552); Dummer v. Pitcher (8 Mylne & Keen, 252); Bambow v. Townsend (1 Mylne & Keen, 506).

Wood, contra, cited Thompson v. Lamb (7 Ves. 588); Conroy v. Hayward (1 Young and Coll. in Ch. 33).

Romilly and Nevison for the defendants.—There is a strong distinction between the mode of dealing with the answer of an executor and a case similar to this.

uary, in the year of our Lord 1845, in a certain other discourse, the defendant then had, in the presence of and hearing of divers other good and worthy subjects of this realm, of and concerning the plaintiff in her aforesaid trade and business of a butcher, and of and concerning the plaintiff, as supposed by the defendant, having used improper and fraudulent weights in her said trade and business, and having defrauded and cheated in her said trade and business; and of and concerning the plaintiff having, as supposed by the defendant, having, by a son of her, the plaintiff, as her servant in that behalf, used improper and fraudulent weights in her said trade and business; and defrauded and cheated in her said trade and business; and of and concerning the plaintiff having, as supposed by the defendant, having used two weights to a steelyard by her used in her said trade and business; and of and concerning the plaintiff having, as supposed by the defendant, in her said trade and business, by a son of her, the plaintiff, as her servant in that behalf, fraudulently used two weights to a steelyard by her used in her said trade and business; and of and concerning himself, the defendant, he, the defendant, further contriving and intending as aforesaid, then and in the presence of and hearing of the last-mentioned subjects, falsely and maliciously spoke and published of and concerning the plaintiff in her aforesaid trade and business; and of and concerning the plaintiff, as supposed by the defendant, having used improper and fraudulent weights in her said trade and business; and having defrauded and cheated in her said trade and business; and of and concerning the plaintiff, as supposed by the defendant, having, by a son of her, the plaintiff, as her servant in that behalf, used improper and fraudulent weights in her said trade and business, and defrauded and cheated in her said trade and business; and of and concerning the plaintiff having, as supposed by the defendant, in her said trade and business, by a son of her, the plaintiff, as her servant, in that behalf fraudulently used two weights to a steelyard by her used in her said trade and business; and of and concerning himself, the defendant, these false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words, following, that is to say, You, Mistress Griffiths (meaning the plaintiff), have used them for years (meaning that the plaintiff had used improper weights; and defrauded and cheated in her said trade and business); and I (meaning himself, the defendant) have been told so.

And also in the last-mentioned discourse, in answer to a question then put by the plaintiff to the defendant, as to whether the defendant had told and said to one John Green that the plaintiff's son used two balls to the plaintiff's steelyard, these other false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words following (that is to say), To be sure I (meaning himself, the defendant) did (thereby meaning that the defendant had told and said to the said John Green that the plaintiff's son used two balls to the plaintiff's steelyard; and also thereby meaning that the plaintiff, by a son of her the plaintiff as her servant, in that behalf, had used improper and fraudulent weights in her said trade and business, and cheated and defrauded in her said trade and business); and I (meaning himself, the defendant) have been told so.

And also, in the last-mentioned discourse, the false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words following (that is to say), To be sure I (meaning himself, the defendant) did; you, Mistress Griffiths (meaning the plaintiff) have used them for years (thereby meaning that the plaintiff had used improper and fraudulent weights in her said trade and business); I have been told so.

And also, in the last-mentioned discourse, the false and scandalous, malicious and defamatory words following (that is to say): To be sure I did; you, Mistress Griffiths, have used them for years (thereby meaning that the plaintiff had defrauded and cheated, in her said trade and business); I (meaning himself, the defendant) have been told so.

And also, in the last-mentioned discourse, the false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words following (that is to say): You (meaning the plaintiff) have used them for years (thereby meaning that the plaintiff had used improper and fraudulent weights in her said trade and business).

And also, in the last-mentioned discourse, the false, scandalous, malicious, defamatory words following (that is to say) You (meaning the plaintiff) have used them for years (thereby meaning that the plaintiff had defrauded and cheated in her said trade and business).

And also, in the last-mentioned discourse, in answer to a question then put by the plaintiff to the defendant as to whether the defendant had told and said to one John Green, that the plaintiff's son used two balls to the plaintiff's steelyard, these other false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words following (that is to say): To be sure I (meaning himself, the defendant) did (thereby meaning that the defendant had told to and said to the said John Green, that the plaintiff's son used two balls to the plaintiff's steelyard; and also thereby meaning that the plaintiff, in her said trade and business, had by a son of the plaintiff, as her agent and servant in that behalf, fraudulently used two weights to a steelyard by her used in her said trade and business); I (meaning himself, the defendant) will swear to it in any court; you, Mistress Griffiths, have used them for years (meaning that the plaintiff had, in her said trade and business, fraudulently used two weights to a steelyard by her used in her said trade and business); and I (meaning himself, the defendant) have been told so. And also in the last mentioned discourse these other false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words following (that is to say), To be sure I (meaning himself, the defendant) did; you, Mrs. Griffiths (meaning the plaintiff), have used them for years (thereby meaning that the plaintiff had, in her said trade and business, fraudulently used two weights to a steelyard by her used in her said trade and business); and I (meaning himself, the defendant) have been told so.

And also, in the last mentioned discourse the false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words following (that is to say), You, Mrs. Griffiths, have used them for years (thereby meaning that the plaintiff had, in her said trade and business, fraudulently used two weights to a steelyard by her used in her said trade and business); and I (meaning himself, the defendant) have been told so.

Phases.—1. General issue; 2. Justification. Repetition.—Joining issue on the 1st, and traversing the 2nd plea.

A verdict having been found for the plaintiff at the trial, the defendant had since obtained a rule nisi to arrest the judgment.

Feb. 14.—Brownell showed cause.—This declaration consists of two counts only; and the commencement of the 2nd count is at the words "afterwards, to wit, &c." in a certain other discourse." But the objection is, that the words, "You, Mistress Griffiths, have used them for years," in the 2nd count, are not actionable; that they do not necessarily refer to the use of two balls to the steelyard, and do not therefore support the innuendo. But, let those words are to be construed together with the other words used in the same discourse, which shew clearly to what the former refer; and, 2dly, even if those words, standing by themselves in a separate count, would not be actionable, the answer is, that all the words are part of one entire conversation, and constitute but one count. The defendant must contend that this declaration is to be divided into twelve, or thirteen different counts; but the ordinary commencement of a fresh count occurs only once. Then, if any of the words in one conversation are actionable, though others are not, the verdict may stand. (2 Saund. 171 d, note to Hambleton v. Veere); and if any innuendo is too large, it may be rejected as surplusage. (Roberts v. Camden, 9 East, 93; Harvey v. French, 2 Tyr. 585, 1 Cr. & M. 11; Williams v. Stott, 3 Tyr. 688, 1 Cr. & M. 675.) The 1st count is clearly free from objection.

Chambers, Q.C. and Lydekker, contra.—Even if this declaration contains only two counts, it does not state sufficient to warrant the verdict. None of the words themselves are necessarily actionable; they may have an innocent meaning; and to make them actionable there ought to be in the declaration specific averments of the existence of the facts to which the words refer, and that the words were spoken of and concerning those facts; and it is not enough to introduce the facts for the first time in the colloquium. There is no inducement in this declaration to justify the innuendo; and that defect applies to the whole declaration. (Hawkes v. Hawkey, 8 East, 427; Day v. Robinson, 1 Ad. & Ell. 554; Goldstein v. Foss, 6 B. & C. 154.) [PATTERSON, J.—Is there any authority for saying that the colloquium may not involve the allegation of some facts, or supposed facts, to which the words relate?] The cases cited shew that the colloquium cannot be forced to do the office of the inducement. Secondly, it is clear that the declaration consists of many counts, no words being introduced to connect the whole together as a single count; and then some of the words not being actionable by themselves, the judgment must be arrested; because the Court cannot tell upon which of the words the verdict was given. The whole of that which is called the second count by the other side is insufficient; for, where the words "You, Mrs. G. have used them for years," are explained as being uttered in answer to a question; the question is not set out, but the effect of it only; and the declaration is bad in that respect. (1 Chitt. on Pleading, 406; Wright v. Clement, 3 B. & Ald. 503; Wood v. Brown, 6 Taunt. 169; 1 Stark on Slander, 380; and the cases cited in Solomon v. Lawson, 7 Law T. 135.) Curr. adv. vull.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This case came before us on a motion in arrest of judgment in an action of slander. The declaration consists of two counts; in the first the alleged slanderous words, four times repeated, are, "Matthew Griffiths uses two balls to his mother's steelyard;" and the question is, whether those words mean an honest and harmless use of balls to a steelyard, as that of two balls of the same size, for instance, or whether they impute a fraudulent and dishonest use of the balls. Now, in the first place, the plaintiff is averred to be a butcher, and to carry on that trade, and that the words were spoken with intent to impute to the plaintiff the use of false weights. Then follows a colloquium, stating very fully that the words were spoken of the plaintiff in her trade, and of one Matthew Griffiths, her son, and servant in her trade, and of her using, by her said servant, false weights in that trade. The innuendo being, "they meaning that the plaintiff, by her son and servant, used false weights in her said trade." And we have no doubt this innuendo does not exceed its proper functions and office, which is, when the words are susceptible of a harmless and less injurious meaning, as is obviously the case here, to point to that meaning which is injurious, and therefore actionable; and that being found by the jury, the verdict will be right. In the case of Clegg v. Laffer (10 Bing. 250), words which might fairly be understood as being innocent or harmless, or as imputing dishonesty to the plaintiff, had, the latter meaning attributed to them, an innuendo without any preliminary matter, when the Court of Common Pleas were of opinion that there was no valid objection to that innuendo. The second count, framed on another discourse, on another day, also contained very fully the allegation of colloquium introductory of the slanderous matter. The objection to this count is, that some of the words are not actionable even with the aid of the innuendo; and further, a doubt was suggested whether the count could properly be considered as one count, because the words are not stated to have been uttered in one continued sentence, but in several sentences; and they are stated to have been uttered in the same discourse; whether there may be a doubt or not as to some being actionable, it is clear that others are; the statement is, "in the said last-mentioned discourse" (the discourse to which the second count is confined), in answer to a question then put by the plaintiff to the defendant, as to whether the defendant had said to one John Green, that the plaintiff's son used two balls to the plaintiff's steelyard, the defendant spoke these words. "To be sure I did; I will swear it. You, Mrs. Griffiths, have used them for years." Now, it is to be observed, the already spoken words contained in this second count are already having been all spoken in the same discourse at the same time. And upon the question now under consideration, the effect of words having been uttered in the same discourse, we find the following remark in a note to Hambleton v. Veere (2 Wms. Sand. 120), which we consider to lay down the correct rule, and adopt accordingly. It is there observed that "there is another class of cases on this head respecting words for words, with regard to which it is laid down that, if an action be brought for speaking words all at one time, that is, all in one count, and there is a verdict for the plaintiff, though some of the words will not maintain the action, yet if any of the words will, the damages may be given entirely; for it shall be intended that the damages were given for the words which are actionable, and that the others were inserted only for aggravation. But if the action be brought for several words spoken at several times, and the action will not lie for the words spoken at one time, but will lie for the words spoken at another, and a verdict be found for all the words, and entire damages given, it is not good, and judgment will be arrested," which seems not to differ from the case where, upon a declaration containing good and also bad counts, a verdict is found for the plaintiff on the whole. The second count, however, in this case, must be considered as framed on one discourse, and is, for the reasons already assigned, good; the result, therefore, is, that the rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

ALFRED G. FARLOW.

Pleading.—Declaration for slander.—Arrest of judgment.

If a declaration for slander alleges the speaking of some words that are actionable, and some that are not, all spoken in one conversation at one time, and general damages are given, the Court will not arrest the judgment.

A declaration for slander alleged that the plaintiff carried on the business of buying and selling watches; that he had never been guilty or suspected of dishonesty in his trade, or of buying or receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, &c.; yet the defendant, copying, &c. in a certain discourse, &c. of and concerning the plaintiff, and of and concerning the premises, &c. in the presence of, &c. spoke and published of and concerning, &c. the words following—"I have been robbed of about three dozen watches. A person has been buying things at my shop, and has taken them. You have bought some of them; you have bought two, one of 10s. and one of 2s. You know what shop. You have bought them that they cost me three times as much as you gave for them; and that they were not stolen, but were honestly bought by me." (The words were spoken in the presence of the plaintiff.)

Whereupon the said plaintiff then, in the presence of the said persons, said, &c. and produced certain winches to the said defendant; who, further contriving, &c. in the presence of the said persons, falsely, &c. replied, "Oh! no; these (meaning the winches so produced) are not my winches. You know that well enough." &c. (thereby meaning, &c. that the said plaintiff had been guilty of buying winches, well knowing the same to have been stolen by the person of whom the said plaintiff had bought them). On motion in arrest of judgment, Held, 1st, that the whole declaration was but one count; that all the slanderous words appeared to have been spoken in one continued discourse; and that the words "further contriving and intending" did not necessarily constitute a second count. And, That the earlier words were clearly actionable as imputing a felony; and that the latter words, if they required any explanation, by way of prefatory averment, which was doubtful, might be rejected.

Case.—The declaration stated that the said plaintiff, before and at the time of the committing by the said defendant of the grievances hereinafter mentioned, was a person of good name, fame, credit, and reputation, and deservedly enjoyed the esteem and good opinion of divers persons.

That, before and at the time of the committing of the grievance by the said defendant hereinafter mentioned, the said plaintiff used, exercised, followed, and carried on, and still doth use, exercise, follow, and carry on the trade and business of buying and selling, and then was a dealer in, fishing-tackle, and, amongst other things, a certain article of fishing-tackle called a winch, and hath always conducted himself, in and with reference to his said trade and business, with integrity, honesty, and fairness of dealing, and hath never been guilty, nor, till the committing of the grievances by the said defendant as hereinafter mentioned, been suspected to have been guilty of dishonesty, or of fraudulent or improper conduct, or of buying or receiving stolen goods, then knowing them to have been stolen or dishonestly come by, or of any such misconduct or offence as hereinafter stated to have been charged upon and imputed to him by the said defendant; by means of which premises the said plaintiff, until the speaking and publishing of the slanderous words by the said defendant as hereinafter mentioned, was deservedly held in credit and esteem by his neighbours, and particularly by those with whom he had any dealings in the way of his said trade and business and dealing, and enjoyed great reputation therein, and thereby daily acquired great profit, gains, and emoluments in his said trade and business to the comfortable support and maintenance of himself and family, and the increase of his fortune.

That the said defendant, before and at the time of the committing of the grievances hereinafter mentioned, used, exercised, followed, and carried on the trade and business of making and selling winches and other fishing-tackle. Yet the defendant, well knowing the premises, but contriving and wrongfully intending not only to bring the plaintiff into scandal and disgrace and infamy with his neighbours and acquaintance, and other of his fellow-subjects, but to injure and destroy his good name and fame and credit in his said trade and business, and to ruin and destroy the same, and cause his customers and employers therein to leave him, and cease to have any dealings with him, and to cause them to believe that he had been and was guilty of unlawfully buying goods, well knowing the same to have been stolen and dishonestly come by; and wrongfully and maliciously to expose and subject him to the penalties and punishment by law made against and inflicted upon persons in such case offending, heretofore, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the 4th day of April, 1844, in a certain discourse which the said defendant then had with the said plaintiff of and concerning the said plaintiff, and of an concerning him with reference and in relation to his said trade and business, and of and concerning the premises, in the presence and hearing of John Trudgley and Samuel Mosley Bartlett, and divers other persons, good and worthy subjects of the realm, then in the presence and hearing of John Trudgley, Samuel Mosley Bartlett, and the said other subjects, falsely and maliciously spoke and published of and concerning the said plaintiff, and of and concerning him with reference and relating to his said trade and business, and the premises, the false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words following; that is to say, "I (meaning the said defendant) have been robbed of about three dozen of winches (meaning such articles of fishing-tackle as aforesaid). A person has been buying things at my shop, and has taken them (meaning the said winches). You (meaning the said plaintiff) have bought some of them. You (meaning the said plaintiff) have bought two, one at 3s. and one at 2s. You (meaning the said plaintiff) knew well when you bought them (meaning the said winches) that they cost me (meaning the said defendant) three times as much making as you (meaning the said plaintiff) gave for them, and that they could not have been come honestly by." Whereupon the said plaintiff then, in the presence and hearing of the aforesaid persons, said to the said defendant, "I have bought half a dozen winches from a new maker the week before;" and then, in the presence and hearing of the persons aforesaid, produced and showed some of such last-mentioned winches to the said defendant, who, further contriving, and falsely and maliciously intending as aforesaid, thereupon, in the presence and hearing of the said persons aforesaid, falsely and maliciously replied to the said plaintiff in the false, scandalous, and malicious terms following; that is to say, "Oh, no; these (meaning the winches so produced and shown by the said plaintiff to the said defendant as last aforesaid mentioned) are not my winches. You (meaning the said plaintiff) know that well enough; these (the said defendant meaning and pointing to certain other winches of the said plaintiff then lying and being in the shop and in the presence of the persons aforesaid) are mine. I (meaning the said defendant) am sorry to say any thing against any tradesman, but will bring the man who stole my winches and let you (meaning the said plaintiff) see him, for he is in my (meaning the said defendant's) custody" (thereby meaning and insinuating, and wishing, and causing, and procuring it to be believed that the said plaintiff had been and was guilty of buying winches, well knowing the same to have been dishonestly come by, and to have been feloniously stolen by the person of from whom the said plaintiff had so bought them). By means of the committing of which said several grievances by the said defendant, the said plaintiff hath been and is greatly injured and prejudiced in his said good name, fame, credit, and reputation, and in his said trade and business, and brought into public scandal, infamy, and disgrace with and amongst all his neighbours and other persons, inasmuch that divers of those neighbours and persons to whom the innocence and integrity of the said plaintiff in the premises were unknown, have, by reason of the committing of the said grievance by the said defendant, thence hitherto suspected and believed, and still do suspect and believe, the said plaintiff to be a person guilty of the offences and misconduct before stated to have been charged upon and imputed to him by the said defendant, and, by reason of the committing of the said grievances by the said defendant, thence hitherto refused, and still do refuse, to have any dealings, transactions, acquaintance, or discourse with the said plaintiff, as they had been and were before used and accustomed to have, and otherwise would have had; and thereby also the said plaintiff hath lost and been deprived of divers gains and profits which would otherwise have accrued to him on and by his said trade and business.

Plea.—Not Guilty.

The cause came on for trial before Lord Denman, C.J. at Guildhall, on the 22nd Feb. 1845, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages 40s. In the following Term a rule was obtained, on the part of the defendant, to shew cause why the judgment should not be arrested.

Watson, Q.C. and Warren (Saturday, Feb. 14) shewed cause.—First, this declaration sets out but one continued conversation, the whole being connected by the words "then and there;" and all the words used are actionable in themselves, as imputing a felony, or actionable, at all events, as spoken of the plaintiff in his trade. The Court will put a reasonable construction upon the words (Clegg v. Laffer, 10 Bing. 250, 3 M. & Scott, 727); and, so construed, they impute to the plaintiff that he had received the winches knowing them to be stolen. An innuendo cannot extend the meaning of the words (R. v. Matthews, 9 How. State Tri. 698, 699, 710), but here the innuendos are supported by the words. At all events, the words are actionable as spoken of a trader in his trade; and there is a sufficient prefatory averment that they were so spoken. The case of Ayre v. Craven (2 Ad. & Ell. 2) was different, and was decided upon the ground that the declaration did not sufficiently shew that the speaker had connected the imputation with the plaintiff's profession; but the rule is, as laid down by Bayley, J. in Lumley v. Allday (1 Cr. & J. 301, 1 Tyr. 224), that the words, to be actionable, must impute "the want of some general requisite, as honesty, capacity, fidelity, &c. or connect the imputation with the plaintiff's office, trade, or business." Com. Dig. (Action upon the Case for Defamation, D. 25) mentions insolvency as an actionable imputation upon a trader; but any imputation which affects his credit as a trader is also actionable (Jones v. Littler, 7 Mee. & W. 423), and honesty and integrity in his dealings are as necessary to a trader as solvency, or as morality to a clergyman, or ability and knowledge of law to a lawyer. Further, the Court must, after verdict, presume all matters which it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove in support of his declaration. (Sweetapple v. Jesse, 5 B. & Adol. 30.) Secondly, if the latter words be not actionable, without innuendo or colloquium, they may be rejected as surplusage (Roberts v. Camden, 9 East, 96; Harwood v. Astley, 1 New Rep. 47; and Onslow v. Horne, 3 Wils. 177); in which latter case, De Grey, C. J. (p. 185), said, "Words insufficient may be rejected, where they are laid to be spoken at one time with other words that are actionable, and judgment may be given on the words which are actionable."

Jervis, Q.C. and Bramwell, contra.—First, there are here clearly two distinct conversations; and as to the latter, the words are not actionable as laid; they are words of doubtful meaning, and require explanation by a prefatory averment. The want of a prefatory averment is not helped by a concluding innuendo (Alexander v. Angel, 1 C. & J. 143); because that would be to enlarge the meaning of words by an innuendo, as here by the innuendo "meaning and pointing to other winches then lying in the shop;" the effect of the innuendo is merely to apply the prefatory averment to the words used; it is bad if it introduces new facts, as was held in Day v. Robinson (1 Ad. & Ell. 554, 556). If this view be correct, then, as the damages are general, judgment must be arrested. Even as to the earlier words there ought to have been a prefatory averment of the existence of the facts, and that the words were spoken of and concerning the robbery, and of and concerning the plaintiff's purchase of the things stolen, and of and concerning the plaintiff's knowledge that they were stolen; otherwise the imperious meaning of the words is not properly brought before the Court. [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—That was the ground of our decision in Hearne v. Stonell (12 Ad. & Ell. 719).] It is also the rule laid down in Chitt. on Pleading, 400 (6th ed.), and in Goldstein v. Foss (6 B. & C. 154). Then are the words actionable without such prefatory averment? First, if actionable at all, they are so as imputing a felony; but they do not impute a felony; for goods may be dishonestly come by, and yet not stolen; they may be obtained on credit without any intention of paying the price. [COLERIDGE, J.—The phrase "dishonestly come by" is a very usual one in cases of receiving stolen goods.] Clearly in this case it is only an inference from the prices paid; and the Court will take care that the meaning of the words used is not unduly extended. (Snag v. Gee, 4 Rep. 16; Heming v. Power, 10 Mee. & W. 564.) Then, secondly, the plaintiff having treated the words as an imputation of felony, cannot support the action by treating them now as an imputation upon his conduct in his trade; but if he could, still the words are not actionable in that view of the case. It is not actionable to say of a tradesman that he has bought goods dishonestly come by, at a lower price than they could be made for; because that would not affect his trade further than any imputation upon his moral character might affect it. Upon this point they cited Eyre v. Craven (2 Ad. & Ell. 2); Brayne v. Cooper (5 Mee. & W. 249); Alexander v. Angel (1 Cr. & J. 143, 1 Tyr. 9).

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was a motion to arrest the judgment in an action of slander. The question is, as in the case last disposed of, whether the words stated in the declaration may be considered as having been spoken at one and the same time, and as one continued discourse, or whether they are, from their nature and the manner in which they are stated, necessarily several. If so, it was contended that the latter part of the words, not being introduced by any prefatory matter or colloquium, are not actionable, and, therefore, the damages having been given on the whole declaration, judgment ought to be arrested, on the same principle that when damages are given on the whole declaration, and the declaration contains both good and bad counts, such must be the result. It becomes, therefore, material to ascertain whether the declaration in this case does, in truth, consist of one or more counts. We certainly find that, in an action for libel (Hughes v. Rees, 4 Mee. & W. 304), where the declaration set out several publications of different dates, each publication was considered by the Court of Exchequer to be a distinct count. In that case, as in this, there were the words "further contriving and intending," which are usually found at the commencement of a fresh count; but in the case cited the different dates of the alleged libels were adverted to by Lord Abinger, as being material; whereas, in this, the whole is described as one discourse of the plaintiff with the defendant, in the presence of two witnesses, who are named, and continued in the presence of those two witnesses, with the interruption only of remarks by the plaintiff, which are part of the same conversation; and the words "further contriving and intending," occurring as they do, when the defendant resumes the discourse after the plaintiff's interruption, by no means constitute what follows a fresh count. Supposing, therefore, which may be perhaps doubted, that the latter part of the words need some explanation in the shape of averment or colloquium, which was the objection urged on the part of the defendant, it only amounts to this; part of the words attributed to the defendant are not actionable, but the earlier part of the alleged slander plainly imputes to the plaintiff having received stolen goods, that is, certain winches, articles of fishing-tackle, knowing them to have been stolen. Therefore, on the words making that imputation, the verdict may be well sustained, although it may be that there are, if indeed such there be, other parts which do not impute any offence, and are therefore not actionable. We think, therefore, as all the words appear on the face of the declaration to have been spoken at one time, the whole may be considered as one count, containing words both actionable and not actionable, and then the verdict may well stand on those which are, and this rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

Easter Term, 1845, and May 7, 1846.

PEARY v. FITZHOWE.

Nuisance—Abatement—Destroying house—License to use common.

The general rule that an individual may abate a nuisance by which he suffers injury, applies where the nuisance complained of is a house or other permanent building.

A person deprived of the enjoyment of a right of common by an unlawful erection or obstruction, may abate it. But such a right cannot be exercised when the house is in the actual occupation of any person, as such a proceeding would have a direct tendency to cause a breach of the peace.

A parol license to use a common will not bind a subsequent owner.

Trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house, while occupied by himself and family, and demolishing it. The second count was for an expulsion of the plaintiff and his family. Pleas, justifying, under a right of common. As will be seen by the judgment, the substantial question raised upon the pleadings was, whether a house, being a private nuisance, may be pulled down by a person injured, while the persons are actually living in the house. The plaintiff replied, to one plea, that a prior tenant in fee of the messuage in respect of which the common was claimed by the defendant, had given the plaintiff permission to build the house in question. To this the defendants demurred.

Gunning, in Easter Term, 1845, argued in support of the demurrer, and of the validity of the pleas. As to the pleas, he cited Penruddock's case (9 Rep. 100); Baten's case (9 Rep. 55, a); R. v. Rosewell (2 Salk. 438); R. v. Wilson (8 T. R. 357); R. v. Oakley (4 B. & Ad. 307); Turner v. Meymott (1 Bing. 158); Tamton v. Coslar (7 T. R. 431); Taylor v. Cole (3 T. T. 292); Year Book, 9 H. 6, 19; 15 H. 7, 17; Butcher v. Butcher (7 B. & C. 399). As to the replication, he cited Wallace v. Harrison (4 M. & W. 558); Wood v. Manley (11 A. & E. 54); Bridges v. Blanchard (1 A. & E. 536; 4 A. & E. 176); Cocker v. Cowper (1 C. J. & R. 418).

O'Malley, contra, cited Sadgrove v. Kirby (6 T. R. 483); Hillary v. Gay (6 C. and P. 266); Butcher v. Butcher (7 B. C. 899).—He relied chiefly upon the absence of authority for the destruction of a house under these circumstances, and contended that it must be considered in analogy to distresses, which the law would not permit where the necessary or probable result was a breach of the peace. Cur. adv. vult.

On May 7, 1846, the judgment was delivered as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This was an action of trespass, for breaking and entering the dwelling-house of the plaintiff, in which he and his family were inhabiting at the time, and pulling down and demolishing it; and a second count, for the expulsion of the plaintiff and his family. The defendant pleaded three pleas to the first count, justifying the pulling down and removing the house, because it was wrongfully erected on a place over which the defendant had a right of common, by reason of his occupation of a certain messuage and land. There were similar pleas of justification to the last count. To the three pleas to the first count the plaintiff replied, the house was the dwelling-house of the plaintiff and his family, who were actually present and inhabiting the same, and that the defendant, with force and arms, and with a strong hand and in a violent manner, broke and entered it. The plaintiff traversed the rights of common, as alleged in the first and second pleas to the last count; and to the third plea to the last count the plaintiff replied, that one Richard Howe was seized in fee of the messuage, on account of which the defendant claimed the right of common, and gave leave to the plaintiff to build his house, and that he did so in pursuance of such leave, and at considerable expense. To this replication the defendant demurred on several grounds specially stated. With respect to the replications to the first three pleas as to the first count, it is to be observed, the only additions they make to the statement in the declaration is, that the plaintiff, with a strong hand, and in a violent manner, broke and entered the house, and committed the trespasses. The question substantially turns upon the validity of the three pleas, for the replications do not state that the defendant used more force than was necessary, or that he came armed, or with a number of people, or used threats and menaces; and the allegation that the defendant, with a strong hand and in a violent manner, committed the trespass, does not really alter the case as stated in the declaration, and convert that into a trespass which would not otherwise have been a trespass. In order to determine the validity of the pleas, it is to be considered whether the defendant could lawfully pull down the plaintiff's dwelling-house, he and his family being in it at the time, because it had been wrongfully erected upon a place over which the defendant had a right of common, and which right was wrongfully infringed by the erection of the house. There is no doubt, as a general rule, a person who is injured by a private nuisance may abate it (Jenkins's Centuries, 260; Penruddock's case, 5 Rep. 100, a; Baten's case, 9 Rep. 55, a; James v. Hayward, Sir Wm. Jones, 321). It is said, if a house be erected to the nuisance of another, it may be abated, but that no more is to be pulled down than is necessary. If part only of the house is a nuisance, that part of the house is to be pulled down. In King v. Rosewell (2 Salk. 458), which was much relied on in argument, the Court held, in conformity with the older authorities, that if a person builds a house so near that of another, if it stops his light, or shoots water upon his house, the person injured may enter upon the soil and pull it down. The case of a commoner falls within the general rule, that if there be any erection on a place over which he has a right which prevents him exercising it, he may abate it, and with no more force than is necessary to the exercise of his right. (Mason v. Casar, 2 Mod. 65; Arlett v. Ellis, 7 B. & C. 345.) No case has been found which establishes any distinction arising from the nature of the building which obstructs the exercise of the right, and therefore it may be admitted pulling down a house, provided no person be in it at the time, may be justified as much as pulling down a barn, or other place. In this case the declaration expressly alleged that the plaintiff and his family were in the house at the time when it was pulled down. The question is, whether that circumstance renders the pulling down unlawful. No express authority on this point is to be found, but it is said that the law respecting distresses, in which, as in abatement of a nuisance, the party injured seeks a remedy for the nuisance, affords an analogy by which we ought to be guided. The law certainly forbids the distraining of a horse on which a man is riding, or tools which he is using, on account of the imminent risk of a breach of the peace taking place, if such a distress be made. Surely the risk of a breach of the peace is much more imminent in the case of pulling down a house in which persons actually are at the time inhabiting. It is obvious that the act done under such circumstances is probably dangerous to human life, and calculated, in the highest degree, to excite violence and a breach of the peace. The law will not permit any man to pursue his remedy at such risks, and therefore we think it unnecessary for the plaintiff to shew there was an actual breach of the peace; the imminent risk of it is sufficiently proved by the averment in the declaration, that the plaintiff was in his own house at the time when the defendant committed the act complained of. It was argued, the plea contained no averment of notice to the plaintiff, or demand that he would himself abate the nuisance, but we do not now think it necessary to say any thing on that head, our opinion being, for the reasons above given, that the three pleas to the first count are insufficient, and that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the demurrer, and the replication to those pleas. With respect to the replication to the plea to the second count, the plaintiff, admitting the facts stated in the plea, says a former owner of a certain messuage gave the plaintiff leave to build the house. Several objections are made in this replication; the principal, that the former owner had no right to give such permission for it, in alieno solo, the license not being stated to be by deed, which would have bound the party who gave it. The cases of Winter v. Brockwell (8 East, 308) and Harvey v. Reynolds (12 Price, 724) were relied on on the part of the defendant. The latter case is most in point, and that was a case of one commoner giving license to another to make an encroachment on a common, which license was pleaded to an action on the case for a disturbance of the plaintiff's right of common. It is necessary to consider what the effects of a parol license would be where it is pleaded against the subsequent owner in fee. In Winter v. Brockwell and Harvey v. Reynolds the license was set up against the party who gave it; but we are not aware of any case where it has been held such leave and license would run with the land and bind the subsequent owner. On the contrary, it is laid down in Shepherd's Touchstone, 231, that a license from a lord cannot be created and annexed to an estate of inheritance or freehold without deed. In Monk v. Butler (Cro. Jac. 574) it was also held that a license to a commoner must be by deed; and the same opinion was expressed by the Court in Hodgkin v. Robins (2 Saund. 327, a). The right of common by the plaintiff, who afterwards takes as against the defendant, as for a freehold interest, if any, only could pass by deed. Upon this point, the case of Hevlins v. Shipham (5 B. & C. 222) is a leading authority, in which all the cases on the subject are considered, and in which it was so decided. We are therefore of opinion that the replication to the second plea to the last count is bad; and are then to consider whether the plea itself is good that justifies the putting out and removing the plaintiff and his family from the house, and also taking the goods and chattels out of it to a certain distance by the same right of common; and avers that for that purpose the defendant pulled down the house, and in so doing necessarily and unavoidably expelled and put out the plaintiff, which justification is not good according to what we have already said, if an actual expulsion of them by force at the time is intended. The words "ejected, expelled, put out, and removed," may be said to be satisfied under some circumstances, if they prove that the house was destroyed in their absence, and by their being prevented from returning and re-entring, because in attempting to do so they found it existed no longer as a habitable house. But in the present case, looking to the language of the plea itself, this would be a forced explication; and the natural meaning of the word is, that the pulling down and expelling were contemporaneous; and if so, the same argument that has been held fatal to the first set of pleas would also prove this to be bad in law. Our judgment, therefore, is for the plaintiff.

Judgment for plaintiff.

RIO. v. DOWGLAS.

Under 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, and 4 Geo. 4, c. 71, The Court of Queen's Bench have power to award a mandamus to the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras to take examinations, and the examinations duly taken and returned, according to the provisions of the statute, are admissible in evidence.

The mandamus is directed to the Court, and not to the judges individually; and a return by the Chief Justice and one puisne judge is sufficient, as they constitute a Court.

The writing upon parchment, meant by the statute, is a transcript of the examinations, not the examinations taken down at once upon parchment.

It appeared, from the certificates of the judges and sworn officers, that the witnesses were sworn; that the examinations were taken by the sworn officers in open court, and in writing, which were copied in parchment in the Crown Office, and carefully related with the examinations taken in court.—Held, that the requisites of the statute had been complied with, and the examinations were admissible.

This was an information filed ex officio by the Attorney-General, at the instance of the East India Company, against the defendant, a captain in the 49th Native Infantry in the service of the Company, and who for some time filled the office of British Resident at the Court of the Rajah of Tanjore, and at that of the state of Poodocottah, which is adjacent to the former. The information charged that the defendant, whilst occupying the situation above mentioned, received several gifts and presents, contrary to the prohibition upon that subject contained in the 33 Geo. 3, c. 52, which makes the act of soliciting or accepting any such present a misdemeanor punishable in the manner provided by the statute (a). At the trial at the sittings at Guildhall after Hilary Term, 1845, the jury returned a verdict of guilty. Very little parol testimony was given upon that occasion, and the bulk of the evidence consisted of a report, transmitted from the Supreme Court of Madras, of the evidence which had been taken before that Court in obedience to a writ of mandamus issued out of this court to that effect.

The Solicitor-General had obtained, pursuant to leave reserved to him at the trial, a rule nisi for setting aside the verdict, or for a new trial, or for writ of judgment. Against so much of the application as turned upon the inadmissibility of the evidence.

The Attorney-General, L. Wigram, Q.C. Palmer, and Forsyth, shewed cause at the sitting after Hilary Term. The question turned upon the construction of the several statutes, and especially upon the effect of the substitution of the present Supreme Court for the old Mayor's Court at Madras, which was in existence when the power to issue the mandamus was given by 13 Geo. 3, c. 63. The points are so fully stated in the judgment, that it is unnecessary to repeat them here. De Blachford v. Preston (8 T. R. 99); East India Company (5 Ves. Jun. 173); Atter v. Palmer (4 B. & Ad. 377); Clay v. Stephens (7 A. & E. 187); Bennett v. Edwards (6 Bing. 236), were cited.

The return to the writ was as follows:—
"And Sir Edward John Gambier, Knight, Chief Justice, and Sir John David Norton, Knight, Justice of the said court, have returned the said writ, together with the examinations and proofs taken, to be taken by virtue of the said writ, as follows:—
is to say: We, Sir Edward John Gambier, Chief Justice, and Sir John David Norton, Justice of her Majesty's Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, do, in pursuance of the writ of mandamus hereto annexed, bearing date under the seal of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench in England, on the 20th day of June, in the sixth year of the reign of our said Queen Victoria, commanding us to cause to be taken all convenient speed, for the examinations, and receiving proofs, and to return the same, charged in an information, filed in the Court of Queen's Bench by her Majesty's Attorney-General, against Archibald Douglas, and to cause to be taken for the execution and return of the said information."

(a) See one of the counts set out, New Pract. Cas. 1845.

therein particularly mentioned: We hereby certify that after due public notice thereof given, we did hold a court at the court-house at Madras, on Monday the third day of April, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three, and continued, by several adjournments, from the said third day of April, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three, to Tuesday, the sixteenth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three, for the purposes in the said writ of mandamus mentioned: and we do further certify, that the several parchment writings are the examinations, reduced into writing by Charles Martin Teed, Esquire, the clerk of the Crown of the Supreme Court of Judicature, at Madras, and Frederick Orme, Esquire, the deputy clerk of the Crown of the said Supreme Court, which were, at the time and place aforesaid, openly and publicly taken, videlicet, before us upon the oaths of William Henry Bayley, Nathaniel William Kindersley, &c. under and by virtue of the said writ of mandamus: and we further certify that Charles Martin Teed is the clerk of the Crown, and Frederick Orme is the deputy clerk of the Court, and sworn officers of the Supreme Court. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals this seventh day of July, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three.

EDWARD J. GAMBLE,

JOHN D. NORRON, Puisne Judge."

The certificate of the clerk of the Crown, and his deputy, was as follows:—

"We, Charles Martin Teed, clerk of the Crown, and Frederick Orme, deputy clerk of the Crown, respectively sworn officers of her Majesty's Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, do hereby certify that we were present, as such clerk of the Crown and deputy clerk of the Crown, during the whole of the proceedings had and taken on the third day of April, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three, and continued by several adjournments from the said third day of April to Tuesday, the sixteenth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three, under and by virtue of a writ of mandamus hereunto annexed, issuing out of and under the seal of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench, in England, on the Crown side thereof, bearing date at Westminster, the twenty-fifth day of November, in the sixth year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, addressed to the chief justice and other judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, in the East Indies, and to every of them, commanding them to hold a court with all convenient speed, for the examination of witnesses, and receiving proofs concerning the matters charged in an information filed in the said Court of Queen's Bench by her Majesty's Attorney-General, against Asahbhai Douglas, and to do such other acts for the execution and return of the said writ of mandamus as therein particularly mentioned. And we do further certify that the parchment writing hereunto annexed, marked Roll No. 1, contains a full and faithful particular and account of all the proceedings had and taken under and by virtue of such writ of mandamus. And we do further certify that the roll of parchments hereunto annexed, marked Roll No. 2, containing the several examinations of William Henry Bayley, Nathaniel William Kindersley, &c. are true and faithful copies of the videlicet examinations of the said William Henry Bayley, Nathaniel William Kindersley, &c.; who were severally produced, sworn, and examined as witnesses in pursuance of the said writ of mandamus, such parchment writing having been transcribed in the Crown Office from the original examinations of the said several witnesses taken by us, the said Charles Martin Teed and Frederick Orme, in open court, as such clerk of the Crown and deputy clerk of the Crown as aforesaid, the same having been carefully collated and compared by us, the said Charles Martin Teed and Frederick Orme, as such officers as aforesaid, with such originals, and that the said examinations are subscribed by the said William Henry Bayley, &c. respectively. And that the several paper writings hereunto annexed, marked A. No. 35 to No. 61, are the original orders of Court, and that the several Gazettes hereunto annexed are true and faithful copies of official advertisements of holding the Court, read by me, the said Charles Martin Teed, as such officer as aforesaid, in open Court, on the several days; and that the several paper writings hereunto annexed, marked respectively A., D., F., H., &c. and the five enclosures of the exhibit X. and the book which contains the exhibits, marked respectively A. No. 50, A. No. 53, and A. No. 54, are the original exhibits produced on the examinations of the said witnesses, and that the several papers, marked respectively R.A. No. 1, A. No. 2, &c. are the original exhibits in the native languages, with the translations thereof into the English language, made by the sworn interpreter of the said Supreme Court of Judicature, and produced on the examination of the said witnesses; and that the book which contains the exhibits, marked A. No. 6, to A. No. 29 inclusive, are translations made by the said sworn Court interpreter from the original exhibits thereof, and produced on the examination of Ramanao Bhabo, a witness for the prosecution; and that the several paper writings hereunto annexed, marked respectively No. 1 and No. 2, are the original exhibits, and the paper writing marked No. 3 is a true copy of an exhibit put in on behalf of the defendant; and the said originals, translations, and copies were marked by us, the said Charles Martin Teed and Frederick Orme, as such officers as aforesaid, and when the same were put in for the prosecution and for the defendant. Dated this seventh day of July, one thousand eight hundred and forty-three.

"C. M. TEED, Clerk of the Crown.

"FREDERICK ORME, Deputy Clerk of the Crown."
The Solicitor-General and Peacock were heard in support of the rule. The statutes were also commented upon at length. Rex v. Mayor of Kingston-upon-Hull (8 Mod. 209); R. v. Wildman (2 Strange, 879), were cited. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

On Monday, April 27, the judgment was delivered. Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The case of the Queen v. Douglas turned upon the return to a writ of mandamus directed to the chief justice and other judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras, directing them to hold a court under the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, for the examination of witnesses, and receiving proofs concerning the matters charged in the information against the defendant, which return is to be considered hereafter. The 40th section of that Act empowers this Court to award a writ of mandamus to the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, and to the judges of the Mayor's Court at Bombay, Madras, or Bracoolia, who are required to hold a court for the examination of witnesses and receiving proofs in indictments, and informations in this Court under the circumstances and in the manner which are there noticed. We must observe, with reference to the first objection which has been made to the reception of the examinations in this case, that the Mayor's Court at Madras, established by the statute of the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, was, by the 87 Geo. 3, c. 142, abolished, and a court, called the Recorder's Court, substituted in its place, which Recorder's Court was, by the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 79, itself also abolished, and the present Supreme Court of Judicature substituted for it, and assimilated in all respects to the Supreme Court of Fort William, in Bengal. By the 4 Geo. 4, c. 71, s. 17, the Supreme Courts of Judicature at Bombay and Madras respectively are required within their respective limits "to do, execute, perform, and fulfil all such acts, authorities, duties, matters, and things whatsoever as the Supreme Court of Fort William is empowered or directed to do, execute, perform, and fulfil." Since, therefore, the Supreme Court of Judicature of Fort William in Bengal is described in the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, and as by the statute of the 4 Geo. 4, c. 71, the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras is made in all respects equal to it in power, it was not denied that the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras has competent power to obey the mandamus, if this Court has the power to award it. The objection, therefore, is, that the power of awarding a writ of mandamus having been given to this Court, during the existence of the Mayor's Court, specifically to that Court upon the extinction of that Court, the power of this Court is gone. The objection is founded upon the ground that none of the statutes which have abolished the Mayor's Court and established the other courts have continued to this Court the power of awarding a writ of mandamus to any other Court which may be substituted in its place, and of course not therefore to the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras. We, however, see no reason for this objection. The present Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras being in terms put upon the same footing for all purposes with the Supreme Court of Fort William in Bengal, which is named in the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, and to which a writ of mandamus is directed to be awarded. We think the present Court is for every purpose substituted for the Mayor's Court, which was in existence at the time of the passing of the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, and, therefore, among other purposes, for receiving and obeying a writ of mandamus from this Court.

The next objection is, that the writ being directed to the chief justice and other judges of the Court, the return by any other than all the judges of the Court is imperfect and insufficient. It appears, upon the return, that it was executed by the chief justice and one judge. This objection proceeds upon the assumption that the writ is directed to certain individuals, by name, to whom a joint authority is entrusted, and by whom therefore, jointly, and jointly only, the duty could be legally performed. We think this assumption is unfounded, for the writ, in conformity with the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, is directed to the judges commanding them to hold a Court, by which Court the examinations are to be taken, and we have no doubt that two out of the three judges might properly compose a Court, as it is a matter of every day's experience, that this, and every other superior Court is in the habit of exercising its jurisdiction when one or even more of its members may happen to be absent.

The next objection is, that the examinations are not admissible in evidence, because they have not been taken and returned according to the provisions of the 13 Geo. 3, cap. 63. The language of the 40th section of that Act, is in substance as follows: "That such examinations shall be openly and publicly taken, videlicet, in the Court upon the respective oaths of witnesses, and of sworn interpreters, administered according to the forms of their several religions, and shall, by some sworn officer of the Court, be reduced to one or more writing or writings on parchment, in case any duplicate or duplicates shall be required, and shall be sent to this court closed up under the seals of two or more of the judges of the court." It may be observed here, with reference to the last objection, that two judges are hereby expressly empowered to act. "And one or more of the said judges shall deliver the same to the agent or agents of the parties requiring the same." Then follow some regulations, not material to be noticed. "And such depositions shall be allowed and read, and shall be deemed as good and competent evidence as if such witness had been sworn and examined, videlicet, in this Court. It must be admitted that the instructions as to the mode of taking the examinations are not very precise, and it may not be a matter of surprise that some doubts should have existed as to the mode of proceeding. It would appear probable, a priori, that the meaning was that the sworn officer of the Court was to take down, in writing, a statement of the evidence as it came from the mouths of the witnesses, and afterwards from such original statement reduce the same as it then upon stood into writing upon parchment, as an authentic copy of the examinations, to be transmitted to this Court. It remains to be considered whether that be the fair interpretation of that clause of the statute, and then whether that has been substantially complied with. Upon the construction of the statute, it is not contended, for that question was repeatedly put to the learned counsel in the course of the argument, that the words, as they came from the witnesses, should be written down by the sworn officer of the Court upon parchment at first, and that such parchment should be transmitted to this Court as the original examination, or that the examination should be upon parchment only, if duplicates were required. We agree with this, and we are of opinion that no objection of this kind could have been taken. If, then, the "writing on parchment" into which the examinations of the witnesses are required to be reduced, be not, as was conceded, the statements of the witnesses as they come from their mouths, it follows that the writing upon parchment meant by the statute must be a transcript of the examinations as they came from the mouths of the witnesses, which examinations may, in that sense, be called originals, and are not so called in the certificate of the sworn officers, as will appear when we come to look at it. Both are not required. We come now to the question whether, upon the return of the judges, including the certificate of the two sworn officers of the Court, the prescribed forms appear to have been sufficiently complied with. Upon examination of the certificate upon which the objection arises, it may be admitted that, as no far-fetched construction should be adopted for the purpose of explaining it, so it is entitled to a fair and liberal interpretation, the act having been done by sworn officers, and any attempt purposely to mislead and deceive the Court being scarcely upon any supposition possible. The certificate of the judges is very general. After reciting the holding of courts by adjournment, in pursuance of this writ of mandamus, it states that, "the said several parchment writings are the examinations as reduced to writing by the clerk and deputy clerk of the Crown," naming them, "which were at the time and place aforesaid openly and publicly taken, videlicet, before us upon the oaths of the witnesses," naming them. From this it should seem that the judges understood that the taking—videlicet, before the judges upon the oaths of the witnesses meant something previous to the examinations reduced into writing upon parchment, though from the nature of the thing, and the fair import of the word "taken," the first taking videlicet must have been in writing. The certificate of the sworn officers of the Court is more particular. After reciting some preliminary matters, they certify "that the roll of parchment hereunto annexed contains the several examinations of" A B, &c. the witnesses, "who were severally produced, sworn, and examined as witnesses; and that such parchment writings have been transcribed in the Crown-office from the original examinations taken by us in open court, and the same have been carefully collated and compared by us with such originals, and that such examinations were subscribed by the witnesses." Now, from this, without reference to the order in which they are stated, the following facts appear:—That the witnesses were sworn; that the examinations which are called originals were taken by the sworn officers in open court, and in writing, for the parchment writing is said to have been copied in the Crown-office from the original examinations; and though it does not appear by whom that copy was done in the Crown-office, that becomes immaterial, because it is stated that the sworn officers carefully collated and compared the same, that is, the parchment writing, which has been transcribed with the said originals, that is, the original examinations taken by the sworn officers for the omission of the words "before me" was held immaterial where the affidavit purported to be signed by a judge. [PATTERSON, J.—How do the words "said justices" refer to any thing?]

Braceley, contra.—The objection to these examinations is not answered. The identity of day and name is nothing, not being sent together. (Reg. v. Shipston-upon-Stower, 6 Q.B. 119.) [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—It may be that the words mean nothing more than the justices had committed some one for peaching on the same day.] Or removed some other member of the pauper's family. There is nothing whatever to shew jurisdiction.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—I think that jurisdiction is not shewn here. Each examination should be a complete and perfect document by itself. It is not shewn by the examination that the justices were justices having authority to take them. It is a very simple and easy rule that each should be perfect of itself. Reg. v. Embden has nothing to do with the question. There it was held that evidence was admissible to shew that the locality was within the jurisdiction. Reg. v. Biorham has been recently before us, and I think it right to add, I have no doubt as to the correctness of the decision.

PATTERSON, J. concurred.

WILLIAMS, J.—The statute says, copies of the examinations shall be sent. What is this, where the examination can only be made good by a reference to the next preceding, or one further removed? The cases as to the margin of an order or an indictment have nothing to do with this, for there the margin is part of the same document.

Order of Sessions quashed.

REG. v. INHABITANTS OF NORTH HOWMAN.

Exception hiring—Imperfect apprenticeship.
An agreement by which A and B, owners of silk-mills, Mrs C and D, for three years, to dress silk, with a stipulation that they shall be paid so much a pound for the first three months, and after that, so much a pound, provided they did a certain quantity each week, and proportionately more, if more was done; but with deductions for less than that quantity, is not an exceptive hiring.

The same agreement contained a further clause, that one Bagot should be paid so much a week for superintending and instructing them, as far as he was able, to make them competent workmen, he (Bagot) being answerable for their work.—Held, not an imperfect apprenticeship, but a hiring and service.

On appeal against an order of removal, the Sessions had confirmed the order, subject to a case which raised two questions for the Court, upon an agreement for hiring and service, whether it was an exceptive hiring, or whether it was an imperfect contract of apprenticeship.

Hall, with him Pashley, in support of the order.—1. Is it an imperfect contract of apprenticeship? It is an agreement between the owner of silk-mills and two persons, whom he hires for three years, and they agree to be hired for three years. They were to be paid, for dressing silk, so much a pound the first three months, and a higher rate afterwards, provided that if they dress above a certain quantity in the week, they shall be paid so much for every pound extra, and if they dress less, they are to lose so much a pound for the deficiency. Then occurs a clause that one Bagot, a party to the agreement, is to be paid by Bians and Wrigley (the masters) "six shillings per week for superintending and instructing them in the best manner he is capable to make them competent workmen, the said Bagot to be answerable for the work being done in a proper manner." It will be contended that this constitutes the agreement an imperfect apprenticeship. But the object of the parties is clearly not this, but a hiring and service, and that is what must be looked at, in the absence of any distinct contract of apprenticeship. Here there are no words savouring of apprenticeship, no covenant to teach; but the learning is merely incidental. (Reg. v. Burbach, 1 M. & S. 370; Reg. v. O'Neill, 3 B. & Ad. 493; Reg. v. Nether Knutsford, 7 B. & Ad. 726; Reg. v. Tipton, 9 B. & C. 888, were cited.)

2. Is it an exceptive hiring? To constitute an exceptive hiring there must be a period of the time included in the contract, during which there is no obligation on the part of the servant to serve. But here there is no exclusion of any time whatever. It is merely a provision as to payment for work—more or less according to the amount done. It is not like Reg. v. Holbeck (4 Q.B. 590), where the words themselves by which the services were contracted limited their duration.

The Solicitor-General (with him Pickering and Hardy, contra).—It is submitted that the question is to be decided by the agreement alone, not what the parties did under it; but the legal construction of a written document. The principle is, that where the contract is not for a continuous service, but upon such terms that there are, or may be, periods during which the master has not a right to the service; then it is an exceptive hiring. Here it is an agreement to perform a certain amount of work, for which a certain price is to be paid; but when that work is done, they might refuse to do more.—This must be the meaning of payments for over-work. [PATTERSON, J.—There is a general contract to serve. No. A contract, provided they do a certain amount of work. (Reg. v. Edmond, 3 B. & Ad. 107, 82; Reg. v. Gutchess, 2 B. & C. 119; Reg. v. Aldhams, ibid. 112.)]

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—I must say that is my opinion. The only good rule is, to apply one's common sense to the construction of agreements of this kind; and, looking at this, I have not the least doubt but that it is not an exceptive hiring. I only regret that the Sessions allowed themselves to be persuaded to grant a case.

The Solicitor-General.—If not an exceptive hiring, it is an imperfect contract of apprenticeship. The clause as to Bagot clearly shews that it was intended that they should learn the trade. The increase of wages after the first three months also points to their incompetency at the commencement. [PATTERSON, J.—There is no contract by the master to teach.] So also in many of the cases that have been held imperfect apprenticeships. (R. v. Combe, 8 B. & C. 82.) It is immaterial whether the master himself contracts to teach, or that it is provided that some other person shall do so. (Reg. v. Cradison, 3 B. & Ad. 493, overruled; Reg. v. Burbach, 1 M. & S. 370; Reg. v. Newton, 1 A. & E. 238; Reg. v. St. Margaret's, King's Lynn, 6 B. & C. 97, were also cited.)

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—For the reason I have already given, I think it is a general hiring. As to contracts of hiring and service, and imperfect apprenticeship, the Court in former times no doubt brought difficulties upon themselves by laying down principles unnecessarily. Although two or more things are expressly contracted for, as a hiring and service, yet I do not see that because something is also to be learnt, that that constitutes an apprenticeship. The one does not necessarily exclude the other. Here there is a clear hiring for three years, and the stipulation for teaching by Bagot has no more effect than a stipulation as to wages. The object of the agreement is not apprenticeship.

PATTERSON, J.—I am of the same opinion as to the first point. Then as to the second, every agreement must be construed according to its terms, and therefore there are different decisions upon agreements of the same nature. But this is an express contract to hire, and an express contract to be hired for three years to dress silk. If it stopped here, there would be no question as to apprenticeship. Afterwards there is a clause that Bagot is to have 6s. a week for superintending their instructions, and he is to be answerable for their work. I do not see that this makes it a contract of apprenticeship. No action could have been maintained by them, either against Bagot or the masters, if they had not been taught. It will be found in all the cases where words have been held to mean apprenticeship, that there was a remedy for not being taught.

CLUTTERBUCK v. HULKS.

SAFFERY v. WRAY.

Attorney's bill—Negligence.

The plaintiff had been retained by the defendant to bring an action for a false imprisonment against a constable and a person who had acted as a magistrate. The action was brought against the constable only, and not within the time limited by the statute. The constable pleaded not guilty, by statute, but the record was made up without the words "by statute" being inserted in the margin. The then plaintiff in consequence obtained a verdict at the trial, but which was subsequently set aside by the Court, as it appeared that the plea had contained the words "by statute" in the margin. The plaintiff's attorney, the now plaintiff, had thereupon consented to a nonsuit, and a moiety of the costs had been levied upon the now defendant.

Is an action by the attorney for his costs in that action, it was held, that he was not entitled to recover, on the ground of the gross negligence in the matter. Assumpsit upon an attorney's bill.—At the trial it was shewn by the defendant that he had retained the plaintiff to bring an action against a person who had acted as a magistrate and a constable, for causing the defendant to be imprisoned wrongfully. The plaintiff had brought the action against the constable only, and not within the time limited by statute, if the constable was entitled to that defence. The constable pleaded not guilty, by statute; but, by mistake, the agent of the now plaintiff had made up the record without the words "by statute." The now defendant had accordingly recovered a verdict; but the facts being brought before the Court, to prevent a new trial, the now plaintiff, as the attorney for the now defendant, consented to a nonsuit being entered, and the now defendant had been ordered, to pay, a large portion of the costs of the nonsuit. For his own costs the now plaintiff had brought this action, and this defence being set up at the trial, Mr. Baron Platt had left it to the jury, that if the plaintiff knew the defendant in the former action was a constable, he had conducted that action with such gross negligence as not to be entitled to recover his costs. The jury found for the defendant as to these costs, and a rule nisi had been subsequently obtained by Wildman, for a misdirection, against which Whitehurst, Q.C. and Humfrey, Q.C. now shewed cause, and contended that the facts clearly shewed gross negligence.

Wildman, contra.—The learned Baron was wrong in leaving it to the jury as he did, for the fact that the defendant in the former action was a constable was insufficient to entitle him to the protection of the statute, unless he was acting in the execution of his duty. [PATTERSON, J.—If, then, he was not protected, why did the now plaintiff consent to a nonsuit, which could only have been the prudent course, upon the supposition that he was entitled to the plea by statute?]

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—This case is clear. Admitting that there was no evidence at the trial why the constable was sued alone, or how the plea by statute was omitted, the present plaintiff, in consenting to a nonsuit confessed that he had done wrong, and it is clear that the now defendant gained no benefit from the plaintiff's management of the cause. COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Saturday, May 23.

ROBINSON v. BROWN AND ANOTHER, Executors.
Stay of proceedings.

Channell, Serjt. moved that upon payment into Court of 200l. together with costs and interest, by the defendant, proceedings might be stayed. The action was in debt on a bond, the testator of the defendants being one of two sureties for payment of certain sums from time to time to become due from their principal to the plaintiff. The condition of the bond, which was set out on oyer, was, "that if the above bounden G. B. (the principal) should from time to time pay all such sums of money as should be due, not exceeding in the whole 400l. or in case G. B. should make default, then, if the sureties, within one calendar month next after notice in writing requiring payment should have been given them, &c. should pay such sums as at the time of the demand should be due, not exceeding 200l. &c. then the bond should be void." The notice in writing had been given, but the payment had not been made within the calendar month. The question was, whether, under these circumstances, the defendants had lost the benefit of the condition, or whether they were within the stat. 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 13.

Talfourd, Serjt. was to have shewn cause in the first instance, but was stopped by TINDAL, C.J.—This is a nice and subtle question, which we ought not to decide on motion. The point will eventually come before the Court in a less abrupt manner. Rule refused.

TOWSON v. THE BISHOP OF CHESTER.

Quare Impedit—Striking-out counts.

This was a quare impedit. The declaration contained six counts, setting out titles slightly varying from each other. There in one count a particular person, from whom title was deduced, was presented to be tenant-in-tail, in another tenant-in fee. The 4th, 5th, and 6th counts differed from each other only in making two persons, dicti, joint-tenants, and then separately sole tenants of the property with which the plaintiff's title was connected. In a former Term, Fullford, Serjt. had obtained a rule calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why he should not elect which count he would retain, and why the other counts should not be struck out as superfluous.

Fullford, Serjt. now showed cause.—This case is not within the Parliamentary rule, Hilli v. Wain, 4 r. 5, as to multiplicity of counts. That and the other new rules apply only to personal actions which may be tried in any of the superior Courts indifferently, not to those actions which are peculiar to any of the Courts as real actions are to this Court. (Barnes v. Jackson, 1 Bing. N.C. 645; 3 Dowl. 404, S.C.; Miller v. Miller, 3 Dowl. 408). Then, as to the general jurisdiction of the Court, independent of the rules, a number of counts is proper where there is any difficulty as to the title (Duckmyr's case, 8 Coke, 87, b.). The Court has never interfered in a quare impedit, to strike out a count where it set up a different title from the other counts. In Fox v. Bishop of Chester (2 B. & C. 636) there were two counts, and in Shepherd v. Bishop of Chester (6 Bing. 485) there were four counts. In Gully v. Easter (5 Bing. 170) the Court allowed an additional count to be inserted after trial and nonsuit; besides, this application is made too late. The defendant has applied for time to plead, and has obtained it upon the terms of pleading assensu. That counts pleading assensu to the declaration as it stands.

Tuford, Serjt. in support of the rule.—It is admitted that the defendant cannot avail himself of the New Rules. But the question is as to the general discretion of the Court. The plaintiff is bound to know his own title, and he has no right to burden the record and increase the expense and difficulty of the defendant by setting up several distinct, remote, and inconsistent titles. [MAULE, J.—A man may be able to show some good and some bad presentations. He must state the presentations to take advantage of them, and he must show the title of the presenters. I do not see that there will be more substantial issues in the case than if the plaintiff had contented himself with the longest count.]

TINDAL, C.J.—I do not sufficiently see my way to say that any of these counts ought to be struck out. The mischief we may do the plaintiff by depriving him of any part of his title is clear enough, but the evil on the other side is not so clear. I think we ought not to grant the application.

Rule discharged, without costs.

Monday, May 25.

WALBANCKE v. MASTERMAN.

An attorney is personally bound to remunerate the sheriff's officer employed to execute writs on behalf of his client.

This was an action of debt, for work and labour done and performed in and about certain journeys and attendances by the plaintiff for the defendant, at his request, and for money paid by the plaintiff to the use of the defendant.

Plea, nunquam indebitatus.

At the trial, before Erie, J. at the sittings in London, after last Easter Term, it appeared that the plaintiff was an officer of the sheriffs of London, and that the action was brought against the attorney in certain causes, to recover payment for business done about executing three warrants to arrest parties in the different causes. It was objected that the action was wrongly brought against the attorney, as the client was the person liable. Newton v. Chambers (1 D. & L. 870) was referred to on behalf of the plaintiff; and Erie, J. overruled the objection, but reserved leave to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit, or a verdict for the defendant, if the Court should consider the action to have been brought against the wrong party. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff for 3l. 3s.

Byles, Serjt. now moved accordingly.—The action should have been brought against the client. This case is analogous to that of a witness subpoenaed to give evidence in a cause, or to the case of the messenger's bill in bankruptcy. (Hartop v. Jukes, 2 M. & S. 486; Hart v. White, 1 Holt, N.P. 386.) In Rubbs v. Bridge (3 M. & W. 114), Lord Abinger distinguishes the case of a witness, and similar cases where the client is liable, from the case of the marshal or other officer of the court, who is entitled to look to the attorney for payment. [MAULE, J.—Is not the sheriff's officer much more like an officer of the court than a witness? If so, that would bring it exactly within what Lord Abinger says. The inconvenience would be prodigious if the officer in every case were to look to the client for payment. The client himself would suffer by it. An attorney's bill is bad enough; but, according to your view, he might be pertered with bills from sheriff's officers, and I know not whom besides, and would have no means of deciding whether the claimer made out his case legal or not.] Newton v. Chambers is the only case quoted on the other side, and is distinguishable. [TINDAL, C.J.—The cases of Townsend v. Carpenter (R. & M. 114) and Newton v. Chambers (5 B. & C. 200) are precisely in point, and are in favour of the plaintiff.] [MAULE, J.—The facts too plain for argument; it requires no case. The attorney is the person who employs the sheriff's officer, and is properly responsible to him.]

Rule refused.

WATSON and ANOTHER v. BAYFORD.

Defence—Principles—Statements made in the presence of parties.

Case, for negligent driving.

Plea, not guilty.

The action was tried before Colman, J. at the sittings in Middlesex, after last Easter Term. Verdict for the plaintiff.

It appeared that, by the collision which formed the groundwork of the action, the defendant's coachman was thrown down between his horses, and dragged some little distance, until the horses were stopped by two policemen. Other persons then came up, and among them the driver of the carriage belonging to the plaintiffs; and it was proposed to give in evidence what had been said by the policemen in conversation with references to the accident, and the conduct and condition of the two drivers. This was objected to; but the judge received the evidence.

Byles, Serjt. now moved for a new trial upon the ground of the improper reception of evidence. He contended that the remarks of the policemen were hearsay evidence of the worst description, and would not have been admissible against the defendant's coachman, still less against the defendant himself, who was not present during any part of the transaction.

TINDAL, C.J.—These parties represented their respective principals. The remarks were made at the very time the accident took place; and as they were made in the presence of the coachman, he might have corrected anything that was misstated by the policemen.

CRESSWELL, J.—In cases of running down by vessels at sea, or in the river, what the masters have said at or soon after the accident is generally received in evidence against the owners. Therefore I think that anything which the coachman said at or near the time of the transaction is admissible. Then what the policeman says about him in his presence is on the same footing.

Byles, Serjt. obtained a rule on the ground that the verdict was against evidence; but on this point,

Rule refused.

Thursday, May 27.

BENHAM & EARL v. MORNINGTON.

Where a party seeks to avail himself of a defence furnished by a foreign law, the law must be directly and positively stated, and not merely by way of inference. Therefore, in an action of debt on a bond, a plea setting out certain facts, affirmatively and negatively, and concluding that "by reason of the premises the said supposed writing, obligatory by the laws of France, never was nor is obligatory on the defendant, but always was and is of no force or effect," is bad, on special demurrer, for 800l.

Plea, that the said supposed writing obligatory was made, and that at the time of making the same the defendant was resident and domiciled in parts beyond the seas, to wit at Calais, in the kingdom of France, and not otherwise or elsewhere; and the defendant further says, that the said writing obligatory was not taken, made, received, or passed by any public officer of the said kingdom of France, authorized by the laws of that kingdom so to do, nor was the said writing obligatory written throughout by the hand of the defendant; and although the defendant signed the said writing with his own hand, yet the defendant did not write with his own hand a certain formula or acknowledgment, termed in the French law a bon, or approved, in words at length, stating the debt or sum of money, purporting to be secured or acknowledged, nor was the defendant at the time of the making of the said writing obligatory a merchant, tradesman, artisan, ploughman, vinedresser, husbandman, or servant; and the defendant further says, that by reason of the premises, the said supposed writing obligatory by the laws of France never was nor is obligatory on the defendant, but always was, and is, of no force, effect, or validity. Verification.

Special demurrer, assigning, among other causes, that the plea was argumentative and inferential, and also that it was double.

Douglas, Serjt. (with him Barstow) in support of the demurrer.—There is here no sufficient statement of the foreign law. The facts do not disclose at all what the law is of which the defendant seeks to avail himself; the former part of the plea does not state the law at all; the latter only states it by way of inference. How is the Court to know that the inference is correct unless the law itself be disclosed? It would be impossible for the plaintiff to take issue on this plea. [TINDAL, C.J.—The law must be stated. The issue ought to be upon a fact, not upon a state of law.]

The Court then called on the defendant. The plea shows that the defendant was resident abroad, and, therefore, that the French law applies. It is admitted that the Court will receive judicial notice of the foreign law, which is a principle at the trial, and a matter of fact. The law of France is a single sufficient; certain facts, affirmatively and negatively stated, and then that by reason of the premises the writing is invalid. The defendant's plea becomes the whole matter in a motion, and the defendant must show all the facts which he relies on, and also that the law of France applies. In Woodhouse v. Schultze (1 D. & L. 616) it was held that the defendant did not set out the French law, but that the Court recommended the plaintiff, who demurred, to plead by recital, which was done. In Woodhouse v. Schultze (3 A. & E. 771) the point was adjudged by the Lord Chief Justice, but not decided. The defendant's complaint is an allegation of matter of fact, and is not a defence; the several matters in the plea do not make up but one defence. The plaintiff, who replied de injuria. [CRESSWELL, J.—This is hardly analogous to an answer. It is probable that the bond is void de jure.] [TINDAL, C.J.—The allegation of de injuria contains the words obscure and equivocal, without such cause. In Cooper v. Gombert (1 M. & W. 23), the Court of Exchequer held that the de injuria was a good replication to a plea of de jure.]

Douglas, Serjt. in reply.—Although foreign law is matter of proof, yet it must be sufficiently alleged. In M'Leod v. Schultze the Court gave no opinion; they only suggested an amendment. Here the main objection is, that the law is only stated inferentially. We are left to suppose that the foreign law requires all the matters which the plea shows to have been wanting. Even if the law were adequately stated, the plea sets up three different defences.

TINDAL, C.J.—It seems to me that this plea is bad for one of the causes assigned, viz. that it is argumentative and inferential; whereas a plea ought to be direct and positive, and contain nothing by way of inference. (Co. Litt. 384.) The plea contains an answer to the declaration, except in the conclusion, "by reason of the premises, the said supposed writing obligatory by the laws of France was of no force, effect, or validity." That is not a direct affirmation of what the law is, and of the facts bringing the matter within the operation of the law. The plaintiff has a right to have the law set out, and the facts bringing the case within the law, in order that it may be necessary, he may demur, and get the opinion of the Court, whether facts are disclosed to which the law is shown to be applicable. Suppose the matter were to be made a question of evidence, and non-assumpsit pleaded only, we should not allow a witness to say that the defendant was neither this nor that, and that this or that had not been done, and therefore, that the foreign law, the obligation was invalid. No; he would have to begin by proving what the law was, which he could do by the Code Napoleon, or some other authority upon French law, and then he would bring the case within it. Here, from first to last, there is a series of negations, and then an allegation, that the law has not been complied with. If the law had been set out affirmatively, we might have found an exception, or something to show that it did not defeat the plaintiff's claim. I think, therefore, that the plea is an argumentative plea. In M'Leod v. Schultze the parties consented to amend, which prevents the case being a very strong authority. There the plea was entirely affirmative, and the opinion of Lord Abinger is expressed very doubtfully. He says, "We are inclined to think at present that the plea is sufficient." In Woodhouse v. Schultze the objection was never taken.

COLTMAN, J.—It would hardly have been sufficient for the purpose of raising this defence, to allege merely "that the bond was made, and that at the time of making the same, the defendant was domiciled in parts beyond the seas, to wit, &c. and not otherwise or elsewhere; and that by the laws of France the said bond was void." That plea would hardly be supportable. But unless that plea would be sufficient, I do not think the present would, for the plea is not improved by what has been stated. The defendant ought to have shown distinctly what the law of France is, and brought his case within its provisions. We cannot see whether the plea is double or not; we do not see accurately what the foreign law is.

CRESSWELL, J.—I also think the plea is insufficient. The foreign law is only noticed by us as matter of fact, but you cannot say in your pleadings, "by reason of the fact which I will prove when called upon, the obligation is not binding." And moreover, in your plea the fact upon which you rely. I understand from the argument upon the part of the defendant, that the plea does state what the foreign law is. But this is not a clear and distinct statement, but a matter of course such as the plaintiff is entitled to. It is a well-known correct, inferential mode of stating the law. I think

TURNER v. W. BROWN.

Pleading—Replication.

Then an action of debt for money had and received; the defendant pleaded that he had given, and that the plaintiff had accepted and received, in satisfaction of an indenture, granting an annuity to the plaintiff. Held, a good replication, that the annuity deed had not been enrolled under 53 Geo. 3, c. 141; and that an action having been brought upon the annuity deed, the defendant had pleaded the non-enrolment, and that the plaintiff had thereupon elected that the said indenture should be null and void, and had entered a discontinuance in the action.

Debt—For money had and received, &c.

Plea—That after the accruing of the said several debts and causes of action, &c. and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, &c. the defendant sealed with his seal, and as his act and deed delivered, a certain indenture in writing (describing it), and thereby, after reading, &c. the defendant did give, grant, and confirm unto the said plaintiff, his executors, administrators, and assigns, one annuity or clear yearly sum of, &c. to be yearly issuing and payable out of certain lands to the plaintiff; and which said writing obligatory the defendant then delivered to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff then accepted and received the same of and from the defendant in full satisfaction and discharge of all the said several debts and causes of action, &c. Verification.

Replication (in substance).—That the said indenture was made and entered into after the passing of the 53 Geo. 3, c. 141; that the said annuity in the said indenture mentioned was granted for a pecuniary consideration; that no memorial of the said indenture was enrolled in the High Court of Chancery within thirty days after the execution thereof according to the said statute; that afterwards, and before the commencement of this suit, a large sum of money of the said annuity, for two years and a half following the date of the indenture, became due; that payment was demanded; that the defendant neglected to pay; that the plaintiff sued the defendant upon the annuity deed (the proceedings from the writ of summons were set out); that the defendant pleaded that no memorial of the indenture was enrolled in the High Court of Chancery within thirty days after the execution thereof; that the said indenture, in the said several pleas of the defendant, and in the said declaration of the plaintiff mentioned, was one and the same, and void in consequence of the non-enrolment of the memorial; that the plaintiff, in consequence of the said plea, elected that the said indenture should be null and void, as pleaded by the said defendant, and accordingly discontinued the action. Verification.

Special demurrer, on the grounds, amongst others, that the annuity having been taken in satisfaction cannot be avoided by matter ex post facto; that the replication is an argumentative traverse of the record and satisfaction; that it is a departure from the replication; that it is double, &c.

Channell, Serjt. (with him Pearson) in support of the demurrer.—This action is brought to recover the consideration money paid for the annuity, upon the ground of a total failure of consideration. It is admitted that where the annuity is void for want of the enrolment of the memorial, the consideration money is money had and received to the use of the annuitant. But it is only money had and received from the time that the grantor has elected to avail himself of the defect. (Churchill v. Bertrand, 2 G. & D. 648.) The replication should have denied the acceptance in satisfaction, because when the deed was accepted there was no cause of action for money had and received; besides, the plea begins "that after the accruing of the causes of action, &c." This replication is an argumentative denial of the acceptance in satisfaction. Either the plaintiff should have traversed or new assigned. (Cooper v. Godmond, 9 Blig. 748; Sard v. Rhodes, 1 M. & W. 152.)

Telford, Serjt. (with him Oyle), for the plaintiff.—This action for money had and received will not lie until the annuity deed is avoided. (Griffiths v. Bryan, 6 B. & C. 651; Scawfield v. Goulden, 6 East, 244; Huggins v. Coates, 5 Q. B. 232.) [CRESSWELL, J.] Does not the plea show that the plaintiff accepted an annuity in satisfaction? Then comes the replication, and discloses that, though apparently an annuity, it failed to be really so. How does it appear at all in the pleadings that the consideration money of the annuity deed is the money here claimed as having been had and received to the plaintiff's use? The plea seems, to me, to import a satisfaction of some antecedent debt. That apparent satisfaction is shown by the replication to have been worth nothing, and the defendant having made the indenture null, the plaintiff is driven back to his original cause of action.

TINDAL, C.J.—Upon the best consideration that I can give to the matter, this plea exhibits no real satisfaction. The replication shows that, by the consent of the defendant, what was intended to be a deed was actually so at all. The defendant has no right to say to the plaintiff, "You accepted a certain supposed annuity in satisfaction," when it is the defendant's own act that the annuity deed is null.

The rest of the Court concurring,

Judgment for the plaintiff.

GUYARD v. SUTTON.

Pleading—Covenant.

The covenant of the plaintiff cannot be pleaded in bar to an action on a promissory note given to her during marriage, but is matter of abatement only. Assumpsit by the payee against the maker of a promissory note.

Plea in bar.—That at the time of the making of the said promissory note the plaintiff was the wife of John Francis Guyard, and that the only consideration for making the said note, or for payment of the amount thereof, was the loan of 400l. of the money of the said J. F. G. which was advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant without J. F. G.'s authority, and against his will; and that the plaintiff took and received the said promissory note, and always held, and still holds, the same, without the authority and against the will of the said J. F. G.; and that the plaintiff never had, nor has she, any property or right to the said note, or to receive payment of the amount of the same, or any part thereof, and that there never was any other value or consideration for making the said note or payment by the defendant. Verification.

Special demurrer upon several grounds: among others, "that the said plea, by its commencement and conclusion, purports to be a plea in bar, whereas it discloses matter pleadable in abatement only;" that the latter part of the plea is too general and improper; that the plea is double, &c.

Channell, Serjt. in support of the demurrer.—The right to sue depends upon the party with whom the contract is made. The husband might have sued alone, or with the wife, still as upon the face of the note the contract is made with the plaintiff, she may sue. The plea ought to shew distinctly that the husband is alive. Here it is consistent with the plea that the husband may be dead, and then the right of action would survive to the wife. If this be so, it is an informal plea of coverture. The allegation, that the money was the husband's money, furnishes no material distinction. The plea is also double: the first part of the plea to the words "holds the same without the authority and against the will of the said J. F. G." is a good answer in bar of the action; the last part also furnishes a good answer to the declaration, although it is informally pleaded. (Gutere v. Madeley, 5 M. & W. 423.)

Telford, Serjt.—As to the last point there is here only one entire defence. It might be consistent with the former part of the plea, if it stood alone, that the wife was the meritorious cause of action, and had some kind of authority to receive payment. [TINDAL, C.J. referred to Bendie v. Wakeman (12 M. & W. 97).] [CRESSWELL, J.]—This is matter pleadable in abatement. You give the plaintiff a better writ: As she is mentioned in the note, can she not sue? Would not the action on the note survive to her? If so, you do not shew that she cannot sue at all, but that she should have sued with her husband. You give her a better writ.] Mason v. Morgan (2 A. & E. 39) shews that the husband may sue alone.

TINDAL, C.J.—It appears to me that this is matter pleadable in abatement only. If the husband had died, the wife might have brought an action. If, whilst the husband is living, the plea says that she is married, it is no more than saying that she should have sued with her husband. On the authority, therefore, of Bendie v. Wakeman, there must be judgment for the plaintiff on this demurrer.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

SMITH v. SHIRLEY.

Pleading—Trespass—Felony.

Where to an action of trespass for breaking and entering the dwelling-house, the defence set up is a reasonable suspicion of felony against the plaintiff, and an endeavour to arrest him lawfully made by the defendant, it must appear expressly that the entry was made by the defendant, acting upon his suspicion, and with a view to nothing else than the capture of the suspected party reasonably supposed to be there.

Trespass: 1st count, for breaking and entering the dwelling-house: 2nd count, for assaulting the plaintiff, and taking him to a police station.

The plea set up a justification to both counts under a reasonable suspicion that the plaintiff had committed felony. It set out that a robbery had been committed at a particular place and time, and then enumerated a great number of circumstances throwing suspicion upon the plaintiff. The plea then continued, "that the defendant, well knowing the premises, and having good and probable grounds of suspicion that the plaintiff was guilty of the said felonious stealing, taking, and carrying away of the said goods and chattels, did, at the said time, when, &c. peaceably and quietly enter the said dwelling-house of the plaintiff, the outer-door thereof being then opened to him from within by a certain person, to wit, the mother of the plaintiff, and did then enter the same with acertain peace-officer, to wit, &c. and did then give the plaintiff into the charge and custody of the said peace-officer, for the purpose of his being, and until he could be carried before some justice of the peace as charged, &c. and the defendant then, and in a reasonable time from entering the said dwelling-house, left the same, and conveyed the plaintiff therefrom, &c."

The plea was demurred to upon several grounds, which it is unnecessary to report. The Court considered that the plea was bad as an answer to the first count, for notwithstanding that the defendant entered the house for the purpose of arresting the plaintiff, or that there was reason to suppose that the plaintiff was there, or that there was anything connecting the entry of the house necessarily with the suspicion against the plaintiff.

Telford, Serjt. in support of the demurrer.

Channell, Serjt. (with him Brownock) in support of the plea; prayed leave to amend.

Leave to amend accordingly.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Friday, May 29.

The Court delivered judgment in the three following cases:—

HOLDEN v. LIVERPOOL NEW GAS AND COKE COMPANY.

Rule discharged. Fowler, P. O. v. Pice. Foster to the plaintiff. Fort and Kitching, Assignees, v. EYTON and AYNARD.

Rule discharged.

HILL v. KITCHING.—Manning, Serjt. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial, on the ground of the improper reception of evidence. It was an action brought by a broker to recover his brokerage for procuring charterers. It was objected that it appeared that the plaintiff was not duly licensed as a broker. Then the main witness for plaintiff was one Craswell, who, it appeared, was to have half the profits of plaintiff's commission. It was urged, in the first place, that, under the proviso in 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, this witness was incompetent; in the second place, that he ought to have been a joint plaintiff. Lastly, it was contended that the evidence established a custom for the commission to be dependent upon the earning of freight, and that here, no freight being earned, no brokerage was payable. Rule to shew cause.

WOOLLEY v. SMITH.—Channell, Serjt. shewed cause. Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule.

Argument adjourned.

Saturday, May 30.

DUNNOL v. WYDOUSE.—C. Jones, Serjt. moved that the plaintiff might be at liberty to enter an appearance for the defendant, sec. stat. The copy writ had been left with the defendant's shopman, who had denied his master to the plaintiff's attorney, according to his master's direction. The shopman had since delivered the copy to defendant. No indorsement had been made on the writ pursuant to R. G. M. T. Wm. 4, r. 2. Lush's Practice, p. 324, was referred to. Rule to shew cause.

WOOLLEY v. SMITH.—Argument concluded. Cur. adv. vult.

Monday, May 28.

PATENT v. BELCON.—The Court delivered judgment.

The defendant to shew liberty to amend on payment of costs, otherwise judgment for the plaintiff.

CLARIDGE v. HAINES and OTHERS.—Sir Thos. Wilde, Serjt. moved to amend an order of Eris, J. by allowing to the defendant his costs under the interpleader summons issued, and by ordering the claimant to pay to the plaintiff the costs assessed by and subsequent to the making of his claim. Pitches v. Edey (6 Scott, 568) was cited. Rule to shew cause.

Re JOHN TURNER, a lunatic.—Channell, Serjt. moved to discontinue with the concurrence of the lunatic to a deed to be executed by his wife, for barring the wife's right to dower, upon a sale of certain estates of which a sale had been ordered by the Court of Chancery. He cited 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, ss. 71, 72, 73, 91.

RICKY v. CRESTWICK and ANOTHER.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against evidence. Cur. adv. vult.

WILSON and ANOTHER v. BARRETT.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a new trial upon the ground that the verdict was against evidence. Rule to shew cause.

SUTTON v. PAGE.—Channell, Serjt. moved to set aside the demurrer to the replication to the second plea as frivolous. The declaration was upon a bill of exchange for 120l. The plea was, that the plaintiff and defendant had accounted together of and concerning the said cause of action in the declaration mentioned, and all other claims and demands then being between the plaintiff and defendant; and that upon such account 20l. was due, which had since been paid to the plaintiff. The plaintiff replied, traversing that part of the plea printed in inverted commas in the grounds. The defendant demurred specially on the ground that the traverse was too large. Rule to shew cause.

CRESSWELL v. COOPER.—Channell, Serjt. (with him Byles) shewed cause. Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule. Rule discharged.

WATSON v. BENNIS.—Sir Thos. Wilde, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation. The plaintiff had, at the commencement of the suit, obtained a judge's order to hold the defendant to bail. The cause had been referred to a barrister, who, by the order of reference, was empowered to entertain the claim of the defendant to damages from the plaintiff for being maliciously held to bail. The last meeting before the arbitrator had been devoted solely to this inquiry. The arbitrator had found that neither party had cause of action against the other. By the order of reference, the costs were to abide the event. The Master had disallowed the plaintiff the costs of the last meeting. Rule to shew cause.

COLDHAM v. SHOWLER.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a new trial, upon the ground of misdirection. The action was on a special agreement by defendant to be answerable for performance, by defendant's daughter, of another agreement. The two agreements were on the face and back of the same paper; that upon which the action was brought was not written until after the other was signed, and referred to it. It was objected that this agreement was within the 6th sec. of the Statute of Frauds, and that it was void, as it did not sufficiently disclose the consideration. (Wain v. Wainwright,

Monday, May 20. NEW TRIAL. GRANT & MADDOX.
In an action by A., an operative singer, against the manager of a theatre for arrears of salary, the plaintiff relied on a written contract, by which the defendant engaged the plaintiff for three years certain, and agreed to pay her a certain sum per week in the first year, which was to be increased in the second and third years. Held, that evidence might be given on the part of the defendant to show that in a contract of this kind between theatrical people payment was only to be made to the actor on those nights on which the theatre was open.

This was an action of assumpsit brought by the plaintiff (who is an operative singer) against the defendant, as manager of the Princess's Theatre, to recover certain arrears of salary. The declaration was on a contract, whereby the defendant, in consideration of the plaintiff's undertaking to play certain parts when called on, engaged her to sing at the Princess's Theatre for three years certain, at a salary of 5l. per week in the first year, 6l. per week in the second year, and 7l. per week in the third year. The defendant pleaded non-assumpsit and payment. The cause came on for trial before the Lord Chief Baron, at the sittings after Hilary Term, when the contract relied on by the plaintiff was proved by putting in three letters which had passed between defendant and the father of the plaintiff, and had been stamped. The defence set up was, that the plaintiff had been paid all that was due to her, and that the arrears claimed were the certain week when the theatre was shut up; if whether proposed to call witnesses to show that there was a large amount of theatrical people that actors were never paid any salary during the time the theatre was shut up, but only during the theatrical season; this was objected on the part of the plaintiff, but the Lord Chief Baron admitted the evidence, and the defendant had a verdict. a general custom. It was never sought by this evidence to alter or vary the written contract, but merely to explain the meaning of the terms used in it. The rule of law is well laid down in Roscoe on Evidence (p. 13) as to parol evidence being admissible to explain mercantile contracts—"Where the parties have contracted in writing, in many instances parol evidence is admitted to prove a usage affecting the contract, on the ground that where such usage exists the parties must be taken to have made their contract subject to its operation; thus, in the construction of mercantile contracts, parol evidence is always admitted, to show the sense in which, according to the custom of merchants, such contracts are to be understood." Now the contract relied on, in this case, was in the nature of a mercantile one, and the evidence given was merely to show the usage, and comes within the principle of the case of Smith v. Wilson (3 B. & Ad. 728), where parol evidence was admitted, to show that in a lease of a rabbit warren, by the custom of the country, the word "thousand" means twelve hundred when applied to rabbits. Then it is said that there is a misdirection, because the learned judge told the jury, in a part of his summing up, that if they believed the defendant's witnesses, they had better find for the defendant; even if this were so, there would be no misdirection; but, taking the summing up altogether, it is contended that all the questions were substantially left. Cases cited: R. v. Stoke-upon-Trent (6 Q.B. 303); Cochran v. Retberg (3 Esp. 121); Bold v. Rayner (1 M. & W. 343); Chevrard v. Augstein (Peak. 43).

Monday, May 20. NEW TRIAL. GRANT & MADDOX.
In an action by A., an operative singer, against the manager of a theatre for arrears of salary, the plaintiff relied on a written contract, by which the defendant engaged the plaintiff for three years certain, and agreed to pay her a certain sum per week in the first year, which was to be increased in the second and third years. Held, that evidence might be given on the part of the defendant to show that in a contract of this kind between theatrical people payment was only to be made to the actor on those nights on which the theatre was open.

This was an action of assumpsit brought by the plaintiff (who is an operative singer) against the defendant, as manager of the Princess's Theatre, to recover certain arrears of salary. The declaration was on a contract, whereby the defendant, in consideration of the plaintiff's undertaking to play certain parts when called on, engaged her to sing at the Princess's Theatre for three years certain, at a salary of 5l. per week in the first year, 6l. per week in the second year, and 7l. per week in the third year. The defendant pleaded non-assumpsit and payment. The cause came on for trial before the Lord Chief Baron, at the sittings after Hilary Term, when the contract relied on by the plaintiff was proved by putting in three letters which had passed between defendant and the father of the plaintiff, and had been stamped. The defence set up was, that the plaintiff had been paid all that was due to her, and that the arrears claimed were the certain week when the theatre was shut up; if whether proposed to call witnesses to show that there was a large amount of theatrical people that actors were never paid any salary during the time the theatre was shut up, but only during the theatrical season; this was objected on the part of the plaintiff, but the Lord Chief Baron admitted the evidence, and the defendant had a verdict. A rule was for a new trial having been obtained on the ground of misdirection of evidence and misdirection.

BRAMISH v. OWENS.

Time is of the essence of a contract or agreement for the sale of land at law; and if the conveyance is not completed on or before the day specified in such contract, the vendor may recover back his deposit-money in an action for money had and received.

In this case the plaintiff contracted for the purchase of a certain landed estate from the defendant. It was agreed and stipulated by the written contract between the parties that the abstract of title should be delivered for the consideration of the plaintiff by a certain day; that the conveyance should be completed by the defendant, and the remainder of the purchase-money (in addition to the money actually paid by way of deposit) paid by the plaintiff on or before a certain other day named in the contract; and it was further agreed that, if the purchase should not be completed on or before such latter day through any cause, other than default of the defendant, the plaintiff should pay interest on the purchase-money at the rate of 5l. per cent. having, however, in this event, power to enter into possession of the premises. The deposit-money having been paid, and the abstract of title delivered by the defendant within the specified time, it was proved that the conveyance was not completed by reason of the refusal of certain parties interested to join in or consent to the conveyance. On this state of facts, the main question now brought before the Court by Jervis, Q. C., Cropper, Q. C., and Bell, in opposing the rule obtained by Watson, Q. C. to enter the verdict for the plaintiff non obstante verdicto on that count in the declaration, which was in the common form, for money had and received, was, whether such count could be maintained for recovery of the deposit-money under the circumstances stated, or, in other words, whether time can be regarded at law as of the essence of a contract for the sale of land. It was contended that the plaintiff could only be entitled to recover on the special agreement, and that money had and received would not lie, inasmuch as there had been no rescission of the contract, and no failure of consideration. It was argued that a contract for the sale of land can only be abandoned, and rescinded by a subsequent agreement in writing, under the Statute of Frauds, and that, in order to enable the plaintiff to treat the contract as rescinded and abandoned in the absence of any subsequent agreement to that effect in writing, it was incumbent on him to show that a reasonable time for preparing the conveyance and completing the purchase had elapsed prior to his so treating it. The following cases were cited on behalf of the defendant: Clarke v. King (Ry. & Mood. 394); Marshall v. Lynn (6 M. & W. 109); Bell v. Howard (9 Mod. 302); Johnston v. McAllister (Jones's Exch. R. (Irish) 503).

Watson, in support of his rule, cited Hipwell v. Knight (1 Yo. & Coll. 401.); Metcalf v. Fowler (6 M. & W. 830.)

By the COURT.—Time was clearly of the essence of this contract; the plaintiff was consequently entitled to recover the amount of his deposit as money had and received; the conveyance not having been completed on the day agreed upon. The rule to enter the verdict for the plaintiff for such amount must therefore be made absolute.

THE MAYOR, &c. OF SALFORD v. ACKERS.
Construction of local Act—Mode of pleading where such Act contains a proviso co-extensive with its general clauses.

Crompton appeared to support the demurrer to the declaration in this case. The question entirely turned on the construction of the local Act 11 Geo. 4, c. 8, intitled "An Act for better cleansing, lighting, watching, regulating, and improving the town of Salford, in the county palatine of Lancaster." By the 46th and other subsequent sections of this Act, the commissioners appointed for carrying its provisions into execution, are, amongst other things, intrusted with general powers to light, pave, drain, &c. the streets. By the 82nd section, the commissioners may cause new pavements, &c. to be made at the charge of the owners or occupiers of houses, &c. but by the 83rd section it is provided, that, previously to so doing, they shall give notice to such occupiers, requiring them to make such pavements, &c. and in case any such owner or occupier shall neglect or refuse so to do for the space of six calendar months, that "then, and in such case, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners under this Act, and they are hereby required, to cause the same to be done, and to recover the costs, charges, and expenses thereof from such owner or occupier, in case of refusal to pay the same, in such manner as herein is mentioned;" that is, as appears by the latter part of the 83rd section, "by action at law in any of his Majesty's courts at Westminster, or Court of Common Pleas at Lancaster, or in any other court or courts whatsoever." The point raised by the demurrer was, that the declaration ought to have contained an aversaid that notice had been given to the defendant under the said notice, and that the defendant had not complied with such notice, and that without such an averment, the declaration did not, reference being made to the Act of Parliament, show that any cause of action had accrued for the recovery of the costs and charges of giving, sending, &c. to the commission. Crompton argued that the giving of the notice was a condition precedent to the right of the commission (the plaintiff) to exercise the power vested in them by the Act, the duty of giving such notice being co-extensive with their power, and no commission is possible in which the commission could lawfully act without having given notice. In support of his argument, he cited Partridge v. Cole (2 Bland. R. 519); Co. Litt. 308; 1000 b. 28; 228, 289; Com. Dig. Condition (A 2); Stanger v. Ruddy (12 M. & W. 736); Talbot v. Wilson (12 M. & W. 800); Com. Dig. Pleader (E 176); Englefield's case (7 Rep. 75); Steele v. Smith (3 B. & Ald. 94); 2 Hale, P. C. 170; the judgment of Lord Tenterden in Forster v. Owens (6 B. & C. 483); Clayton v. Kynaston (Saik. 573; Flowd. R. 1049); &c.

Watson, Q.C. for the plaintiffs, argued that the proviso, inserted in the Act, ought to have been pleaded, according to the rule, that where there is a general clause in an Act of Parliament, and afterwards a separate and distinct clause, which has the effect of taking out of the general clause something which would otherwise be included in it, a party relying upon the general clause may set out that clause only in his declaration, without noticing the separate and distinct clause which operates as an exception. He further argued that the proviso in the above-mentioned Act was as separate and distinct from the preceding sections under which the general powers are given, as if it had occurred in a subsequent statute, and remarked on the difficulty to which the plaintiffs would be exposed if an averment of notice was required as contended for. Watson was proceeding to comment on the cases cited in support of the defendant, when he was stopped by a strong intimation that the Court considered the declaration to be good. He therefore merely referred to 1 Wm. Bland. (6th ed. 262, b. note 1), and Jones v. Allen (1 Dord. Rayn. 119).

The Court finally allowed Crompton time to consider whether he would amend, on the understanding that Watson should be heard in continuation, if the defendant declined to amend.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Friday, May 22.

WILLIAMS v. BUCKLOCK.—Hoggins showed cause against a writ obtained by Crompton on behalf of the defendant in this case, calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the Master should not review his taxation of costs. Cur. adv. vult.
ABRAHAM v. HARRISON.—This was an action of assumpsit for the due acceptance and payment of two bills of exchange. Crompton showed cause against the rule nisi obtained by Watson in this case to enter the verdict for the defendant, or for a new trial. Cur. adv. vult.

Saturday, May 23.

SHERWOOD v. CLARK.—M. Chambers, Q.C. and Bovill showed cause. Martin, Q.C. contra. Cur. adv. vult.
DANIELS v. FIELDING.—Jervis, Q.C. and Humphrey, Q.C. showed cause. Martin, Q.C. and Cowling, contra. Cur. adv. vult.

C. BRYAN v. BRIANT AND OTHERS.—Greenwood moved for leave to add a plea which had been struck out by Mr. Baron Rolfe at chambers, on the ground that it amounted to the general issue. This it was now contended it did not, but came within the principle of McGregor v. Gregory (11 M. & W. 267). Rule nisi.

Sunday, May 24.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. OSBORNE.—M. Chambers moved in this case for a new trial, on the ground of the improper rejection of evidence. The defendant had been a party in the conspiracy to defraud the Customs, shortly stated in the case of The Attorney-General v. Sellers, supra. Rule refused.

FRANKS v. PATER.—Hoggins moved for a new trial in this case, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence. Rule to show cause.

WILSON v. GRAY.—Duncan moved in this case for a new trial, on the ground that evidence had been improperly rejected. The Court granted the rule nisi for a new trial, on terms of bringing the money into court, and on payment of costs. Rule to show cause.

HARRIS v. COLLEY.—In this case the rule for a new trial was made absolute without argument. Rule absolute.

GOLDICUTT v. BRADY.—This was an action for breach of promise of marriage, in which a verdict had been found for the plaintiff, and Watson, Q.C. and Lush, now showed cause against the rule obtained by Telford, Serjt. for a new trial, on the ground of surprise. After some discussion respecting the sufficiency of the affidavits on which the rule was moved, the Court made the rule absolute, the defendant bringing the money into court, paying the costs, and accepting notice of trial for the following term. Rule absolute.

Monday, May 25.

SPECIAL CASE.

KIRSDALE v. MORRELL.—This case followed the decision in Young v. Smith (12 M. & W. 31), and was not argued. Judgment for the plaintiff.

WATKINS v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—In this case, which was an action of debt on a railway bond, the Court, without hearing Widdowson in support of the defendant (Hoggins, contra), gave the defendants leave to stand on payment of the costs of the amendment, but not the costs of arguing the demurrer, otherwise. Judgment for the plaintiff.

PATTON v. PERIN.—This was a special case by order of Nisi Prius, and will be reported when judgment is given by the Court. Smythes, for the plaintiff. Keeble, for the defendant. Cur. adv. vult.

BOOSEY v. DAVIDSON.

When a party is in an action for infringing a copyright, pleads and gives a notice under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 18, that the plaintiff was not the author, publisher, &c. he must state specifically who is the author, &c. and when and where the work was first published, &c. Crompton showed cause against a rule obtained in a former Term by Bovill, calling upon the defendant to show cause why the notice of objections, on which he relies, should not be amended, with costs. This was an action brought against the defendant for pirating the opera of La Sonnambula, which the plaintiff claims to have the sole right of publishing in this country. By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 16, it is enacted, "that in any action for printing any such book, &c. the defendant, on pleading thereto, shall give to the plaintiff a notice in writing of any objections on which he means to rely on the trial of such action, and if the nature of his defence be that the plaintiff in such action was not the author or first publisher of the book in which he shall by such action claim copyright, or is not the proprietor of the copyright therein, or that some other person than the plaintiff was the author or first publisher of such book, or is the proprietor of the copyright therein, then the defendant shall specify in such notice the name of the person whom he alleges to have been the author or first publisher of such book, or the proprietor of the copyright therein, together with the title of such book, and the time when, and the place where, such book was first published, otherwise," &c. The notice given pursuant to this Act stated a great variety of objections; amongst others, that at the time of the committing of the supposed grievance, the plaintiff was not the proprietor of the said work, but one Bellini, or one Roscior, or some one to the defendant unknown. To this it was objected that the words "some one to the defendant unknown" were too general, and not in accordance with the Act, which requires the actual name of the party to be stated. Mr. Justice Wrightman, being of this opinion, directed these words to be struck out. Again, it was stated in another objection, that the said work was first published in Milan in the year 1801. To this it was objected that the month of the publication as well as the year should be stated. His lordship, however, thought this sufficient. Another objection was, that the work was not first published in the British dominions. To this it was objected that it was too general, and should have gone on to have stated when and where published, and by whom. His lordship being of this opinion, and that such a notice of objection was in direct contravention of the Act, ordered it to be struck out. There were in all thirteen objections stated in the notice, to very many of which exceptions were taken. Upon the entire notice his lordship observed, that it seemed to him that the Act imposed upon a defendant this obligation: that if he said the plaintiff was not the proprietor of the work, he should say who is; and that if he says that this is not the first publication, he should state when and where it was before published. His lordship recommended the respective counsel to go privately over the objections, and amend them conformably to these suggestions.

BURY v. PERIN.

When a cause is pending in the Common Pleas of Lancaster, and is tried before the Registrar, by virtue of a writ of trial issued out of that Court, a motion for a new trial may be made in any one of the common law courts in Westminster Hall.

Arnold moved for leave to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial, in a case tried before the deputy Registrar of Liverpool, by virtue of a writ of trial issued out of the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster. He had some doubt, however, as to whether or not he was correct in making the motion in this court, or should make it before Mr. Justice Patteson or Mr. Justice Coleridge, the judges who went the last northern circuit.

His lordship having consulted with the Master, and referred to Smith v. Taylor (1 Dowl. & L. 874), said that the motion was correctly made in this court, as indeed it would be in either of the common law courts.

Arnold then proceeded, but not being prepared with a copy of the Registrar's notes, his application was postponed.

Saturday, May 23.

NEWTON v. STEWART.

Motion to set aside a plea in abatement of non-joinder. Ball moved for a rule calling upon the defendant to show why the plea in abatement herein, and the affidavit in support thereof, should not be set aside, and why the defendant or his attorney should not pay the costs of all the proceedings subsequent to the plea, with the costs of this application, unless the plaintiff should not be at liberty to sign judgment. In this case the defendant had pleaded in abatement the non-joinder of twenty-four other parties, and the plea stated that sixteen of the parties were within the jurisdiction of the Court, and eight were not. It also described some of these parties by the initials only of their Christian names, and the Christian names of one was altogether omitted. It was also alleged that the plea reciting the plea was false in fact. It was now contended that this plea was bad, because, first, a plea in abatement can only be available where all the parties are within the jurisdiction; secondly, the initials of the Christian names were used, the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 44, s. 13, not applying to any amount of this nature; thirdly, the affidavit was false in fact. (Wheatley v. Goldney, 9 Dowl. 1019; Lamb v. Smith, in the Exchequer last Term.) Rule nisi.

RE BRIMS.

Motion against an attorney, to whom a writ had been transmitted for service, requiring him to return it or an affidavit of service.

Lush moved for a rule calling upon a Mr. Byers, an attorney of this court, to return a writ of summons, and to pay the costs of this application. From the affidavit it appeared that a writ of summons had been transmitted to Mr. Byers for service in the country on the 25th of November last, which he acknowledged to have received; that since that period various letters had been sent to him requesting him to appear and that he had done, and one on the 25th of March last, peremptorily requiring him to return an affidavit of service or the writ itself, or say what he had done; that to these letters no reply had been returned. Relaxatio.

DENTON v. MAITLAND AND OTHERS.

Where proceedings had been commenced in the Lord Mayor's Court against a provisionally registered railway company, and a large sum of money belonging to the company attached in the banker's hands; and where an action had subsequently been brought in one of the superior courts against some of the committee of the said railway company, the Court refused to stay the latter proceedings.

Lush moved for a rule, calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why this action should not be stayed, or the Foreign attachment withdrawn from the Lord Mayor's Court. It appeared that proceedings had been commenced in the Lord Mayor's Court against the Gloucester and Abergystwith Railway Company, and that a large sum of money, between 3,000 and 4,000*l.* of the company had been attached in the hands of the bankers. No further proceedings had taken place in the Lord Mayor's Court, but an action had subsequently been commenced by the same plaintiff against the defendants, who were three of the provisional committee of the said railway. It was now contended that, inasmuch as these two actions were against the same parties, the proceeding by two actions at once was vexatious, and that, if the plaintiff insisted upon continuing his action in this court, at least he ought to abandon his attachment of the money. (Miles v. The Inhabitants of Bristol, 3 B. & Ad. 945).

Maynard, who showed cause in the first instance, insisted that as the Court had no jurisdiction to stay the proceedings in an inferior Court, it would not interfere to stay the proceedings in the present action, unless they were clearly vexatious and oppressive; that the present action is against different parties to those in the Lord Mayor's Court, the defendants in the latter Court being the Company, and in this, individual committeemen; that the proceedings at present are merely against the guarantee, and that the company by appearing and putting in bail can obtain the money attached. (Souter v. Dunsford; Maynard v. Hardy, 4 Bing. N.C.; Denton v. Maitland); that the mere pendency of another action is no ground for setting the proceedings aside. (Cumtong v. Hogarth, 2 Dowl. & L.; Ogle v. Smith, 6 Trant.)

Lush, in reply, contended that the cases cited did not apply to this one; that the parties in both Courts are really the same; that as no real company exists, the plaintiff cannot ultimately obtain the sum they have attached, and that the being compelled to appear and put in bail would still be a great hardship.

WILLIAMS, J. thought, as the two proceedings did not appear to be against the same parties, or for the same object, and were altogether independent of each other, he was not called upon to interfere, particularly as there was no authority in point upon the subject. Rule refused.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Wednesday, May 27.

RE PARTS NICHOLLS, re NICHOLLS.
Assigning fiat—1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, ss. 46 and 55. *Where assignees have been appointed, the right of the public to the 20*l.* and 10*l.* payable under the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, ss. 46 and 55, attaches; and although there be no assets, these sums should be paid before the fiat is annulled.*
*This was the petition of the bankrupt to have the fiat annulled with the consent of the creditors. Assignees had been chosen, but there were no assets. Upon application being made to the Commissioner for the ordinary certificate that the petitioner had surrendered and submitted to be examined, and that the consenting parties were the only creditors who had proved under the fiat, the Commissioner refused to give it, unless the fees of 20*l.* and 10*l.* required by the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, ss. 46 and 55, were paid.*
Wright, for the petitioner, cited Re parte Diamond, re Diamond (1 De Gex, 143).
THE CHIEF JUDGE said, that as assignees had been chosen, the right of the public to the 20*l.* and the 10*l.* had attached. He had never knowingly or intentionally deprived the public of these fees, where assignees had been appointed; but he had never said no case would arise which would exempt the party from payment.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULDSBURN.)

Re BACON.

Where a creditor has opposed an insolvent successfully and subjected him to punishment, the same creditor cannot be again heard in opposition to him on grounds within his means of knowledge at the time of the first opposition.

The insolvent came up to claim a protecting order, under the 28th section of the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. Cooke appeared as counsel for the insolvent, and Norton for the opposing creditor, who, it appeared, had been heard in opposition to the insolvent, when he first came before the Court in March, 1845; he proceeded to urge several matters against the insolvent which had not been urged by him on any former occasion.

HIS HONOUR said, that the rule by which he should abide in all similar cases was, that when a creditor had once appeared to oppose an insolvent, and had obtained the judgment of the Court adversely to such insolvent, who had undergone the punishment contemplated by the statute in respect of the misconduct proved against him, namely, imprisonment for debt, or the liability to it, for such a period as the Court, under the circumstances, thought just and sufficient, the same creditor could not be again heard in opposition to him on grounds within the knowledge, or the means of knowledge, of such creditor at the time when he first opposed the debtor. A contrary course would lead to the greatest injustice and vexation towards a debtor, and the practical result would be, that he would be deprived of all the benefits contemplated by the Act. Looking at all the circumstances of the insolvency (as the statute directed), the justice of the case had been satisfied by the length of time the insolvent had been without the protection of the Court, viz. one year and two months, ten weeks of which he had suffered imprisonment.

The protecting order was then granted.

CORNWALL and ANOTHER v. WOOD.

Church-rates.

Where a party is dissatisfied with the decision of the chairman of the vestry meeting, as to the majority, it is his duty to demand a poll, and the objection that the chairman had wrongly decided cannot be taken, if that duty be neglected.

This was a question as to the validity of a church-rate made in the vestry of the parish of Elstead, in Surrey, May 6, 1844. The cause was brought here by letters of request from the commissary of Surrey. The objections to the validity of the rate were twofold. First, that the rev. chairman, Mr. Bluck, was not properly elected, his nomination not having, as alleged, been seconded; and, secondly, that there was a majority against the rate of sixpence in the pound, though the chairman declared it to have been carried. It is stated that eleven parishioners held up their hands against the rate, and but five or six for it. No poll was demanded, nor any protest regularly entered into against it.

ADDAMS, Dr. appeared in support of the validity of the rate. A scheme had been got up by the defendant and a cheque to invalidate the rate in question. The parishioners would no doubt have found out that they had dug a pit into which they had fallen, and they must bear the consequences. Mr. Wood was summoned before the magistrates, and refused to pay the amount of the rate, which amounted to 2*l.* on the ground of its illegality. The bench of magistrates then dismissed the case, on the ground of want of jurisdiction. The Court was prayed by Dr. Addams to pronounce for the rate.

HOGGARD, Dr. appeared for Mr. Wood, the party proceeded against, and contended that the parishioner for whom he appeared did not oppose the rate in question for any vexatious or factional motives, but solely to have his right established, and not to be compelled to pay an illegal rate. The magistrates were clearly of opinion that there had been some irregularities, and that the rate was void ab initio. Elstead was a small rural parish, and the perpetual curate was not present, and the Vestry Act conferred the power (the incumbent not being present) of appointing a chairman. The first point to be adjudicated upon was if Mr. Bluck was duly seconded. The Rev. Mr. Bluck asserts that his nomination was seconded. There was an objection made by Mr. Wood to Mr. Bluck taking the chair, as he thought Captain Cornwall (the churchwarden) ought to have presided. The parties proceeded against Mr. Wood were bound to show that the rate was legally made; and did the parishioners agree in the rate? The show of hands was against the rate.

THE LEARNED JUDGE went over the facts, and pronounced for the rate with costs. The party proceeded against ought to have demanded a poll if he was dissatisfied with the decision of the chairman of the vestry.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

No incident relating to the admission of the law demands special notice. The subject of Appeal in Criminal Cases still attracts occasional letters in the news-papers. We present one of these, because we think we can recognise the hand of the writer; and if it be as we suspect, there is no man more competent from practical experience to exhibit the necessity for such an appeal. For some of the facts stated we can vouch from personal knowledge.

AN APPELLANT JURISDICTION IN CRIMINAL CASES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING HERALD.

SIR,—A letter appears in the Times of this morning, advocating the adoption of an appellant jurisdiction in criminal cases, and reflecting somewhat on the Solicitor-General for not having, before this, introduced a bill on the subject, to do which he obtained leave of the House of Commons some time since. I am quite sure the Solicitor-General is not one to undertake a matter of this sort, and then abandon it from any difficulties in the way; and I have every reason to believe, Sir, that the bill in question will be shortly introduced for the consideration and decision of the legislature.

As the subject is a very important one, affecting as it does the administration of justice, perhaps you will allow me, through the medium of your valuable journal, to offer a few observations respecting it, in favour I ask the more readily, as I shall be expressing not only my own opinion, but the well known opinion of many of the ablest and most experienced practitioners of our criminal courts.

As the law is now administered, in all civil cases, there is an appellant jurisdiction from the Nisi Prius Court, by means of which any error or mistake committed in a trial there may be rectified. Thus, if the judge admits evidence he ought not to admit, or lays down that as law which is not so, or if the jury return a verdict under the influence of some prejudice, manifestly opposed to what the verdict ought to be, in either of these cases justice may be ultimately obtained to the party wronged by an application to an appellant court.

Now, no such appeal lies in criminal cases. It matters not what difficulties surround the trial, nor what are the circumstances under which it takes place, the decision arrived at by such trial is a final one, and cannot under any circumstances be set aside or shewn to be erroneous.

The question now agitated is, whether the same rule which exists in reference to civil cases ought to prevail with regard to criminal cases also.

Common sense would seem to decide this in the affirmative, as one can hardly doubt, that more ready means should be at hand, if possible, to correct a mistake, where that mistake may affect the lives of many parties, than where it can only affect some mere pecuniary interest. Every thing that can be urged against an appellant jurisdiction in criminal cases may be urged with equal force and propriety against the same jurisdiction in civil cases; and the legislature ought, therefore, to do away with an appellant jurisdiction altogether, or allow it in criminal as well as civil cases.

That this is an important matter, deserving of the most serious consideration, is proved by the facts, that it has been taken up by so justly eminent and experienced a lawyer as the Solicitor-General. In addition to this, I can take upon myself to say, that it is an opinion entertained by many of the most practical and experienced men at the bar, that great injustice has been done, and always will be done, for the want of an appellant jurisdiction in criminal cases.

Some cases are stated in the letter I have referred to as illustrating the necessity of such a tribunal. I will close this letter by giving the outlines of one which occurred to myself but a few months since. I was called upon to defend a man who was charged with uttering a bill of exchange, knowing the acceptance to be forged. My brief was put into my hands but a few minutes before the trial was called on, so that I was unable to make myself master of the facts of the case. The evidence against the prisoner was that he had passed a bill of exchange, the hand-writing of the acceptor—who was a relative of the prisoner, but too ill at the time of the trial to be brought into Court. Upon this evidence, together with some trifling suspicious circumstances, the jury convicted the prisoner, who was sentenced to be transported for ten years.

From some communications made to me after the trial I was led to doubt the man's guilt, and I therefore directed inquiries to be made of the acceptor as to what she knew about it.

These inquiries were made, and to my astonishment I learned some weeks after that the woman admitted her name had been written, by her authority, at the request of the prisoner for whose accommodation it was done, and who had promised to take up the bill when due; which, however, his circumstances had prevented him from doing.

What could be done? Here was a man who had once been in affluent circumstances sentenced to be transported for ten years, for an offence of which he was perfectly innocent. If it had been a civil case, the evil might have been remedied by an application to the superior court for a new trial. But it was a criminal case, and no such redress was to be had, the law providing no means by which this unfortunate man could be saved from the dreadful and undeserved punishment to which he was sentenced. Deeply interested as I could not fail to be in the case, I applied to the Home Office for that redress which could not be had in any court; and my exertions were ultimately crowned with success, and the man was pardoned and discharged.

Such a case needs no comment; and if such are constantly occurring, which I know is the case, who will say that there ought not to be an appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases?

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,
Temple, May 18. A BARRISTER.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE flood of reports has compelled the omission of much that was in type, spite of a double number. It is confidently reported in Westminster Hall that the Court of Common Pleas is to be thrown open by the interference of Parliament. Should this be done, the great ability at present upon its Bench will attract to it a large amount of business; and then what is to become of the Registration Appeals? Simultaneously with such a change a new Court should be established for Crown Cases, Criminal Appeals (which cannot be much longer refused), and the Registration Appeals. One additional Judge would suffice to permit the formation of such a court from the élite of the present courts. The important case of Walstab v. Spottiswoode was argued yesterday, and will be resumed to-day.

The Lord Chancellor, assisted by the Master of the Rolls, has at length given judgment in the matter of the management of Master Lynch's office, fully assenting to the complaint of the Solicitors. The elaborate judgments of both will be found in their proper place. The report is the most accurate we could procure; the present importance of the subject to the Profession making its appearance this week desirable, without waiting for a more careful report. Its interest is, indeed, only temporary; we have not, therefore, occupied any space with the arguments, which were very long.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

(Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.)

The Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint Sir George Baillie Hamilton, K.C.H. now Secretary to her Majesty's Legation at Berlin, to be her Majesty's Minister plenipotentiary to the Grand Duke of Tuscany.

The Queen has also been graciously pleased to appoint Henry Francis Howard, esq. now Secretary to her Majesty's Legation at the Hague, to be Secretary to her Majesty's Legation at Berlin.

The Queen has also been graciously pleased to appoint the Hon. Henry George Howard, now First paid Attaché to her Majesty's Embassy at Paris, to be Secretary to her Majesty's Legation at the Hague.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY THE LORD LIEUTENANT OF THE COUNTY OF STAFFORD.

Henry Hill, esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant; Henry Charles Vernon, esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant; James Loxdale, esq. to be Deputy Lieutenant.

MIDDLE TEMPLE, May 23.—The undermentioned members of the Hon. Society of the Middle Temple have been called to the bar, and were this day sworn in, viz.:—Mr. J. Cockerton, Mr. T. Jones, Mr. J. Needham, Mr. W. T. Kime, Mr. C. Bicknell, and Mr. H. Waller.

THE NEW MASTER IN CHANCERY (IRELAND).—The Dublin Gazette has the following:—"Her Majesty's letters patent have passed the great seal of Ireland, appointing William Brooke, esq. Q. C. to be one of the Masters in Chancery of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, in the room of John Sealy Townsend, esq. resigned. His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant has been pleased to appoint Thomas Dorrian, esq. a resident magistrate for the county of Roscommon, under the provisions of the Act 6 Wm. 4, c. 13, in the room of David Duff, esq. deceased."

Letters patent have passed the great seal, appointing Wm. Brooke, esq. Q. C. Master in Chancery, in the room of John Sealy Townsend, esq. resigned.

IRELAND—CALLED TO THE BAR.—Trinity Term opened yesterday. The only remarkable feature of the present, has been the issue of a feaver of subpoenas against railway share defaulters.

The following gentlemen were called to the bar by the Lord Chancellor. The first and second on the list took the oaths prescribed for Roman Catholics:—

David Richard Pigot, esq. eldest son of the Right Hon. David Pigot, Q. C. Dublin.

Charles Henry O'Neill, esq. eldest son of Felix O'Neill, of Drumberg Castle, county Antrim.

Charles O'Malley, esq. youngest son of St. Samuel O'Malley, Castlebar.

George James Norman D'Arcy, esq. eldest son of J. D'Arcy, of Hyde Park, county Westmeath.

Henry James Dudgeon, esq. eldest son of James Dudgeon, Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

John Carty, esq. eldest son of the Rev. James Carty, county Antrim.

John Hickson, esq. only son of George Blake Hickson, Q. C. Dublin.

John Murphy, esq. eldest son of Robert Murphy, of Marriion-square, Dublin.

Matthew Fox, esq. second son of the late John Fox of Moyally House, King's County.

John Maher, esq. was, on yesterday morning, in the Court of Queen's Bench, sworn in as Clerk of the Crown for the county of Louth, and county of the town of Drogheda.

THE MAGISTRACY.—The Lord Lieutenant has appointed Thomas de Ruxy, esq. to be a resident magistrate in the county of Roscommon, in the room of Captain Duff, deceased.

APPOINTMENT OF EXAMINERS.

Easter Term, 9 Vic. 1846.

It is ordered that the several Masters for the time being of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer respectively, together with Robert Riddell Bayley, Edward Smith Bagg, Thomas Clarke, John Coverdale, Alexander William Grant, John Swarbrick Gregory, George Herbert Kindeley, Edward Lawford, William Lowe, Thomas Metcalfe, Edward Leigh Pemberton, Edward Rowland Pickering, John Innes Pocock, John James Joseph Sudlow, Robert Whitmore, and Thomas Wing, gentlemen, attorneys-at-law, be and the same are hereby appointed examiners for Trinity and Michaelmas Terms next, to examine all such persons as shall desire to be admitted attorneys of all or either of the said Courts; and that any five of the said examiners (one of them being one of the said Masters) shall be competent to conduct the said examination, in pursuance of, and subject to the provisions of the rule of all the Courts made in this behalf in Easter Term, 1846.

BY THE COURT.

Approved by the Court of Queen's Bench.

Approved by the Court of Common Pleas.

Approved by the Court of Exchequer.

TRINITY TERM EXAMINATION.

The examiners appointed for the examination of persons applying to be admitted attorneys, have appointed Thursday, the 4th day of June, at half-past nine in the forenoon, at the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, in Chancery-lane, at ten o'clock precisely, to commence the examination. The articles of clerkship and assignment, if any, with answers to the questions as to due service, according to the regulations approved by the judges, must be left with the secretary, on or before Thursday, the 28th instant.

Where the articles have not expired, but will expire during the Term, the candidate may be examined conditionally, but the articles must be left within the first seven days of Term, and answers up to that time.

A paper of questions will be delivered to each candidate, containing questions to be answered in writing, classed under the several heads of—1. Preliminary. 2. Common and Statute Law, and Practice of the Courts. 3. Conveyancing. 4. Equity and Practice of the Courts. 5. Bankruptcy and Practice of the Courts. 6. Criminal Law and Proceedings before Justices of the Peace.

Each candidate is required to answer all the preliminary questions (No. 1.); and it is expected that he should answer in three or more of the heads of inquiry—Common Law and Equity being two thereof.

—Legal Observer.

ADMISSION OF SOLICITORS IN CHANCERY.

Secretary's Office, Rolls, May 15, 1846.

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Wednesday, June 10th, at the Rolls Court, Chancery-lane, at a quarter past three in the afternoon, for swearing solicitors.

Every person desirous of being sworn on the above day must leave his common law admission or his certificate of practice for the current year at the secretary's office, Rolls-yard, Chancery-lane, on or before Tuesday, June 9th.

NEW RULES OF THE COMMON LAW COURTS.

RENEWAL OF ATTORNEYS' CERTIFICATES.

Easter Term, 1846.

Whereas, by section 25 of the stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, it was enacted, that if any attorney shall neglect to procure an annual stamped certificate, authorizing him to practise as such within the time by law appointed for that purpose, then and in such case the registrar of attorneys and solicitors shall not afterwards grant a certificate to such attorney without the order of one of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer, or of one of the judges thereof, to issue such certificate.

And whereas, it is expedient that upon the application of an attorney, having neglected for the space of one whole year to procure or renew an annual stamped certificate, the judges should have means of inquiring as to the circumstances under which he has omitted to commence, or has discontinued to practise, and as to his conduct and employment during the term of such omission or discontinuance.

It is ordered that from and after the last day of Trinity Term next, every person who shall intend to apply on the last day of Term, or in vacation for such order, shall three days at the least previous to the first day of the Term, on the last day of which the application is intended to be made, or in case the application is to be made in vacation, shall, previous to the first day of the preceding Term, leave at the office of the masters of the court in which he intends to make the application, a notice in writing, containing his name and place of abode for the last preceding twelve months. And that before the said first day of Term, he shall enter, or cause to be entered, a like notice in two books kept for that purpose, one at the chambers of the Lord Chief Justice or Chief Baron, the other at the chambers of the other judges or barons, and shall, before the said first day of Term, cause to be filed the affidavit upon which he seeks to obtain or renew his said certificate at the office of the masters aforesaid, and a copy thereof to be also left at the chamber of the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench.

And it is further ordered, that the masters reduce such notices into alphabetical order, and add the same to the list of admissions, and the order for the granting the certificates shall be drawn up on reading such affidavit of such copy, having been left in compliance with this rule.

(Signed)	FORTUNATUS DWARRE, N. W. CROFT, R. GOODSON, JAMES BUNCE, C. R. TURNER.

Mr. Justice Coleridge still remains at Brighton; he is improving in health, but it is not expected that his lordship will be able to resume his judicial duties during the present term.

JUDGES AND CORPORATION AT ST. PAUL'S.—Last Sunday being the first Sunday in Trinity Term, the Judges and the members of the civic corporation attended divine service at St. Paul's. The legal dignitaries, in accordance with general custom, were met at Temple-bar by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, and by them conducted to the cathedral. There were present Lord Chief Justice Denman, Lord Chief Baron Pollock, Baron Parke, Baron Alderson, Mr. Justice Patteson, Mr. Justice Coleridge, Baron Rolle, Mr. Justice Erie, Sergeant Manning, Sergeant Chadwick Jones, Sergeant Channell, the Common Serjeant, Mr. Commissioner Bullock, the Lord Mayor and his chaplain (the Rev. Charles Farebrother), Aldermen Sir Chapman Marshall, Sir Jas. Duke, M.P., Wood, Gibbs, Farncomb, Sir George Carroll, Moon, Hughes, Sheriff Chaplin, Sheriff Laurie, Under Sheriff Wile, the Lord Bishop of Llandaff, Dean of St. Paul's, the Archdeacon of London, the Rev. J. E. Tyley, Canon Residentiary of St. Paul's; the Rev. Ernest Hawkins, B.D., Prebendary of St. Paul's; and other clergymen, habited in full canonicals. Complete cathedral service was performed, the prayers being chanted by the Rev. A. Beckwith, M.A., and the lessons read by the Rev. J. Povah, M.A. The sermon was preached by the Lord Bishop of Llandaff.

THE BIG WIGS.—A SCENE IN THE EXCHEQUER.—Friday was the first day of Term, and the Courts, according to a late alteration, were opened at 10 A.M. The Lord Chief Baron, with Mr. Baron Alderson, Mr. Baron Rolfe, and Mr. Baron Platt, took their seats shortly after that hour. Their lordships entered the Court in full-bottomed wigs; the Queen's Counsel also wore wigs of a similar description. After their lordships had gone through the bar, the peremptory paper was called on. Mr. Martin begged to be allowed to mention the case of Stockdale and Benn, and Benn and Stockdale, the learned counsel having on his ordinary wig at the time.

THE LORD CHIEF BARON.—Mr. Martin, I question whether you are visible to-day.

Martin said that he was about to state to their lordships, that he found it a considerable inconvenience to wear the heavy full-bottomed wig.

THE LORD CHIEF BARON.—I fear, Mr. Martin, that you must appear in costume.

Martin.—I really cannot wear these wigs, my Lord. I am sensible of the ill effects of it for a week after.

MR. BARON ALDERSON.—You should bear the inconvenience, on account of the increased dignity, Mr. Martin. (A laugh.) It may appear to you a custom more honoured in the breach than in the observance.

Martin.—It really does, my Lord.

MR. BARON ALDERSON.—But you cannot appear without having ordered your marriage garment. (A laugh.)

Chambers said that they had been misled by the judges in the Queen's Bench having come into court in the ordinary small wig.

Martin here bowed and retired.

SHAM ATTORNEYS.—Notwithstanding the sentences passed by the learned Recorder of this borough upon the two convicted sham attorneys Partridge and Latham, for fraudulently obtaining money from poor persons under false pretences, the one to six months' imprisonment, and the other to seven years' transportation, we find that another of these provoking pests has been detected in his nefarious practices.—Birmingham Advertiser.

MIDDLE TEMPLE.—The Honourable Society of the Middle Temple evinced their usual loyalty by giving an extra bottle of wine to each mess yesterday, in order to celebrate the birth of the young princess. The health of her Majesty and the recent addition to the members of the royal family was given with right good-will, and received with the heartiest enthusiasm by a very crowded hall.

Dublin, May 23.

IRELAND.—RUMOURS.—A report is current at the bar that Sir Edward Sugden will shortly retire from his present office, and leave Ireland. Whatever post he is destined to fill elsewhere, his loss in this country can scarcely be repaired; for a more upright, fearless, able, or painstaking judge never held the Great Seal in any part of the United Kingdom.—A new distribution of silk gowns is spoken of in the hall. Mr. Smyly, of the north-west circuit, and Messrs. Rolleston, Wall, and Christian, of the Leinster circuit, are the persons for whom the honour is said to be intended. The last-named gentleman (Mr. Christian) is a young barrister whose name has not been much before the public; but he is very well known in his profession as a lawyer of the highest promise, and likely ere long to attain very considerable eminence. With the names of the other three the public ear has long been familiar.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

SALARIES, &c. IN PUBLIC OFFICES.—On Thursday an abstract of accounts of every increase and diminution which has taken place within the year 1845 in all public offices or departments, pursuant to the Act 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 24, was issued. It appears that in 45 establishments the increase in the number of persons employed was 2,267, of which 2,035 were in the Post-office; in salaries, 94,489l. 10s. 6d.; in emoluments, 208l.; in retiring allowances 23,717l. 8s. 5d., and in expenses, 11,464l. 13s. 11d.—making a total of 129,879l. 12s. 10d. In the diminution list the number of persons in the year was 463, of which 396 were from the Excise. The salaries in the diminution class amounted to 52,970l. 7s. 3d.; the emoluments, 3,284l. 17s. 6d.; retired allowances, 9,879l. 3s.; and the expenses, 1,620l. 10s. 4d.—making a total of 69,754l. 18s. 1d. The increase in the year was considerably beyond the diminution; the former being 129,879l. 12s. 10d. and the latter 69,754l. 18s. 1d.

NATIONAL DEBT.—A Parliamentary paper has just been printed containing accounts relating to the National Debt and Savings-banks. It appears that savings-banks and friendly societies commenced on the 6th of August, 1817, from which period to the 20th of November last, the gross amount of sums received and credited with interest on account of savings-banks was 40,276,576l. 16s. 1d. and on account of friendly societies, 2,709,301l. 6s. 4d.—making a total of 51,985,878l. 2s. 5d. An account is given of the stock purchased and the money paid. On the 20th of November last the amount of stock standing in the names of the commissioners on account of savings-banks and friendly societies was 32,388,643l. 19s. 4d. besides Exchequer bills. Military savings-banks were established in September last, and on the 6th of January last the commissioners had purchased stock for them to 14,944l. 3s. 4d. having received 14,849l. 1s. 11d. as deposits from soldiers in a very short period.

BUTTER.—Return of the quantities of butter exported from the United Kingdom in the years 1830, 1835, 1846, and 1845. The following is a condensed view of the statement:—

	Cwts.
1830—To Portugal proper	24,973
Gibraltar	2,838
British North American Colonies	3,070
British West Indies	16,284
Brazil	16,606

1845—To Portugal Proper	9,353
Gibraltar	1,110
British North American Colonies	83
British West Indies	19,552
Brazil	15,423
To twenty-four other places	1,371
Total	46,592

The quantity exported to our Australian colonies was, in 1830, 55 cwts.; in 1835, 1,630 cwts.; in 1840, 4,698 cwts.; and in 1845, only 36 cwts.

EXCHEQUER-BILLS FOR PUBLIC WORKS.—A return has just been printed of the advances of Exchequer-bills, under the Act 57 Geo. 3, c. 34, and subsequent Acts, for public works during the four years ended the 31st of December last. The sums advanced amounted to 103,850l.; the interest paid, to 8,067l. 18s. 1d.; the principal repaid, to 14,311l. 18s. 10d.; and the principal unpaid, to 89,538l. 1s. 2d. The return was procured by Mr. Forster, the member for Berwick-on-Tweed.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

The following interesting reports have been recently circulated by this society:—

COMMITTEE ON THE LAW OF PROPERTY.

The following references have been made to this committee:—1. To consider whether it may not be possible to obtain the benefit of some of the common forms used in conveyancing, by reference to Acts passed for that purpose. 2. To consider the practicability, by means of a legislative enactment, of incorporating the common forms used in ordinary deeds into legal instruments, by way of reference.

REPORT.

To discover some method by which the legal instruments now employed, in dealing with property, to express or carry into effect the intention of private persons may be shortened, without lessening the certainty and precision of their operation, has for some time been an object with those who have turned their attention to plans of legal reform. The labour, and consequent expense, which would be saved by such a method are indeed so considerable, that the desire to discover and introduce it is by no means surprising. In the immediate transactions out of which any instrument arises, a considerable amount of expense is indeed in most cases unavoidable. In one form or other, such payment must be made as shall be sufficient to insure that each instrument is properly framed. And yet, even here, the expense caused by the extreme length of legal instruments, as at present constructed, is sometimes a just cause of complaint. But this original length continually begets a secondary length and cost, in the ratio of a geometrical progression. Abstracts must be furnished, attested copies may be required; or the instrument may form a part of a declaration, or a plea, or an answer, a report, or other judicial proceedings; or these and other analogous cases, the mere mechanical labour arising out of the length of the documents adds to the expense of what is to be done, without contributing to its being done better.

Now there are, as appears to this committee, several cases in which a complete cure may be found in the grievance by dispensing with the use of any internal ment at all; as, for instance, was done by the Act dispensing with the necessity of the deed for a lease in a lease and release. But such cases must be comparatively few. In the great majority of transactions there is no instrument need which could be dispensed with; and the only question is, how can the instruments employed be shortened without being made insecure?

For the better examination of this question, it seems desirable briefly to consider the parts of a deed usually consists. These parts appear reducible to two heads. We have first the recitals of the circumstances under which the instrument is made; and then we have the formal statements of the intention of the parties, and various covenants or declarations intended to express it with due precision, or secure its execution without the possibility of evasion.

Now it is clear that the recitals cannot be shortened otherwise than by the discretion of the draughtsman of the instrument containing them, because they vary indefinitely in each case. Although, indeed, the shortening of the instruments by which property is dealt with would doubtless materially contribute to shorten recitals. But it is otherwise with the operative part of the instrument, and the covenants or declarations connected with it. Here there have been suggested at least four distinct plans, by which the necessity for employing many of the long forms made usual at present may be removed in numerous cases of ordinary occurrence, while the benefit now sought to be obtained by their use shall be preserved.

Of these plans, the first which we would notice is the suggestion, that the liabilities or powers at present attached to or conferred upon the persons who fill certain characters, as—e.g. that of vendor or deed of purchase, or trustee in a marriage settlement—by the express covenants or declarations contained in the instrument, should be attached to or conferred upon them by legislative enactment, from the mere fact of their filling the particular character. This proposal has been sanctioned by the high authority of Mr. Butler, Mr. Tyrrell, and Mr. Humphreys. It has been adopted, in one instance, by the Act passed in the last session for simplifying the transfer of real property, namely, with respect to the receipts of trustees being in some cases sufficient discharges, and there are probably other cases in which it might be usefully employed. But as any extensive application of this plan to practice would obviously require much consideration, and the subject does not properly fall within the present references, it cannot be more than briefly noticed here.

A similar observation is applicable to the second of the plans to which we have alluded, namely, to the proposal that forms of ordinary instruments, and other common forms divested of all unnecessary parts, needless words or phrases, should be prepared by persons of known eminence as conveyancers, and put forth under the sanction of the legislature, or of some commission or body appointed by the Crown, as precedents, of which private individuals might avail themselves in the construction of legal instruments. Upon this proposal, however, which certainly possesses much to recommend it, and appears to have met with the approval of many persons of considerable experience in business, as well as of high legal authorities, some further remarks will be found in a subsequent part of this report.

The two remaining plans out of the four mentioned above, constitute the more immediate subject of this reference made to this committee. Both of these plans agree in one respect, namely, that they do not propose to strike out, or even materially to abridge, any part of the legal instruments now in use, but only to enable parties to get the benefit of the long forms adopted at present, by employing certain short forms to be provided for them. The difference between these plans will appear as we proceed.

The first of the two (in this report distinguished as the third plan) addresses itself to cases of a simple nature; such as (e.g.) a sale by an absolute owner of freehold property to another, or a simple settlement on marriage; or still more to the usual form of the lease of a dwelling-house; and it appears to us well adapted to facilitate such transactions. It proposes to provide certain short forms of instruments suited to each case, and to enact that the use of any such instrument shall have the same effect between the parties to it, as if an instrument containing certain other specified forms, being the usual utory forms in the particular case, had been employed. The general character of the provisions by which the plan might be carried out, however, is so clearly shown in the bill introduced by Lord Campbell, in the session of 1843, by lessening the expense attending the transfer of feehold lands of small value, that it appears to us unnecessary to enter into details. We would observe, however, that the peculiar form of conveyance suggested in that bill, is no essential part of the scheme; not a property but an accident of it; and one which we think might be advantageously modified, by substituting for the tabular form of conveyance, those employed in a short deed, such as is to be found in Mr. Humphreys' work; or, indeed, such as are addressed by the Lord Chancellor, on the occasion of the discussion upon the bill in question. A bill so amended will be found in Appendix No. I. to this report. It may be remarked as an argument in favour of this proposal, that it is, in fact, the full embodiment of suggestions made by more than one generation of men of professional experience to the real property commissioners; while, so long ago as the 17th of Anne, it formed the principle of an Act (c. 30) for the registration of deeds in the East Riding of Yorkshire; which by the 8th Geo. 2 (c. 6) was extended to the other two Ridings of that county. But, as has been already intimated, the plan is not easily susceptible of application to any but simple cases, i.e. those where the covenants or declarations contained in the instrument apply to all the parties to it, or at least where no doubt can arise as to the parties to whom they do apply.

Now in actual business this kind of simplicity occurs less frequently than might at first be supposed. Let us take the case of a sale. One property is mortgaged, and the mortgagee has to join in the conveyance; another is liable to a charge for legacies, and the occurrence of the legacies is desirable; a third is in trust, and the cestui que trust has to be a party with the trustee in the conveyance; and while the legal estate passes by the act of the latter, the covenants for title are to be entered into by the former. How can set forms of deeds be provided meeting this variety of circumstances—this species of complexity?

And yet, it will be observed, that there may be nothing special in these cases; as there is not in those suggested by way of example. The forms employed may be just as much common forms as the covenants for title, in a deed of sale by one avised in fee-simple, to another and his heirs. But, according to the circumstances of each case, these forms have to be differently put together. The plan of the house may be indefinitely varied, but it is, after all, only the same kind of rooms differently disposed.

Nor can it be predicated of the cases just referred to, that they concern only large properties, where the expense entailed by a deed prepared so as to meet the special circumstances, upon the present plan, may be easily borne. It is in small properties belonging to persons engaged in business that complexities of the kind last noticed are perhaps the most likely to occur; and yet these properties, for the very same reason, are those which most frequently change hands; where the burden of long deeds is most heavily felt; and where security against evasion is often the most needed.

Now it is to meet this difficulty, that the last of the plans (in this report distinguished as the fourth plan) to which we have alluded, peculiarly addresses itself. It aims at giving to the parties concerned in these more complicated cases, the same sort of benefit, with nearly the same brevity, as would be attained in cases of a more simple character, by the use of short forms of deeds. And this it proposes to effect by the following method. Let a set of the most approved common forms, adapted to all ordinary cases, be selected and arranged under appropriate heads in one column of a schedule to an Act of Parliament. In another column let there be contained in the shape of marginal notes to the forms included in the first column, short forms of words, expressive in each case of the substance of the longer form; and let there be an enactment, that whenever a deed made with reference to the Act shall contain any covenant, statement, or declaration expressed in the words of any form contained in the first or marginal column of the schedule, or in words substantially to the same effect, the party using that short form shall be taken to have entered into the covenant, or made the declaration contained in the second column, in which the form employed is attached as a marginal note.

By thus taking to pieces the various parts of which a deed is composed, it will, we believe, be found possible, in all cases of ordinary occurrence, to enable the parties making the instrument to reconstruct it in such a shape as may suit their circumstances. We shall have attained the first condition necessary for giving to our forms that flexibility indispensable to render them practically useful, in such cases as those to which we have referred, namely, the power of selection. For thus any party will be at liberty to enter into such of the declarations or covenants embodied into an instrument as may suit his situation, without troubling himself about the rest. The legatee, for example, may join in the conveyance, without dovetailing for the title. The trustee may limit his covenants to his own acts and incurances. The creditor may release the estate, and do no more; because each will be able to select from the general storehouse those forms only which are fitted to his case, and to combine his engagements to these.

But the power of selection given by the proposed plan goes beyond this. If the peculiar circumstances of the case require special provisions, such as not to be found in the forms contained in the schedule, it will be in the power of the parties to introduce these into the instrument; while yet, in the other parts, which may make up, perhaps, three-fourths of it, they may avail themselves of the short forms provided for them without danger of introducing into the deed any thing inconsistent with the special provisions embodied; and without the necessity of any declaration intended to modify the effect of the forms employed would have without it.

The flexibility attained by the power of selection given to the parties to the instrument, is not, however, in itself, enough to insure all that is required. Further provision is necessary to meet those minor changes, which have to be made in forms substantially the same, in order to adapt them to the circumstances under which they are used; as, for example, the change in the covenant for right to convey, necessary to adapt it, from the case of a vendor of an estate in possession, to that of a vendor of an estate in remainder; or the change in the simple covenant against incumbrances, introduced to adapt it to the case of a conveyance subject to a mortgage.

These variations seem to be reducible to two classes. First such as have their origin in the number of the parties to a covenant, and the nature of the interest conveyed; and, secondly, such as grow out of the species of property dealt with, and the form of conveyances suitable to it. Instances of the first class have been already given. As an instance of the second class we may mention the variation between a covenant relating to freeholds and one relating to leaseholds, dependent upon the use of the words "granted and released" in reference to the freehold, and "assigned" in reference to the leasehold.

Now, for the first of these classes of variation, we propose to make provision, by means of certain general directions, applicable to all the forms contained in the schedule, except there should be a special direction inconsistent with some general one attached to any particular form, when the particular and not the general direction would be to be followed. For instance, in the first example given, viz. the change in a covenant for title needed, to adapt it from the case of a vendor in possession to that of one in remainder, the requisite limitations would be produced by a general direction that "A covenant entered into under the Act, shall be taken to be co-extensive with, and to apply only to such estate or interest in the lands mentioned in the instrument, as the party entering into it shall purport to have thereby created or conveyed," at law, or in equity.

The second class of variations would be met by giving to certain words an extensive meaning; as, for instance, in the case alluded, the word "conveyed" would be made to include every mode of conveyance by which property can be transferred, so that it would equally apply, as a word of reference, to freehold or leasehold property.

The general directions before noticed, so far as they have been considered, which is at present only in relation to purchase-deeds, will be found in the Appendix No. II. to this report, which also contains provisions applicable to others of the second class of variations alluded to, besides the instance selected as an illustration.

It will be obvious, as will also appear from the example given in that appendix, that the forms to be embodied must be framed so as to contain no words which could interfere with the construction to be put upon them by virtue of the directions.

The parties who may make use of any of the forms provided for them should also, we think, have the power of altering or suspending the operation of the directions, whether general or special, by an express declaration of their intention.

By the provisions above mentioned, we believe that the necessity for a multiplication of forms differing only in some slight particulars may be avoided, while the qualifications introduced by these differences, and necessary to the expression of the substantial intentions of the parties, may be secured.

But the plan does not stop here. There are parts of some legal instruments of a purely formal character, which yet have been so long regarded as integral portions of such instruments, that he must be a bold man who should venture to admit them. Now the benefit of these formal parts, we think, may be, in many instances, secured without any direct reference to them in the deed. Thus the memorandum of the receipt of the purchase-money might be made to supply the place of a "receipt clause." The operative words might import an "habendum." For other instances of this nature we must refer to the Appendix No. II. where will likewise be found certain provisions intended to facilitate the connection of the forms with each other, and some other similar matters. In the Appendix No. II. will be found also a specimen of the covenants for title in a purchase-deed, constructed so as to show (by placing in parallel columns the short forms to be used, and the longer forms to be embodied by their use), what saving in the length of the instrument would be effected by the proposed change, and at the same time how explicit the short instrument would really be, should any occasion for such explicitness arise?

This specimen has been selected as the most fitting case to elucidate the nature of the proposed alterations in the construction of the legal instruments, of which an account has been given. But, to illustrate the variety of cases to which the plan would be applicable, we have added the draft of a deed of a more complicated character constructed upon it. The plan, it may be observed, is applicable to wills as well as to deeds, wherever common forms are now employed in their construction.

In an earlier part of this report we have alluded to a plan, the second of those noticed by us, in which it is proposed to shorten legal instruments by abridging the common forms now in use; and we now again refer to it for the purpose of pointing out what appears to us an important difference between that plan and those with the consideration of which we have been chiefly occupied, the third and fourth.

Two advantages would appear to belong to this plan of abridgment—1st, it would leave the whole contents of any instrument apparent upon its face; 2dly, The forms promulgated could be used separately, and just as far as the parties pleased, and thus they would possess the same facility of adaptation to the special circumstances of each case, which it is the object of the fourth of the above plans to secure as thereby proposed. But in one particular, and that by no means unimportant, the idea of embodying forms into legal instruments by way of reference, which constitutes the common basis of the third and fourth of the four plans mentioned above, appears to this committee to possess an advantage over any scheme for abbreviating the forms now in use. It is, that short as the instrument actually employed would be, it would be built upon the solid foundation of the existing forms, and would appropriate to itself all that completeness which time and practice have secured to these long-tried balancers of property.

The present common forms are the result of much thought and long experience, taught frequently by failure, to provide against the subtle deflections raised by men anxious to escape from inconvenient stipulations, or the doubts produced by judicial criticism as to the meaning and effect of the provisions inserted in different instruments. It is no doubt possible that these forms might, by a skilful hand, be greatly shortened, while their effect remained unimpaired. But if much change were made, is it not to be feared that some valuable defences might be sacrificed unawares? And, at all events, must not a considerable time elapse before men could feel the same confidence in the new forms which they now place in the old? Both the third and fourth plans would also have the great advantage of leaving entirely undisturbed the existing practice of conveyancing. Either of them may be tried as an experiment, to be adopted at the will of the practitioner, and to be censured by itself, with reference only to the Act or Acts on which it was founded.

It should be observed also, that upon the fourth plan mentioned in this report, the whole of the substantial intentions of the parties would appear upon the instrument, and indeed, to unprofessional eyes, with greater clearness than if the more complete legal expression of it were employed.

This committee therefore consider that this last plan is, upon the whole, the best adapted for carrying out the objects contemplated by the reference made to them, and as such they recommend it for adoption.

In conclusion, it seems desirable to advert to two objections likely to be raised to the plan suggested—1st, that it will interfere with the revenue from the stamp duties; and, that it will unduly lessen the remuneration of solicitors and counsel.

In regard to the last of these objections, this committee wish to express their opinion that nothing can be less likely to be really beneficial to the interests of the public than any measure which should tend to lower the character of the legal profession. While they can scarcely doubt that such would be the case were the scale of remuneration diminished below the proportion due, in a country disunited as England is, to the talent and exertion required from those engaged in the profession of the law. They would apply alike to the counsel and solicitor, the language used by the real property commissioners in reference to the latter; and urge, "that it is for the public good that both should be liberally remunerated for their services." It is not the fair reward of the work of the head that this committee wish to lessen, but the unnecessary multiplication of the labours of the hand. The use of forms of conveyances, substantially shorter than those at present employed may, indeed, involve the necessity—a result, be it observed, contemplated by the real property commissioners as likely to ensue from the changes recommended by them—of adopting some method of calculating legal remuneration other than the mere length of legal instruments. What that method should be, this committee do not, however, consider themselves called upon at present to discuss; though they would suggest that the value of the property dealt with, coupled, perhaps, with some consideration of the nature of the instrument, might afford a suitable standard upon which a scale of charges, so far as these are the subjects of taxation, might be adjusted; such as, while it ensured to the legal practitioner a just remuneration, should throw the heaviest burdens upon those best calculated to bear them, and lessen the expense in all transactions of small amount.

A similar principle might perhaps be applied to the calculation of the stamp duty, at least in cases of settled property. But whether it would not be more beneficial to the community if the revenue now raised upon the alienation of property could be raised upon its transmission by devise or succession, is a question which they would suggest as not undeserving of serious consideration.

Since this report was agreed to, the committee have had the gratification of perceiving that the principle on which both the third and fourth plans are based, is fully admitted and recommended for adoption in leases of lands of a certain value, by her Majesty's commissioners of inquiry into the state of the law and practice in respect to the occupation of land in Ireland, which has just been presented to Parliament.

IMPENDING CHANGES.

By some exertion we were enabled to give to our readers last week the resolutions proposed and the resolutions carried in the Lords' Committee for inquiring into the burdens on land. As expressions of opinion, as an indication of coming changes, the importance of this document to the Profession cannot be over-estimated, and we invite their serious and immediate attention to it.

In commenting upon Lord BROUGHAM'S Conveyancing Bill, it appeared to be the wiser course to consider how the mischiefs it threatened might be mitigated, or turned into benefits, rather than, by ridicule and abuse of it, to lull our readers into a false security, and kindle a hope that a bill so strange in its provisions would never be permitted to become law. We stated then our conviction that the landed interest was resolved upon redressing the costs of conveyancing, and that whatever it were accomplished by short forms, or any other new devices, the attempt would be made, so far as legislative interference could effect the purpose, and we, therefore, took the liberty of exhorting the lawyers everywhere to prepare for inevitable changes, and by mutual exertions to obtain equivalent advantages, as fair compensation in the shape of removal of existing evils, for any injury such measures as those threatened might be calculated to inflict upon them.

If any proof were wanting of the propriety of that suggestion, it would be found in the double report of the Lords' Committee. His are submitted to us the deliberate views of both the great parties in the state, and wherever they agree we may be well assured that no long time can elapse before those views will take a practical form. And it is remarkable that on all the matters affecting the law, and in which the interests of the Legal Profession are mainly involved, their unanimity is perfect.

BOTH parties agree in recommending the improvement of the law of real property, the simplification of title, and of the forms of conveyance, and the establishment of some effective system for the registration of deeds.

BOTH recommend the payment out of the public funds of the entire expenses of criminal prosecutions; and the minority suggests the appointment of a public prosecutor.

One party recommends a revision of the stamp duties, with a view to the "adoption of an ad valorem scale of duties, relieving small properties from the present unjust and disproportionate charge, and making an equitable distribution of all duties on the sale and transmission of property, real and personal, whether during life or after decease, both on ordinary conveyances and in the shape of probate or legacy duties, so as to remedy all existing inequalities, and to repeal all undue and partial exemptions."

These are recommendations that especially interest the Profession. Upon the most important of them both parties are agreed. It is plain that the legislature, or, we should rather say, the great majority, are bent upon effecting the following objects:—

1. A change in the law of real property.
2. The simplification of titles.
3. The abbreviation of the forms of conveyancing.
4. The establishment of the registration of deeds.

With such an unanimous expression of opinion in favour of these measures, and stimulated to carry opinion into practice by the pressure of circumstances that will compel attention to whatever may offer a chance of relieving land from some of its burdens, the most sanguine dare not hope to avoid the experiment being tried. It may not, perhaps it will not, be successful. Short forms may not unlikely be found impracticable in the working, and the changes in the law of real property may ultimately create more confusion, and consequently more cost, than the existing law. But the result may be otherwise, and, at least, there must be an interval during which the very trial will be attended with some injury to existing interests.

If, therefore, any doubt or hesitation existed before, there can be none now, with this report to convert suspicion into certainty. The indolent or the busy can no longer plead the remoteness of the danger as an excuse for continued neglect of a matter affecting so seriously the interests of the Profession. We repeat the exhortation to immediate and earnest deliberation, with a view to resolute action. We venture again to suggest the course that should be adopted. It is, not to offer an indiscriminating opposition to changes they cannot hope by any efforts to avert, but to seize the occasion to demand that measures of injury to them may be accompanied by measures of relief—that the justice so long denied shall be conceded, and that, simultaneously with any change that may reduce their present profits, they be relieved from the burden of the certification; the fees of the courts be reduced, and that they be more effectually protected against the invasions of those who have not gone through the same ordeal as a qualification for the practice of the law, by prohibiting the practice of conveyancing by any but solicitors, and the punishment both of Sham Lawyers and Sham Conveyancers.

LOCAL COURTS.

It is said that a Bill for the establishment of Local Courts throughout the country will be introduced by the Government immediately after the Whitsuntide recess, and that an effort will be made to convert the project into a law during the present Session.

It will scarcely be necessary to repeat now all the arguments that have been urged against Local Courts in the LAW TIMES, in the course of the discussions that have taken place upon the various measures that have been produced to perish almost as soon as born. Enough to say, that reflection and experience have served but to strengthen the conviction that they will prove vastly more productive of evil than of benefit to the community, unless, indeed, the framers of the new Bill have succeeded in the invention of securities for good as well as cheap law, which have hitherto baffled the ingenuity of our legislators.

The ready reply to all objections to the practical working of Local Courts is, that there is a popular demand for them, as proved by the numerous Bills for the establishment of Small Debt Courts with which the Parliament is deluged. But the fact is, that these Bills do not emanate from public so much as from private motives. Trace any one of them to its origin, and it will be found to be the offspring of the busy brain of some attorney looking for a commission, or the joint speculation of three or four idle gentlemen desirous of being judges in a small way, aided by an attorney not unwilling to have the conduct of a private Bill. They summon meetings, and procure petitions, and get up a sort of little agitation, and that is called a public demand for a Local Court. It may be that the moving parties are really disinterested; that they labour at the reduction of their professional gains from a philanthropic desire that their clients shall have law for next to nothing. If so it be, their disinterestedness deserves honour, whatever be our opinion of their wisdom. The test, however, will be speedily applied. If the public advantage be the object sought, we shall find the promoters of the various private bills cheerfully abandoning their own partial measures, and zealously supporting the general measure of the Government. If, on the other hand, private motives have mingled with their patriotism, we shall see them opposing the Government scheme, although it is but an enlargement of their own.

The objections to Local Courts are so many, that a mere list of them would fill a couple of our columns. They present themselves at every stage of the process. The greatest of all is that which is by their supporters esteemed their foremost benefit;—the absence of legal advisers,—the prosecution of their suits by the parties in person. All experience has proved the vast advantages that result from the substitution of unprejudiced agents for angry foes in the conduct of a dispute. It prevents a world of litigation, and enables the true question at issue to be determined soberly, without the intervention of those personalities which would convert courts of justice into bear-gardens. And if the system has been found so advantageous in the higher courts, surely it would be equally beneficial in the lowest—nay, more so, because the class of suitors in the latter would be less restrained by good-breeding.

Is any proof of this required? Look at the existing Courts of Requests. What they are the new Local Courts will be, unless they admit the respectable practitioner, and that cannot be done without allowing to him a reasonable remuneration.

We write, assuming that the new measure, like its predecessors, will extend the jurisdiction of the Local Courts to claims of 10*l.* and not for debt only, but for damages in all kinds of actions, save such as involve a title to real property.

But we are not hostile to cheaper justice, or to the popular demand that it shall, to use the favourite phrase, be brought home to every man's door. We believe that the law may be, and ought to be, made very much more easy of access. But we protest against this proposed plan for accomplishing the object, as costly to the country, cumbrous, unsatisfactory to the suitor, injurious to the Profession, encouraging a race of pettifoggers and sham-lawyers. There are other means for securing the same end, and to which it would be wise to give a fair trial before plunging into a huge experiment which it would be as difficult to abolish as to put in action. The plan we have suggested inflicts no added burden upon the country; it introduces no new and untried machinery; it will preserve the character of our legal institutions, while bringing their benefits home to the whole community by reducing the cost of justice to the merest trifle. It is at once simple and efficient. It consists in a large reduction of Court fees; placing a lawyer in the chair at quarter sessions; and extending the jurisdiction of that ancient and familiar tribunal to all causes under 20*l.* save where a judge's order shall, on the application of the parties desirous of trial before a judge, otherwise direct. Here is all the machinery in existence for the most efficient Local Court that could be devised, and only requiring very trifling regulations to give entire satisfaction to the public, and to produce all the benefits expected from such Local Courts, without the evils which must inevitably result from them. So reasonable is this proposition, that if properly brought under the notice of the legislature it could hardly fail to have the preference. Will no member of the House of Commons fight the battle of the Law and the Lawyers against the reckless assaults of laymen, ignorant of the very nature of the work they have undertaken?

VERULAM PUBLICATIONS, &c.

No. 22 of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, and No. 18 of New Practice Cases, will be ready by Saturday next.

The 13th and 14th numbers of Cox's Criminal Law Cases are in the press.

The first volume of the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases is now issued, bound; back numbers can be had to complete sets for binding.

MR. SAUNDERS'S Treatise on The Practice of Summary Convictions, with an appendix of forms, is in the press, and will be published in a few days.

All the forms necessary for the coming registrations are being printed for the Society. Where any quantities are required, the name of the county or town can be inserted by the printer, if the orders be sent immediately.

The members are entitled to all the 1,000 forms and law-books published by Messrs. KNIGHT, at the Society's prices.

NECROLOGY.

OF LEGISLATORS, MAGISTRATES, AND LAWYERS.

SIR JOHN TREVELYAN, BART.

We have this day to record the decease of one of the oldest baronets in the empire—Sir John Trevelyan, who expired on the 23d inst. at his seat, Nettlecombe Court, Somerset, at the advanced age of 86. He was the son of the fourth baronet by the daughter of P. Symond, Esq. He succeeded to the title in 1828, having previously married the daughter of Sir T. S. Wilson, Bart. an eminent city merchant. He was a deputy-lieutenant for Northumberland, in which county, as well as in Somerset, he held estates, which, with the title, go to his son, Walter Calverly, born in 1797. The baronetcy was created in the reign of Charles the Second, being conferred by that monarch on a member of the family in return for the services rendered by them to the royal party in opposing the republican forces under Fairfax and Cromwell.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

The Law Magazine; or Quarterly Review of Jurisprudence. No. 71. Bonnaing and Co.

This number is rich in material interesting to the Profession. It opens with an article on "Capital and Prison Punishments," in which the writer emphatically contradicts the assertions of the opponents of capital punishment, that crime has diminished with its abolition. We differ broadly from the writer in his conclusions, but we are inclined to agree with him that the fact is as he states, and that the argument founded upon the opposite assumption is a weak one, and, like all weak arguments, injure the cause they are adduced to support. The real ground of hostility to capital punishment is a far loftier one than the question whether it adds to, or diminishes by a fraction, the number of criminals. The case of the "Brazilian Slave Trade" is next reviewed, and is followed by a learned essay "On several dispositions of an equity of redemption." There is an account of the opening of Lincoln's-inn Hall; practical papers "On actions against justices and others fulfilling public duties;" and "On the joint and several liability of partners, one signing for several." "The Practice of the Court of Chancery" is a review of Mr. DANIELL'S book; and a most interesting abstract of a recently published work on "German Criminal Trials" concludes the longer papers. Notes on leading cases, short notes of new books, legal events of the quarter, &c. complete this number of the quarterly of the Profession.

The Law of Fire and Life Insurance, with the latest Decisions, and an Appendix. By GEORGE D. B. BRAUMONT, Esq. Barrister-at-Law. Second Edition. London, 1846. Stevens and Norton.

INSURANCE has become a subject of such universal interest, that a volume devoted to it will be a welcome addition to the Law Library. Mr. BRAUMONT has condensed all the most important principles and decisions into a treatise of no great bulk; so arranged that information upon any branch of the subject is readily found. Having defined the term, he describes, successively, the form of the policy, the duration of the insurance, the interest of the insured, the premium and date of commencement, the risk, misrepresentation, concealment, and warrant.

ties, adjustment of claims, and assignment of policies. The second part is devoted to the effect of assignments on other contracts; the third part to companies, agents, and proceedings on policies; and to the Mr. BEADMONT has appended some useful tables of annuities and reversions. As a specimen, perhaps, the most interesting and useful to our readers would be a portion of the chapter on the ASSIGNMENT OF POLICIES.

Possession gives in a certain manner title to land: possession is alone sufficient to make a title to goods other than land: bills and notes, which by custom pass current from hand to hand, require no evidence of title other than possession. The custom (local or general) of merchants can make other contracts of third parties transferable, so that every possessor of the written evidence of the contract shall have title on a claim against the third parties who originally bound themselves by the contract. Thus, in the case of Long v. Smith, the Court, in determining that the possession of certain Neapolitan scrip gave no title to the stock or fund, declared, "the question is, whether these securities, from the course of dealing, have acquired in the city the character of bank-notes, bills of exchange, exchequer bills, dividend warrants, and other instruments, which form part of the circulation of the country."

By the custom of marine insurance, policies are transferable freely with the bills of lading. There is no custom recognised which makes policies of fire and life insurance pass currently to successive owners of the property insured, nor to other persons, by transfer of the possession of the policy. As a general rule, where the possession of property is in one party, and a recognized claim to it resides in another, such claim can only become a transferable interest by the possessor being a party to the transfer by some act or admission; his acceptance of notice of the transfer is sufficient for this purpose. On this general principle, several cases upon policies of life insurance have been determined. Equitable mortgagees can assign, and trover for detention of deed does not lie. (Hobson v. Melland, 2 Mood. & R. (N.P.) 342.) After when deposites only holds for safe custody without lien. (Rowlin v. Deabrough, 2 Mood. & R. (N.P.) 326.) On fire insurance no case of transfer of policies has come before the Courts within a recent period. Whether, with regard to both or either of these kinds of insurance, a custom will grow up, making policies of insurance to "run with" the property insured, as custom has made several covenants (originally only personal contracts) to "run with the land," is a fair subject of speculation.

NOTICE OF ASSIGNMENT OF POLICIES.—Now with regard to notice. The case of Williams v. Thorpe (2 Simons, 250) was, where the assignee of a bankrupt were the plaintiffs in the bill: a party to whom the bankrupt had assigned the policy on his life was defendant. Though it was shewn that "assigns" were mentioned in the policy, though the party taking the policy by the assignment had paid the premiums which fell due upon it in two successive years, and though it was proved by the evidence of Mr. Morgan, joint actuary of the office (the Equitable Insurance Company), that it was not the practice of the office to require notice of the assignment of policies, but to give effect to the assignment when proved upon the coming in of the claim on the determination of the risk; yet the Court decreed that notice was necessary under the general law of assignment of debts. The policy was ordered to be given up accordingly, as being in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt. This decision was followed up in a case which came before the Court subsequently, at an interval of three years, viz. in the case Ex parte Colville, re Severn (Jan. 10, 1851, 1 Montag. & Park. 110). (See Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. 1; and West v. Reed, V. C. Wigram, Feb. 11, 1843.) The authorities are very carefully collected in this case.

With regard to the practice of the offices requiring notice of assignments, the period differs; in one office forty-two days, in another three months is allowed, in another the assignment is to be mentioned to the office as soon as possible. With regard to the form of notice, this is not fixed (see Ex parte Stright, 1 Mont. 502); it must, however, be expressed, and not implied. Whether verbal notice were sufficient in any case, is a fact for the jury. (Edwards v. Scott, 2 Mann. & Gr. (C.P.) 963.) But secret assignment is not admissible as a conversion. (Nutting ex parte, 2 Mont. D. & G. (B.) 302. See Bennett v. Leader, 10 Sim. (Ch.) 230.) Payment of the premium by the assignee is not notice by itself, as is shewn in the case of Williams v. Thorpe. There is no case shewing the precise limit of time within which it is considered requisite that notice should be given in the absence of any rules of the particular office on this point. In the case of Ex parte Colville more than six months appear to have elapsed; in the case of Wm. Hams v. Thorpe, there was an interval of fifteen months between the assignment of the policy and the claim of the assignee of the bankrupt arising by the issuing of the commission. Perhaps, in the absence of a definite rule as to any office, the Courts would fix the time by taking the average duration of the commission of the practice of the different offices. This period being fixed, where there are two or more conflicting claims, on neither of which notice has been given to the office, the time for giving such notice being expired as to none or as to all, the first in date will have the preference.

After a commission of bankruptcy (or declaration of insolvency) has issued, it will be too late to give the notice to the insurance office, though with their consent, if the regular period within which, according to the rules of the office, notice should have been given, has expired. The commission issuing will prevent notice being given to complete the assignment, the regular period for notice not having expired. This principle, if not decided by the two cases above cited, is in conformity with the rule in bankruptcy against relation back to the date of the deed where enrolment is subsequent to commission. (See Parry v. Brown, 1 Jones, 196; 1 Vent. 346; Kemp v. Gandy, Carth. 178. See 13 Mod. 3.)

An execution taken out against the "goods and chattels," does not include choses in action, of which are policies of insurance; therefore, whether execution be in itself notice of transfer cannot be made a question. The "Bona" passes under the assignment in bankruptcy in a case where a settlement was made, previous to the bankruptcy, in trustees for wife and children. (Parke v. Bell, 9 Sim. 388.) As to who is agent to be affected with notice, the usual agents or officers of the company receiving the articles of agreement for policies will be those to take the notice.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY

ON

THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

16. Cestuis que trust.

Equitable estates.—Equitable estates are to be enjoyed, by the cestuis que trust, in the same condition as legal estates, and they are to be entitled to the same benefits of ownership as if the estates were actually executed in them (Courthope v. Heyman, Carth. 25; Wyndham v. Tanfield, 1 Ch. Rep. 29; Goring v. Bickersstaff, 1 Ch. Cas. 8; Cornbury v. Middleton, ib. 211; Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 195); and the cestuis que trust may, without the intervention of the trustees, or the possibility of their preventing them from exercising their ownership, act as if no trusteeship existed. (Phillips v. Brydges, 3 Ves. 127.) And the assignee of a cestui que trust may call upon the trustee to convey to him, and on his refusal so to do, may file a bill against him to compel a conveyance, and that even without making the assignor a party. (Goodson v. Blison, 3 Russ. 583.)

17. Persons who have already departed with their estates.

Under certain circumstances, parties who have departed with their estates, so that no interest whatever, either legal or equitable, remains vested in them, may yet retain a disposing power; as in the instance I have before alluded to, of a subsequent conveyance to a bond fide purchaser for valuable consideration, by a person who has previously made a voluntary settlement of the same identical property; in which case, the subsequent disposition will be effectual, and, as such, defeat the prior voluntary conveyance. Again, a tenant in tail who has levied a fine, though he has by that means departed with all his estate in the entailed lands, yet, both he and his issue will still, to a certain extent, retain a conveying power, which, previously to the late Fine and Recovery Substitution Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), might have been exercised, by either himself or his issue, being vouched in a common recovery for the purpose of barring the estates in remainder or reversion (Baumont's case, 9 Rep. 138; Baker v. Willis, Cro. Car. 476); and the same object may now be accomplished by an assurance under the Fine and Recovery Substitution Act above alluded to. The same observations are also applicable to a tenant in tail, who since the passing of the last-mentioned Act has converted his estate tail into a base fee; in which case, though no estate whatever remains in him, he must yet convey as if seised in fee. Nor does a tenant for life, who is the protector of a settlement, by conveying away his life-estate, cease to be the protector; consequently, he may give or withhold his consent to the alienation of the estate in tail just as he could have done before.

18. Donees of Powers.

The right of parties to sell under powers must depend in every case upon the particular terms expressed in the instrument by which they are created. A general power of appointment without any restriction will confer an absolute power of disposition over the property it embraces, whether the donee does or does not take an actual estate in it. If he takes an estate, then the power will be agent pendant or appurtenant to such estate, but if no estate be limited to him, then the power will be collateral, or in gross. If no particular form be prescribed, then any mode of assurance capable of passing the property will be a valid execution of the power (Daniel v. Upley, Latch, 9, 39, 134; Hosling's (Dane) case, 3 Keb. 511; Saunders v. Owen, 2 Salk. 467; Dighton v. Thomlinson, 1 P. Wms. 149; Dyer v. Aveler, ib. 165; Wykham v. Wykham, 11 East, 458); but if any particular form be prescribed, then the terms thereby imposed must be strictly complied with (Hawkins v. Kemp, 3 East, 410; see also Digge's case, 1 Rep. 173; Bath and Montague's case, 2 Freem. 193; 3 Ch. Cas. 55; Birde v. Stride, Bridg. 21; Thayer v. Thayer, Palmer, 112; Blockville v. Ascol, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. side note, 659; Kibbett v. Lee, Hob. 312; Dormer v. Thurland, 2 P. Wms. 506; Mansel v. Mansel, Wilms. 36; Darlington (Earl of) v. Pulteney, Cow. 260; confirmed in Long v. Lady Cowen, 5 T. R. 567; 6 Bro. P. C. 666, Toml. 175); consequently, if the power is to be executed by a deed attested by two witnesses, it will be invalid if executed by one only; and if the conveyance is to be made with the consent of a particular person, such consent is essential to the valid execution of the power; and if the power is restricted to a limited interest, an appointment for any larger estate would be ineffectual.

19. Executors and Administrators.

Executors and administrators have an absolute power of disposition over the testator's or intestate's goods and chattels, whether real or personal, and may therefore sell all such beneficial interests in terms of years as come to them in their representative capacity; consequently, a purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase-money, even if the term be charged with a particular debt, or even if it be specifically bequeathed, because terms of years are subject to the payment of all debts in the first instance. (Essex v. Corbett, 1 P. Wms. 148; Nugent v. Offord, 1 Atk. 669.) Where there are several executors who all prove the will, they have a joint and several interest in all the testator's personal estate (Dy. 33; 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 319); therefore a disposition by one of them only for a term is good. But it is otherwise in the case of administrators, who having a joint authority, one of them cannot convey alone, so as to bind his co-administrators. (Hudson v. Hudson, 1 Atk. 460.)

20. Sheriff.

The sheriff may seize lands or terms for years (Palmer's case, 4 Co. 74; Atkinson's Sheriff's Law, 325), and it is impossible to suggest any possession of a certain term that is not the subject-matter of a fiat facias (Taylor v. Chis, 3 Will. 294; Westmoreland v. Smith, 1 Man. & Ry. 186; Sturges v. Bosman, 1 B. & A. 230; Dee v. James v. Brown, 8 Taunt. 679); consequently, a term acquired by marriage may be taken in execution for the husband's debt. But notwithstanding that a sheriff may sell any certain term in lands, it appears doubtful whether, by the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), he can sell an estate perpetuo, and the better opinion seems to be that he cannot do so. (Comb, 291.)

What species of conveyances will be considered as simply voluntary.—The statute 21 Eliz. c. 6, has declared all conveyances to be void against purchasers for valuable consideration (1 Man. Ry. 273; Wheeler v. Fisher, 2 Atk. 618; White v. Sanson, 5 ib. 412; Hill v. Bishop of Exeter, 2 Taunt. 82; 98); consequently, it is immaterial whether the purchaser has or has not notice of the settlement (Palmer v. Roderick, 19 Ves. 90; Ruckle v. Mitchell, ib. 110; Metcalf v. Palmer, 1 Ves. & Bea. 94); the estate receiving the same construction in courts of equity as in courts of law, and comprehending copyhold as well as freehold property. (Barry v. Bellifall, 5 B. & A. 131; Currie v. Nield, 1 M. & Cr. 580.) So where a power is exercised under voluntary settlement, and that power is afterwards exercised for a valuable consideration, the purchaser will have the benefit of it. (Hart v. Middlehurst, 3 Atk. 377; 1 Mad. Prac. 232, 2nd edit.; see also White v. Simons, 3 Atk. 412; Hill v. Bishop of Exeter, 2 Taunt. 82, 83.) But the settlor will not be allowed to defeat the settlement by a subsequent conveyance, upon a mere nominal consideration (De v. Roullege, Cow. 705; Metcalf v. Petherick, 1 Ves. & Bea. 84), unless he had reserved to himself a power of revocation by the prior settlement, but which, if he were to do, he would render the settlement testamentary, and all the legal consequences of a will would attach upon it.

Distinction between voluntary conveyances and a purchase taken in the name of wife and children.—Care must be taken to distinguish between a voluntary conveyance and one taken in the name of the purchaser's wife and children, the latter of which is not considered to be within the meaning of the Act of Fraudulent Conveyances (27 Eliz. c. 4), and therefore cannot be defeated by a subsequent conveyance to a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration. (Lady Gorges' case, Cro. Car. 550, cited; Booth v. Templar, 3 Bro. C. C. 148; Doe v. Manning, 9 East, 59; Doe v. Hopkins, lb. 70; Hill v. Bishop of Exeter, 2 Taunt. 69; Gully v. Bishop of Exeter, 10 B. & C. 601.) Cases of this kind differ from the ordinary cases of conveyances taken in the names of third persons, in which, if no trusts are declared, the party to whom the estate is conveyed will hold in trust for the party advancing the money (Gawcotte v. Thwing, 1 Vern. 366; Benger v. Benger, 1 P. Wms. 780; Ryall v. Ryall, 1 Atk. 50; Dyer v. Dyer, 1 Cox, 92); because the husband and father is under a moral obligation to provide for the wife and children. (Lloyd v. Lloyd, 1 P. Wms. 607; Buck v. Andrews, 2 Vern. 57, 128; Kingdom v. Brydges, lb. 67; see also Ryder v. Ryder, 10 Ves. 361.) In the case also of a purchase in the name of a child, whether such child be legitimate or illegitimate (if it be not otherwise provided for), it will be deemed an advancement for the child, and not a resulting trust for the father; unless some contemporaneous declaration can be proved, or some act is done to manifest an intention that the child should take as a trustee; and this must be done at the time of the conveyance, for a subsequent act or disposition will not divest the gift (Mumma v. Mumma, 2 Vern. 19; Dyer v. Dyer, Wat. Cop. 216; Crabb v. Crabbe, 1 M. & K. 511); nor will the presumption in favour of the child be rebutted, although the conveyance should be made in the joint names of the child and of the father (Savage v. Savage, 1 Cha. Cas. 27), or of the child and a stranger. (Lampugh v. Lampugh, 1 P. Wms. 111; see also Gray (Lord) v. Gray (Lady), Finch, 338; Elliot v. Elliot, 2 Cha. Cas. 66; Mumma v. Mumma, 2 Vern. 19.) Nor will it be material whether the purchase be of an estate in possession or reversion. (Finch v. Finch, 14 Ves. 56; Dyer v. Dyer, 2 Cox, 92; Murree v. Franklin, 1 Swans. 13.) A purchase made by a grandfather in the name of a grandchild will also be good if the father be dead (Howard v. Bower, 2 Cha. Cas. 96), but not otherwise; as the beneficial interest the child will take will depend upon whether or not the purchaser stands in loco parentis to him; which a grandfather, in the lifetime of the father, does not. (Lloyd v. Read, 1 P. Wms. 607; 1 Rep. Ca. Abs. 382.) It has indeed been said that the presumption is not strong where the purchase is made in the name of a daughter as a son, because daughters are not so often provided for by a settlement of lands as sons; but this distinction is not sustainable. (See 2 Mad. Prac. 117, second edit.; Lady Gorges' case, 3 Cro. 550; Bedwell v. Prome, mentioned 3 Abz. 95.) In both instances, however, it will be requisite that the child should be unadvised; yet a partial advancement (Rep. temp. Finch, 326), or, it seems, any advancement, if the father considers the child unadvised (Ridgway v. Ridgway, 3 B. Rids. R. Ca. 106), will be insufficient to induce a trust in favour of the father; nor will a reservation of a life estate be sufficient to prevent the child from taking. (Lampugh v. Lampugh, 1 P. Wms. 111.)

What acts of the father will repel the presumption of the intended purchase in favour of the child.—In some of the earlier cases it was considered that, notwithstanding the father should himself take possession, and exercise acts of ownership over the purchased property, those circumstances would afford no evidence of a trust for him (Lampugh v. Lampugh, 1 P. Wms. 111; Mumma v.

Mumma, 2 Vern. 19; Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Atk. 306; Bedwell v. Prome, 3 Atk. 490; Bedington v. Ridgway, 3 B. Rids. P. C. 106; see also Elliot v. Elliot, 2 Cha. Cas. 231); and in that case it must be intended that those acts were done in the character of guardian for the child (1 P. Wms. 113); but it has been held that, where the father received the rents and profits after the child was of age (Lloyd v. Read, 1 P. Wms. 608); or where the child was of age when the purchase was effected (2 Mad. Prac. 117; See graterie, M. S.), the son would only be a trustee for him, as he also would be if the father and another person paid the purchase money. But, at the same time, it appears that the laying out of money by the father in improving the property is not exercising such an act of ownership as will convert the son into a trustee. (Shales v. Shales, 2 Freem. 265.)

Practical remarks.—Upon the whole, therefore, it may be laid down as a general rule, that whenever a child takes for his own benefit, and not as a trustee for the father, it will not be in the power of the latter to defeat his child's claim by alienating the property even to a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration. (Lady Gorges' case, Cro. Car. 550, cited in Kingdom v. Brydges, 2 Vern. 67; Buck v. Andrews, lb. 120.) But if the father was a trader, the purchase will not be protected (6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 75); unless he was solvent at the time it was made; yet, if solvent, then his subsequent insolvency will not invalidate the settlement. (Sagittary v. Hyde, 2 Vern. 44; Russell v. Hammond, 1 Atk. 15; Holloway v. Mithard, 1 Mad. Rep. 113; Butterbee v. Furrington, 1 Swans. 106.)

As to what persons will be considered as purchasers within the meaning of the statute 27 Eliz. c. 4.—It is not necessary, in order to enable a purchaser to obtain the protection of this statute, that the legal estate should have been conveyed to him for an equitable interest. Entitling a party by contract to clothe it with the legal title, makes such a party a purchaser in the eye of a court of equity (Buckle v. Mitchell, 18 Ves. 100); hence the purchaser of an equitable estate for a valuable consideration will be no more affected by a voluntary settlement, even with notice, than a purchaser of a legal estate; and in a very recent case (Lister v. Twiss, March 12 and 23, 1846, 7 Law T. 8), although not long since a contrary doctrine prevailed (Ker v. Dorrien, 9 Bing. 76), it was held, that where title-deeds are deposited, by way of security, with a banker, the latter will be considered a purchaser within the meaning of this Act, and, consequently, as such, entitled to avoid the settlement. But creditors, even by specialty, were not considered as purchasers within the 27th of Elizabeth; and although under a prior statute (13 Eliz. c. 5) a voluntary conveyance was void against creditors, it was, nevertheless, formerly considered, that in order to impeach a settlement under the latter statute, the husband must be proved to have been indebted at the time. (East-India Company v. Owen, Glib. Rep. 37; Walker v. Burrows, 1 Atk. 98; Stephens v. Oline, 2 Bro. C. C. 90; Lusk v. Wilkinson, 5 Ves. 384.) But this rule was relaxed in favour of the creditors in the more recent case of Richardson v. Smallwood (18 Ves. 55); see also Townsend v. Wintacott (2 Bosc. 340), in which it was held, that in order to make void a deed as fraudulent against creditors, it was not necessary to prove that the party was insolvent at the time, if it appeared that the intention was to delay the creditors.

INCREASED VALUE OF LAND.—In 1823, land in Belvoir-street was sold for 8s. per yard; and on Tuesday last, the narrow strip of land between the New Chapel and Wellington Rooms, in the same street, was sold by Mr. Windram for 25s. per yard.—Leicester Advertiser.

PRICE OF LAND IN SOMERSETSHIRE.—Monkton-Combe estate, consisting of about 77 acres, with the farm-house and buildings attached, let to the present tenant at 150l. per annum, was sold by auction, by Messrs. English and Son, at their rooms, Milcom-street, on Wednesday week, for the sum of 5,261l., being at the nearly unprecedented rate of upwards of 30 years' purchase. Some ground-rents, belonging to the same estate, realized excellent prices, but not in the same ratio as the land.—Bath Chronicle.

COTTAGE PROPERTY, BRAINTREE.—On Thursday last, at the George Inn, Braintree, Mr. Newman, by direction of the trustees of Mr. S. Boyton, deceased, sold upwards of fifty cottages, or occupations, situate in Braintree; part freehold and part copyhold, the admission fine to the latter being only a double quit-rent, which did not exceed 5d. for the largest lot, and in most of them only 1d. Part of the estates were also land-tax redeemed.

Lot.	Amount	Purchaser
1. Five copyhold.	£32 2 9	Mr. G. Laver
2. Four ditto	19 17 6	Mr. Goodday
3. Five ditto	24 16 4	Mr. Marshall

13. Two ditto	10 8 0	Mr. Cunningham, esq.
14. Four ditto	24 12 0	Mr. W. Purney

The sale was numerously and respectfully attended, the competition was good, and the produce of the cottages exceeded considerably the sum anticipated by the parties interested.—Essex Herald.

Public Sales.

By Messrs. DRIVER, at the Mart.

The above celebrated and magnificent property, the favourite residence of his late Royal Highness the Duke of York, containing 600 acres, was on Tuesday the 19th inst. brought to the hammer, by Messrs. THIS Office unites the Benefit of a Mutual Association with the Security of a Proprietary Company, and offers to the Assured the following advantages:—

1. Credit until death, with privileges of payment at any time previously, for one-half of the premiums for the first five years, upon Assurances for the whole of Life,—a plan peculiarly advantageous for securing Loans.
2. In Loan transactions the lender secured against the risk of the borrower going out of Europe.
3. Sums assured to become payable at GIVEN AGES OF DEATH, if previous.
4. Policies indefeasible; fraud alone, not error, vitiating them; and in case the Renewal Premium remain unpaid, the Assurance may be revived at any time within six months, upon satisfactory proof of health, and payment of a trifling fine.
5. Officers in the Army and Navy, and persons residing abroad, or proceeding to any part of the world, assured at low rates.
6. Immediate Survivorship, and Deferred Annuities granted; and Endowments for Children, and every mode of provision for Families arranged.

Information and Prospectuses furnished, on application at the office.

Sales by Auction.

CHESHIRE.—About eight miles from the City of Chester. —Valuable Freehold Estates for investment, consisting of the Manor of Manley; an excellent Residence, with numerous Farms, the whole containing 1,100 acres of productive Land, exonerated from Land-tax.

M. R. W. W. SIMPSON has received instructions from the proprietor to offer for SALE by AUCTION, at the Royal Hotel, Chester, on WEDNESDAY, JUNE 17, at Two o'clock in the afternoon, in twelve lots, exceedingly valuable FREEHOLD ESTATES (exonerated from land-tax), consisting of a most desirable and substantially-built residence, recently enlarged and improved, lawns, pleasure-grounds, walled gardens, &c. and several conveniently arranged farms, with superior agricultural buildings attached, public-houses, cottages, &c. The property is desirably situate in the townships of Manley and Kingswood, in the parish of Frodham, and distant about eight miles from the city of Chester. It contains collectively 1,100 acres of productive arable, pasture, and wood land, at present in the occupation (excepting the residence and about 151 acres in hand) of highly respectable tenants, at rents amounting, with the estimated value of the property in hand, to 1,900l. per annum. Upon the property are most valuable quarries, with an abundant supply of white stone for building purposes. It abounds with game, and is within easy distances of three packs of hounds.

Particulars, with plans annexed, may be obtained of G. J. NICHOLSON, Esq., Solicitor, 5, Raymond-buildings, Gray's-inn; at the place of sale; and of Mr. W. W. SIMPSON, 18, Bucklersbury, London.

Mr. Simpson annexes some observations made by him at Norwich last month, when he brought to auction the North Cove Hall estates, in Suffolk, as appeared in the New York Chronicle and other newspapers:—

"The attendance at this sale was exceedingly numerous, and to a great extent represented the individual and collective respectability, as well as opulence, of the sister counties. Mr. Simpson, previous to opening the sale, ventured to address his audience at some length on the all-absorbing subject of the contemplated (and, he hoped, certain) abolition of the corn-laws. He acknowledged that, till within the last year, he had been a thorough-going protectionist. After a three years' test, however, of Sir Robert Peel's measures, added to his extensive experience up to the present period, in the letting and sales of landed property, he was now free and proud to confess that sliding and other scales had fallen from his eyes; the result of which was, that he was now a thorough-going anti-protectionist, from an honest and firm conviction that rents which had been set on fair and liberal principles (within the last seven years) of 'Live and let live,' would be permanent: and he fearlessly stated that the year's purchases on such rentals had risen within the last six months, and in all probability would continue to rise until the settlement of the great question in respect to free-trade in corn, &c. For the truthfulness of these statements, Mr. Simpson referred to recent lettings and sales, which have been published, not only by himself, but by other auctioneers and land agents. The consumption and demand of an increasing population (in the ratio of about 1,000 per day), the capital, skill, industry and enterprise of Englishmen, in addition to the easy and inexpensive transit of their produce to the first markets in Europe, would form such a counterpoise as would enable us to compete successfully with the miserably uncultivated lands and minds of exotic growth. Instead, therefore, of the motto of 'agitate, agitate,' let us, said he, substitute that of 'cultivate, cultivate;' and let landlords assist improving tenants, by making advances (in the nature of improvements in drainage, &c. &c.) of the additional capital which may be required, on that charging for the same at the rate of four per cent. on the expenditure which shall be judiciously laid out. Hence the tenant farmer will reap an additional benefit of at least ten per cent. and a permanent improvement of the value of the farm (quasi landlord) will supervene. Mr. Simpson stated that in his humble opinion, Sir Robert Peel was (at least) one of the greatest, most talented, and fearlessly honest ministers that had ever lived in the tide of times."

Hamilton Blair Avarne, esq.
Edw. Boyd, esq. Resident.
E. Lennox Boyd, esq. Asst. Resident.
Charles Downes, esq.
Surgeon—F. Hale Thomson, esq. 45, Berners-street.
The Company, established by Act of Parliament, affords the most perfect security in a large paid-up Capital, and in the great success which has attended it since its commencement in 1834.

Its Annual Income being upwards of £22,000.

In 1841 the Company added a Bonus of 31 per cent. per annum on the sum insured to all policies of the participating class from the time they were effected.

The Bonus added to policies from March, 1834, to the 31st Dec. 1840, is as follows:—

Sum Assured.	Time Assured.	Sum added to Policy
£5,000	6 Yrs. 10 Months.	£663 6s. 8d.
5,000	6 Years	600 0 0
5,000	4 Years	400 0 0
5,000	2 Years	200 0 0

The Premiums nevertheless are on the most moderate scale, and only one-half need be paid for the first Five Years, where the Insurance is for Life.

Every information will be afforded on application to the Resident Directors, EDWARD BOYD, Esq. and E. LENNOX BOYD, Esq. of No. 5, Waterloo-place, FILL-MALL, London.

PROSPECTUS.

This Society is now completely registered, and prepared to transact all the usual business of Life Assurance.

It is based upon a principle which will combine the benefits of Mutual Assurance with the guarantee of a Substantial Capital of ONE MILLION STERLING.

Whilst perfect security is thus given, the number and character of the Shareholders (consisting of nearly 500 Members of the Legal Profession), will command a large amount of business, and consequent advantages will arise to the Assured.

Tables of Premiums have been prepared expressly for this Office, by F. G. P. NIXON, Esq. F.L.C., calculated on the nearest approximation to the real law of mortality.

These Tables will be found to afford peculiar encouragement to the assurance of young lives. They embrace participating and non-participating rates.

In the participating class, the Assured will be entitled to have four-fifths of the profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of addition to the amount assured, or by distribution of premiums, as the parties may elect. No deduction will be made from such profits for interest of capital, or for a guarantee fund.

The Premiums may be paid half-yearly or annually, or by a single payment.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable broker, or by writing to the Secretary.

The Directors meet on Thursdays, at Two o'clock; but Assurances may be effected on any day, by applying between the hours of Ten and Four, at the Office of the Society, where Prospectuses and all other requisite information may be obtained.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

The important advantages offered by the plan and constitution of the Life Department of this Society are—

That Insurers are protected by a large invested capital upon which there is no interest to pay, and for which no deduction of any kind is made, which enables the Directors to give the whole of the profits to Insuring Members.

That the profits are divided annually amongst all members of five years' standing, and applied towards reducing 2½ per cent. to the lowest possible rates of premiums, the amount for the years 1842, 1843, and 1844, being at the rate of 48l. per cent. and for the years 1845 and 1846, 50l. per cent.; that is, a policy taken out on or before the 26th of June, 1841, at an annual premium of 100l. will be charged 48l. at this year's premium, and it is expected that an equal statement will in future be annually made.

That persons insuring their own lives, or the lives of others, may become members.

That persons who are willing to forego participation in the profits, can insure at a lower rate than that charged to members.

The following table will shew the effect of the reduction of premium made by the society on members' policies that have been five years in force.

Age when Insured. Sum Insured. Annual Premium for first 5 years. Reduction made on the 5th Premium.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

GRAY & LIVERPOOL AND BURY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Construction of clause in Railway Act, providing for compensation to a particular person whose property was likely to be affected by the railway. Where the language of a clause in a private Act of Parliament is obscure, and the point involved is, whether a railway company is entitled to take possession of a particular property, and upon what terms the Court of Chancery will direct the point of construction to be tried at law.

This was a motion, by way of appeal from the decision of the Master of the Rolls, on the behalf of Messrs. John and William Gray, for an injunction to restrain the above railway company from proceeding in the construction of the railway over certain lands belonging to them. The plaintiffs were the owners of cotton mills and lands thereto adjoining, situate at Darcey Lever, in the county of Lancaster, and the company originally proposed to carry their line through the buildings and lands connected with the mills, so as to intersect them. This, however, was opposed by the plaintiffs before the parliamentary committee on the bill, and an agreement was come to which was embodied in the Railway Act. The protection of the plaintiffs was provided for by the 92nd clause of the Company's Act, after reciting that the plaintiffs were the owners and occupiers of certain mills, lands, and buildings, situate at Darcey Lever, through which the line of railway, as delineated on the plans and sections referred to in the Act passed, it was enacted, "that it should not be lawful for the company, without the consent of the plaintiffs, to construct the railway nearer to the said mill lands and buildings, or any of them, than the south-end of Lever-bridge." And the 93rd section enacted, "that the company should not, in, or during the construction or progress of the railway, or works, divert or obstruct, or in any way injure, the gates belonging to the plaintiffs, connected with their works at Darcey Lever, under a penalty of 750*l.* for each day of the occurrence of such diversion, obstruction, or injury, above the damage sustained, nor obstruct the carrying on of the plaintiffs' works under a like penalty."

The railway company, without asking the consent of the plaintiffs, had entered upon certain land belonging to the plaintiffs, adjoining to the land on which the mills and buildings connected therewith were situated, and had marked out a line running from west to east, from the south-east end of Lever-bridge, parallel to the line originally marked out in their plans, but removed from the line a distance exceeding the space between the south-east end of the bridge and that point of their original line which was nearest to the bridge. The plaintiffs contended that the company could not, without their consent, take any part of the land belonging to them situate at Darcey Lever, though not immediately connected with the mills, or essential to the carrying on their works. The company, on the other hand, insisted that if such was the right construction of the Act, the making of the railway at all would depend on the caprice of individuals, because the whole of the land between the deviation lines at this part of the railway belonged to the plaintiffs; that the primary object of the legislature was, that a line should at all events be constructed, but that it should not be constructed so as to interfere with the full enjoyment of the plaintiffs' mills; that the land proposed to be taken was separated from the mills by a public road, and was not necessary for carrying on the plaintiffs' works; that the construction put on the Act by the company was a reasonable one; whereas that contended for by the plaintiffs was repugnant to the general object of the Act, which intended to authorize the construction of a railway at all events.

Before the argument for the defendants was concluded, the Master of the Rolls said he did not doubt that the legislature and the parties themselves, when the Act was passed, contemplated a future agreement. The company had not attempted to come to any terms with the plaintiffs, but, standing on what they conceived to be their strict right, had entered upon the land, and marked out a line according to their own construction of the Act. And his lordship having suggested a compromise, the case stood over.

No compromise having been effected, the Master of the Rolls gave judgment, and remarked on the hardship to which individuals were sometimes exposed by the imperial power exercised by Parliament in taking away from their private property, at a price, and for an object in which they had no voice. By the exercise of this power they were deprived of that to which they had, perhaps, attached their fortunes, and in the enjoyment of which they felt the greatest interest, and by the loss or violation of which their situation in life might be entirely altered. The exercise of this imperial power was solicited only because it would contribute so much to the public good as to make it for the general benefit that the rights of private property should be violated. And Parliament were in all cases bound to consider whether the public good did make it necessary to violate private property. This Court had always looked on undertakings of this sort on these principles; and unless the parties obtaining these powers from Parliament were able to show that they could complete the whole of the undertaking, they had not been allowed to execute any part of it. The hardship on individuals had of late been the subject of more anxious consideration, probably owing to the frequency and the vastness of the works which had occasioned that consideration. It was a rule, that where property did not possess any peculiar value, Parliament would apply that which had become an ordinary rule in such cases. But if the property was valuable, and to which the owner might be considered to be particularly attached, Parliament would encourage agreements between the parties, if willing to come into them. And if that could not be done immediately, would refer the parties to an agreement to be entered into between themselves at a future time, and such, it appeared to his lordship, had been the case here. In the last year certain parties were soliciting Parliament for leave to make a railway which passed through lands occupied by the plaintiffs in this cause. The plaintiffs conceived that the property was of peculiar value, which was not to be determined in the mode adopted in ordinary cases, and they opposed the bill. It appeared from the evidence that the opposition was successful, and that unless some arrangement could have been entered into the bill would not have passed. And in that state of things an attempt was made for a compromise and agreement. Unhappily for all parties that was not successful; possibly both parties were in such a state of mind that they could not come to any agreement after communicating with each other. After having failed to come to an agreement or any terms specified at that time, this clause was, by consent, inserted in the Act. Now the clause was this; it recited that John Gray and Wm. Gray were the owners and occupiers of certain mills, lands, and buildings, situate at Darcey Lever, through which the line of railway, as delineated on the plans and sections, passed; and it enacted that it should not be lawful for the company, without the consent of John and William Gray, or the owner and owners for the time being, of the said mills, lands, and buildings to construct the railway nearer to the said mills, lands, and buildings, or any of them than the south-east end of Lever-bridge, delineated on the said plans, and there-in marked "One." The company were not to construct the railway nearer to the mills, lands, and buildings, not nearer to any specified part thereof, but not nearer to the mills, lands, and buildings than the east end of the Lever-bridge. Now the collective description or names, mills, lands, and buildings, included the whole of the premises of which John and William Gray were the owners and occupiers. But they were the owners and occupiers of the whole of the property in question. The words themselves did not seem to be attended with difficulty. The Master Gray contended that the company must not come nearer to the estate, that is, to any part of it, without their consent, than the south-east end of Lever-bridge. They must stop there. But it was contended that that could not be the construction, and the real question between the parties was, whether there was anything to overcome the natural construction of these words. It was said that this construction would make the construction of the railway depend on the will of these individuals, and that could not be, because it was intended that a railway should be constructed. But it was to be constructed subject to the provisions of the Act, including, amongst others, this clause. It was said that a restricted meaning must be given to the words "mills, lands, and buildings." Why? It was said they must mean either those employed in the factory, or those which were, strictly, cut by the original line of railway; that some or other restrictive meaning must be given to them. But his lordship did not find anything in the Act to warrant that construction. And he thought it was intended, that, provided an agreement could be made, the railway should be constructed but not otherwise. Another argument was, that supposing there must be a railway, it was to be constructed on a parallel line, and at a certain distance from the original line; but there was nothing in the Act to show that. If any one of these constructions had been meant, it might have been clearly expressed. There would have been no difficulty in expressing any one of them. And if any one of them was the meaning of the parties, why was it not clearly stated? The observations of Lord Cottenham bore upon this subject, and he must consider his opinion of great weight, because he never had shown the least disposition to press hard the construction of these Acts against railway companies. On the contrary, he had always shown a disposition to uphold them in the possession of the powers given to them by Parliament. Lord Cottenham said that "you must look to the agreement between the parties, and not to the consequences of it." So here there might be very exorbitant terms demanded, but he had nothing to do with that. But taking the words of the clause as the expression of the agreement between the parties, he thought it was that they should not enter upon the lands, coming nearer than the south-east end of the bridge. He thought the agreement could not be altered without the aid of Parliament. He did not see how he could put a construction on the Act that these persons should be compelled to give up their land for the price offered. He regretted the course the parties had taken, and he could not but think that if there had been a communication with a sincere view to an agreement after the Act passed, it might have been effected. It happened in this case that these gentlemen possessed the whole track of land between the utmost boundaries of deviation; and it was a peculiarity here, that by their refusal to come to an agreement they would stop the construction of the railway. But was that not known to the parties at the time the clause was agreed to? Was it not then seen that if there should be no agreement there could be no railway? His lordship thought it was the duty of the company, as to all those things which depended on agreement, to have settled them before they began to cut. And he was of opinion, that upon the true construction of the clause in question, the railway company could not make the railway through the plaintiffs' land except by agreement with the plaintiffs, and that, therefore, he must grant the injunction.

From that order the defendants, the Railway Company, appealed to the Lord Chancellor, and the arguments turned upon the construction of the clause, and the apparent consistency of its literal construction with the intention of the legislature to grant powers to the company to make a railway.

The Solicitor-General, Roll, and R. Palmer, for the appeal.

Bethell, James Parker and Bacon, supported the injunction.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, after hearing the arguments, directed an action to be brought by the plaintiffs against the company, that the legal construction of the clause might be tried in a court of law.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

HARRIS v. DAVISON.

Judgment—Sec. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110—Annuity—Leasehold estates.

A judgment had been registered against a party entitled to an annuity, which was secured by a covenant and an assignment of certain leaseholds.—Held, that the judgment operated as a charge upon the annuity and the interest of the annuitant in the leaseholds, under the 13th section of the above statute.

By an indenture bearing date the 26th May, 1835, for certain considerations therein stated, William Davison covenanted with one Jane Lock, that he the said William Davison should pay unto the said Jane Lock, during her natural life, an annuity of 20*l.* by quarterly payments; the first payment thereof was to commence on the 24th day of June then next. And it was thereby further witnessed, that for the considerations therein mentioned, he the said W. Davison did bargain, sell, and assign unto the said Jane Lock, certain leasehold property therein mentioned, to hold the same unto the said Jane Lock for the term of eighty-eight years, granted by an indenture therein mentioned, upon trust, for securing to her the payment of the said annuity, and the performance of the covenants on the part of the said W. Davison therein contained. The indenture contained also certain powers, in case the said annuity falling into arrear, to sell the leaseholds and purchase a government annuity of 20l. out of the moneys arising from such sale. On the 23rd April, 1839, a judgment at law for 41l. was, by the said John Harris, entered up against Jane Lock, and the same was signed and entered up of record in the Court of Common Pleas, and registered.

John Harris filed his amended bill in June, 1842, praying that it might be declared that the judgment so obtained by the plaintiff operated as a charge upon the said annuity, and the arrears thereof, and the estate and interest of the said Jane Lock, in the aforesaid hereditaments and premises comprised in the aforesaid indenture of the 26th May, 1835, for the payment thereof, and for an account and sale.

Bethell and Wilcock for the plaintiff.

Campbell, for the defendant, Jane Lock, contended that the annuity was not within the terms of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. The annuity was a mere personal annuity secured by a covenant with an assignment of the leasehold, for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to sell and buy a government annuity; but that it formed no interest in land. The first question was, whether it was within the scope of the 11th section, which empowered the sheriff to deliver execution of "all such lands, tenements, rectories, tithes, and hereditaments, including lands and hereditaments of copyhold or customary tenure as the person against whom execution is so issued, or any person in trust for him, shall have been seised or possessed," &c. This annuity does not fall in with any of these; it is more like a rent to which distress is incident; and no power of distress is given here. Nothing is included in the Act that is not expressed, and everything therein mentioned is freehold. "Leaseholds" are not expressed therein. "Copyholds" would not have been included, unless they had been actually mentioned. The recital of the Act expresses the intention of the Legislature. "Whereas, it is expedient to give judgment creditors more effectual remedies against the real and personal estate of their debtors than they possess under the existing law." This is worked out by the 16th sec. as to eligibility, by sec. 12 as to money, and by sec. 13 as to realty. Now, under the old law, the sheriff could not have sold the annuity, it being a chose in action. This obligation did not pass by the mere delivery of the deed, and the intention of the 12th sec. was to affect such obligations by execution only, and not by judgment. Judgment was intended to bind lands; but personality was only to be affected by execution. The words in sec. 12 are the same as those made use of in the Statute of Frauds, with the addition of "any estate or interest whatever," which means, however, no more than "in any manner or wise," as in the Statute of Frauds. The words in the last mentioned statute have received their judicial meaning in the case of Scott v. Scholey (8 East, 467), where it was determined that an equitable interest in a term could not be taken in execution, which construction must be held to extend to this Act. This interest is certainly of an anomalous character, but it is not included in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I think it is. In the first place, the words in sec. 13 are much the same as those in sec. 11. And the statute being remedial, ought to receive a liberal construction, because the main purport is to give an effectual remedy against the property in compensation for depriving the creditor of his power of screwing out his debt by means of personal constraint. The intention is not the punishment of the debtor, but the payment of the debt. The language of the 13th sec. is even more copious than that of the 11th, and its effect is, that a judgment already entered operates as a charge upon all lands, tenements, rectories, advowsons, tithes, rents, and hereditaments, including lands and hereditaments of copyhold or customary tenure. Indeed, I cannot conceive a set of words more expressly framed to set forth lands of any description, though it may be a question whether lands held in ancient demesne are comprehended. The Act contemplates that recourse may be had to a Court of Equity to perfect the charge, for it says, "every judgment creditor shall have such and the same remedies in a Court of Equity against the hereditaments" (that is, the word "hereditaments" describing every species of property) "so charged by virtue of this Act, or any part thereof, as he would be entitled to in case the person against whom such judgment would have been so entered had power to charge the same hereditaments, and had by writing under his hand agreed to charge the same with the amount of such judgment debt and interest thereon." Now was it not competent for Jane Lock, by writing, to constitute herself a trustee of the term assigned in trust for the purpose of procuring payment? Was it not such an interest in land as she had power to charge? Doubtless she might, by an agreement in writing, have given the plaintiff the benefit of such power; and a judgment was obtained in the same manner, and the plaintiff is entitled to his relief by means of carrying the trust into execution for the purpose of paying the amount due.

ROLLS COURT.

Friday, May 8.

BIDDULPH v. LORD CAMOYS.

Practice—New orders—Lunatic—Guardian—Husband and wife.

A lunatic, not so found by inquisition, and his wife, residing out of the jurisdiction, were served with subpoena to appear and answer in a suit in which the lunatic was interested in right of his wife: on motion for leave to enter an appearance for them, and that the solicitor appearing for the wife should be appointed guardian to the lunatic, the Court required an affidavit that the husband and wife had the same interest.

Cooke moved for leave to enter an appearance in this suit, for Edward Henry Dayrell and Lucy his wife, who are residing out of the jurisdiction of the Court. On the 23rd of January last, an order was made, directing the service of a subpoena to appear and answer under the 32nd Order of May, there being an affidavit that the lunatic was a necessary party to the suit, and the Court observing that such an order could do no harm, as no farther step could be taken without a fresh application. On the 10th March the subpoena was accordingly served, the requisites of the order of the 23rd of January (see 6 Law T. 429) being complied with. Notice of motion to appoint a solicitor, under the 32nd Order of May, guardian of the lunatic was also given for this day; and it was asked to allow the appearance to be entered in the terms of the motion, and that the solicitor appearing for the wife should be the guardian.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Does it appear that the husband and wife have the same interest?

Cooke.—Yes, it is stated in the bill.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—That won't do; there must be an affidavit that the husband has no interest adverse to the wife.

Cooke.—An affidavit to that effect shall be produced.

ELDERTON v. LACK.

Practice—Enlarging publication.

Interrogatories had been prepared and left with the examiner on the 24th of April, and the day for passing publication was the 2nd of May; the Master refused to enlarge publication to allow time to take the evidence, but a month was allowed for that purpose, on payment of costs.

Elderton, on the part of the plaintiff, in this case, on the 30th of April last, moved to enlarge publication till the 1st of August next, and the motion was allowed to stand over till this day, that an application might be made to the Master, a special application not being necessary. The Master refused, and the motion was now renewed. Instructions had been given on the 10th of March last for preparing interrogatories, which it was sworn were left with the examiner on the 24th of April. But publication being to pass in due course on the 2nd inst. enlargement became necessary.

Lee (with him Heathfield).—The replication in this case, which is a cross cause (there being another cause in Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce's Court) was filed on the 13th of March, 1845; and though they could have examined witnesses in the other cause, the interrogatories are not brought in here till the 24th of April. The opposition to the motion is entirely on account of the delay in preparing the interrogatories. (Pascall v. Scott, 1 Phil. 110; Ward v. Eyles, Mosely, 377.) We do not wish to shut out the evidence. Let them pay the costs, and enlarge till the second day of next Term.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Mr. Lee's view is just. You, Mr. Elderton, must pay the costs, and let publication be enlarged for a month. Then take any step you think right.

WILES v. COOPER.

Practice—New order—Dismissal of bill—Time—Easter vacation—Replication.

The times of vacation are to be reckoned in the computation of the times allowed for filing replications, except in cases coming under the directions of the 41st article of the 16th Order, and the 4th article of the 14th Order applies to filing replications in such cases only.

In this case the answer was filed on the 14th of February, and became sufficient on the 28th of March; and the time for filing a replication, therefore, by the 37th article of the 16th Order, expired on the 25th of April. No replication was filed within the time, and on the 27th of April a notice of motion to dismiss for want of prosecution was served on the plaintiff, which now came on to be heard. Meantime, however, but after the 25th, the plaintiff obtained an order to amend.

Miller, for the motion, said it was contended by the other side that the Easter vacation intervening, the time from the 4th to the 14th of April was not to be reckoned; but by the 4th article of the 16th Order, that was only so in cases coming under the 41st article of the 16th Order.

Shebbeare, contra, admitted that if the Easter vacation was to be reckoned, the plaintiff was late; but he contended that the 41st article of the 16th Order only applied to the second clause of the 4th article of the 14th Order. The motion to dismiss in that case is too soon, and we are in time in obtaining the order to amend.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Easter vacation is not excluded from the time for replications generally, but only in the cases coming under the directions of the 41st article of the 16th Order, both clauses of the former article being qualified by the final words. There will be no order, therefore, but that the plaintiff pay the costs.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Friday, May 22.

TANNER v. MOORE.

Pleading—Assumpsit—Executed or executory—Consideration.

A declaration in assumpsit stated that, in consideration of J. T. (the plaintiff's testator) agreeing to stay proceedings against J. B. M. if J. B. M. should die in his father's lifetime, the defendant promised, within six months after the father's death, to pay to the plaintiff's testator 165l. The agreement, given in evidence, was in this form: "I, &c. (the defendant) in consideration of natural love and affection, and in consideration of J. T. having agreed to stay all further proceedings at law against J. B. M. if J. B. M. shall die in the lifetime of his father, will, within six months after his father's death, pay to the said J. T. 165l." Held, that this agreement was founded upon a continuing consideration, and that, therefore, it supported the declaration.

Assumpsit, by plaintiff, as executor of John Tanner. The declaration stated, that in consideration of John Tanner agreeing to stay an action, and all proceedings at law against one John Bailey Moore, the defendant promised and agreed, that if the said John B. Moore should die in the lifetime of his father, he, the defendant, would, within six calendar months after the death of the father of the said J. B. M. pay to the said John Tanner the sum of 165l. It then alleged the death of the said J. B. M. in the lifetime of his father, the death of the father, and that, although more than six months had elapsed from the death of the father, yet the defendant had not paid the said sum of 165l. either to the said John Tanner in his lifetime, or to the plaintiff as executor.

Plea—Non assumpsit.

At the trial the following agreement was given in evidence by the plaintiff:—"Tanner v. Moore.—I, the undersigned Wm. B. Moore, the attorney and brother for the above defendant, in consideration of natural love and affection, and in consideration of the plaintiff's having agreed to stay all further proceedings at law against him, hereby promise and agree, that if the said John B. Moore shall die in the lifetime of his father, I will, within six months after the death of his father, pay to the said plaintiff 165l." A verdict was found for the plaintiff, leave being reserved to move to enter a nonsuit.

Crowder, Q. C. in a former Term obtained a rule accordingly; against which Greenwood, in last Easter Term (Tuesday, May 5), shewed cause.—The consideration stated in this declaration is proved. The agreement shews a continuing consideration, which may be alleged as either executed or executory. (Payne v. Wilson, 7 B. & C. 423.) An agreement to stay proceedings perpetuum is not a good consideration for a promise; but an agreement to stay generally, or for a reasonable time, is. (Com. Dig. Action on the Case on Assumpsit, B. 1, 12, and cases there cited, where it is said that indefinite forbearance shall be intended perpetual forbearance.) Now, this was an agreement to stay proceedings at all events until six months after the death of the father, and the term "having agreed" may be construed to mean "having agreed, agreeing, and still continuing to agree," as the word αποδεχόμενος is translated in the note to Clarke's Homer (Iliad 1); it is, therefore, such an agreement as will support this declaration. (Butcher v. Stewart, 11 M. & W. 857; Thornton v. Jenyns, 1 Man. & G. 166.)

Crowder, Q. C. and Merivale, contra.—This declaration is founded upon an executory consideration, otherwise it would be bad for want of an averment of request. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Suppose this case: that in consideration of the plaintiff having agreed to pay a weekly sum for a long time, the defendant promised to pay a round sum on a certain event, would it be necessary to allege that consideration to be "on request?" Yes. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Is it not a continuing consideration? No; the agreement is the consideration; that is complete when made, though the performance may be incomplete. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Then you contend that you need not aver performance? Certainly; the usual allegation of mutual promises contains no averment of the performance. [PATTON, J.—The old form of alleging mutual promises was in the past tense.] Yes; "in consideration that A B, at the request of C D, had promised." The having agreed to release a third person is no consideration; if the agreement had been in consideration of staying proceedings, instead of in consideration of a past agreement to stay, it would have been otherwise. If an executed consideration is spent, it is no consideration for a future promise. That is the rule to be collected from all the cases cited, and especially Thornton v. Jennings (1 M. & G. 166); but when the promise is one which the law will imply from the consideration, as that a tenant will cultivate in a husbandlike manner, a past consideration is sufficient; but even then it must be alleged on request. [Lord DENMAN, C.J. referred to Shenton v. James (5 Q. B. 199), and Patterson, J. to Goodman v. Chase, 1 B. & Ald. 207.] All the cases are collected in a note to Osborne v. Rogers (1 Wm. Saund. 264). But here the promise is not one which would be implied by law from the consideration. (Roscorla v. Thomas, 3 Q. B. 234.) The passage in Com. Dig. is no authority for the plaintiff; in Butcher v. Stewart (11 M. & W. 857), the words were, "having released,"—not, "having agreed to release;" and the release would be a continuing consideration, though an agreement to release is not. Payne v. Wilson; Wain v. Warblers (5 East, 10), and Saunders v. Wakefield (4 B. & A. 595), are also quite distinguishable from the present case. (Raikes v. Todd, 6 Ad. & E. 846.) Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

DENMAN, C. J.—In this case the declaration ran that in consideration of the plaintiff agreeing to stay proceedings in an action on a note, the defendant promised to pay part in a short time. The written guarantee that was produced, appeared to be in consideration of the plaintiff having agreed to stay the proceedings, and a rule for a nonsuit was obtained on that ground. The case of Roscorla v. Thomas (3 Q. B. 234), was strongly relied on. The declaration ran thus: "In consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, had bought of defendant a certain horse, the defendant promised the plaintiff that the horse was sound, &c., and we held that the consideration being executed would not, though laid with a request, support even an express promise, if, as in that case, it were one which would not be implied by law. The case of Lenon v. James (5 Q. B. 199) was also cited; but there the question was whether the instrument was a promissory note, which depended upon this, whether the money written on it was payable at all events; and we thought that the consideration really was that which was stated on the face of the instrument, and that it was not necessarily a continuing agreement. Butcher v. Stewart (11 M. & W. 857) was also cited. That case goes further than the present, for there the declaration ran "in consideration that the plaintiff would procure the release of the said Robert Stewart out of custody under the said writ the defendant promised;" and the agreement proved was in "consideration of your having released," but the Court thought that it might be construed as a prospective engagement, and might be read; "I hereby engage, &c. in consideration of your having thus released." Here the declaration says "in consideration of the plaintiff agreeing to stay." Now that expression necessarily implies a continuing agreement till the action is stayed. The words of the instrument, "having agreed," necessarily imply the same; for it would be absurd to suppose the defendant bound himself to pay the money in consideration of the plaintiff merely having, at a past time, agreed to stay the proceedings. Unless the agreement was continuing at the time of the insertion of the words, and until the action was actually stayed, any other construction would not give the right meaning of fixed expressions; and our opinion, therefore, in this case is, that the rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

FANCOURT v. THORN.

Gray moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that the following instrument, stamped with a note-stamp, ought also to have been stamped either as an equitable mortgage or agreement:—"On demand I promise to pay, or order, the sum of £ ; and I have lodged with the said , the counterparts of leases signed by , for ground-rent, let by me to them respectively as a collateral security." He cited Wise v. Charlton (4 Ad. & Ell. 786); Chitty on Bills, and Byles on Bills; Coote's Law of Mortgage, 200; Robertson v. Showler (14 L. J. N. S. Exch. 120; 13 M. & W. 609); Powell v. Edmunds (12 East, 16); Wharton v. Walton (14 L. J. N. S. Q. B.). Cur. adv. vult.

On Monday following, the Court granted a Rule nisi; cause to be shewn this Term.

May 22 and 26.

LOWE v. PENN.

Patent.—Steam propellers.

Is an invention for propelling vessels new, which differs from those formerly known and used only in the reduction of a complete screw to an uncertain aliquot part or fraction?

This case, after having stood over for a long time pending negotiations, was argued upon the first day of this Term.

Jervis, Q. C. Byles, Serjt. and M. Smith were heard against the rule, and Martin, Q. C. and Peacock in support.

The arguments were purely of a scientific nature, and constant reference was made to the models.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—This was an action for infringing a patent. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff, a motion has been made for a new trial, partly on the ground that there was no infringement of the patent by the defendant, but also and principally that the patent itself is void, because the alleged invention is not new. That invention is, by the specification and the description of the drawings, both of which are referred to for the purpose, stated to consist in a mode of propelling vessels by means of one or more curved blades, set or fixed on a revolving shaft below the water line of the vessel, and running from stem to stern of the vessel; and it is added, that each of the curved blades is a portion of a curve, which, if continued, would produce a screw. On behalf of the plaintiff it was not contended that every part of it was new; but the invention consists in a new combination of those parts, the essential part of that invention being that the blades must be curved, and each a portion of a curve which, if continued, would produce a screw. First, as to the point of infringement, we think it to be indisputably clear that most of the component parts had been in use or known before the date of the plaintiff's patent. This was established by proof of the earlier patents of Shorter, Trevethick, and Commereau. In these, or some of them, the position of the machine, that is to say, the aperture being in the dead wood, the direction of the shaft, with reference to the keel and stuffing-box and curved blades, was the same; except, indeed, that those curved blades did not form each a portion of a curve, which if continued would produce a screw. That, at least, was not shewn; and that, as we have already observed, is the characteristic distinction of the alleged invention of the plaintiff, on which reliance is mainly placed. The question, therefore, as to the infringement comes shortly to this; whether, in the defendant's machine, curved blades of that particular description have been used or not? because, if they be not curved, but plain or flat blades, it is obvious that by no number of revolutions would they, or by any possibility could they, produce a screw. We are quite aware that there was evidence that the blades in the defendant's machine were curved; but the models which were produced before the jury, and the blades, which were pronounced to be curved, have been exhibited to us, and upon actual, and we may add, a most attentive consideration, we were wholly unable to discover the slightest tendency to curvature, or that the blades were otherwise than perfectly flat, like the plates of a smoke-jack; a specimen of which was also exhibited. Moreover, it does seem to us highly improbable that the defendant, who was contending and attempting to prove that he had not infringed the patent, should produce models of such a shape as necessarily to destroy the case which he was attempting to set up. On the other point, however, whether the alleged invention be new, some of the observations already made have a material bearing. It appears in the patents of Trevethick and Commereau already referred to, a screw of one or more turns was in use, and in the description of his drawing to which reference is made by the plaintiff, in support of his specification, the use of a complete screw is mentioned. Would, then, the reduction of a complete screw to an uncertain aliquot part or fraction of it be an invention? We say uncertain, because the precise section or portion of a screw which is to produce the desired effect is not defined. "One or more curved blades" is the language of the specification; without any attempt to define, or even to approximate to the precise number which is best for use. In the case of Heath v. Unwin (13 M. & W.) cited at the bar, the patent was for an improved manufacture of steel by the use of a metallic substance, called carbonate of manganese in that stage, and that other materials mentioned were to be used along with from one to three per cent. of their weight of carbonate of manganese. The defendant had, by the use of other materials, to him unexpectedly produced that substance, but in a less quantity than one per cent. of weight of the steel in the crucible. That was so found by the jury, and the Court referred to the finding in their judgment; and if that be material, it seems to shew the quantity of carbonate of manganese to be used in the process of that patent is material also. In the present case, as has been observed, there is no attempt to specify the precise amount to be subtractable from a complete screw that had been before in use. It does not appear this latter point was pressed at the trial (I am not quite sure that it was not),—if indeed it was presented at all. It seems, however, to raise sufficient doubt to require the distinction to be raised, and to furnish a reason for the case undergoing a revision; in addition to that already mentioned as to the proof not being satisfactory to shew an infringement of the patent, even if it be valid in point of law. Upon the whole, we are of opinion, that the rule must be made absolute for a new trial.

REG. v. NEWTON FERRARS.

Order of removal.—Jurisdiction.—Certiorari.

An order of removal purported to remove the paupers from Stoke Damerel, in the county of Devon, and to be made by two justices in and for the borough of Devonport, not shewing in any way that Stoke Damerel was within their jurisdiction: Held, upon certiorari, that the order of removal was bad.

A judge's order for a writ of certiorari to remove an order of Sessions confirming an order of removal, may be granted ex parte in the first instance, though a case has not been granted, and the writ issue in vacation.

Re v. Chipping Sodbury (3 N. & M. 164) is not correct.

The Sessions had, on appeal, confirmed an order for the removal of a pauper, and had refused a case for the opinion of this Court thereon. On the first day of the vacation after the third Term from the day of confirming the order, Williams, J. granted a fiat absolute in the first instance, for a writ of certiorari to remove into this court the order of Sessions and the original order of removal. Subsequently a rule nisi for quashing both orders was obtained, against which cause was now shewn by Greenwood and Merivale.—First. The fiat for the writ of certiorari ought to have been granted nisi only, as no case had been granted by the Sessions, and it was to issue in vacation. R. v. Chipping Sodbury (3 N. & M. 104; Corner's Practice). It is admitted that in Archbold's Practice, p. 166, a different rule is laid down, but the reasonable practice is that suggested now. If an opportunity for shewing cause had been given, it would have been objected that notice had not been given to the justices who made the original order. This objection is in time, because the rule nisi to quash was the first notice of the certiorari which the respondents had. It is objected that the order of Sessions is bad, because it purports to confirm an order made by two magistrates of the borough of Devonport, for the removal of a pauper from "the parish of Stoke Damerel, in the county of Devon," and does not shew that the parish of Stoke Damerel is within the borough of Devonport. If this objection be good, an order of Sessions must shew everything that gives jurisdiction; but if the original order be sufficiently identified, the Court will presume the rest.

Rowe, contra.—The fiat for the certiorari has properly issued. The rule is, that the judge in Term or out of Term must exercise his discretion as to whether or not an opportunity shall be given for shewing cause against a rule for a certiorari. If there was an irregularity, the proper mode of objecting is by a distinct rule for quashing quia improvide emanavit.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We will not trouble you further upon that point. If the case of R. v. Chipping Sodbury has been correctly reported, it was wrongly decided.

Rowe.—Thirdly, the order of Sessions is bad. The Court will, in such an instrument, presume every thing that is not manifestly contradicted or repugnant. Here the order of Sessions describes the original order as one made by justices of Devonport, who remove from a parish in the county of Devon. That is an obvious anomaly.

By the COURT.—That is our opinion.

Rule absolute. (a)

REG. v. THE CHURCHWARDENS OF ST. MARY, LAMBETH.

Church building Acts.—Rates.

Under the 58 Geo. 3, c. 45, and 58 Geo. 3, c. 134, rates may be imposed for the payment of interest upon loans under these Acts, although the aggregate amount of the previous rates exceeds five shillings in the pound.

Demurrer to the return to a mandamus to the churchwardens of St. Mary, Lambeth, to make a rate in the nature of a church-rate under 58 Geo. 3, c. 45, and 59 Geo. 3, c. 134, to pay interest due upon loans under these Acts. The return set out the loans between 1822 and 1826, and a number of successive rates subsequently made, and then alleged, in the words of sec. 25 of the latter Act, that these rates amounted to more than five shillings in the pound upon the annual value of the property in the parish. It appeared that this course had been rendered necessary, because the magistrates had, since 1842, refused to enforce the rates actually made, because of the supposed effect of this section. The Court called on Lush to support the return, but without hearing the other side.

The COURT gave judgment, that the clause in question had no such meaning; and that it did even refer to money lent, as this was, under the previous

(a) The original order was also objected to as not shewing jurisdiction. The words were: "being two of her Majesty's justices of the peace, having jurisdiction within and for the borough of Devonport. The Court gave no decision upon this point."

Act for building a church; for the payment of which, and interest thereon (when borrowed at interest), the statute gave the church-rates as a security.

Judgment for the demurrer.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF SURREY.
Costs—Parish officers.

There is no absolute rule binding the Court to give costs to the successful party, although it is not usual to do so where the subsequent proceedings have arisen from the mistake of the judge or inferior court. Upon appeal, the Sessions had confirmed the order upon a frivolous objection to the notice of appeal; and a rule nisi for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear the appeal was subsequently obtained. The parish officers of the respondent parish instructed counsel to oppose the rule; but it was made absolute, and the appeal was subsequently heard and the order quashed. Held, that the appellants were entitled to move the Court calling upon the parish officers to pay the costs of the mandamus; and, under the circumstances, the Court made the rule absolute.

Baldwin shewed cause against a rule calling on the parish officers of Oxley to pay the costs of an application for a mandamus, to enter continuances and hear an appeal. (See the facts supra, vol. 6.) The parish officers had no doubt opposed the rule for a mandamus in vain, and the justices did not appear. [Lord DENMAN, C. J. Why should they not pay the costs?] They only supported the decision of a competent Court in their favour, and ought not to pay costs. It is like a rule for a new trial for misdirection. Under 1 Wm. 4. c. 21, s. 6, also, the costs are discretionary with the Court, and the Court will not inflict them in cases of this kind. (Reg. v. The Sheriff of Middlesex, 5 Q. B. 365.)

Pashley, in support of the rule.—There are two other decisions which bear upon this question. In Reg. v. Justices of West Riding (6 Q. B. 1), the Court did not doubt their power to give costs; and so also in Reg. v. Newbury (1 Q. B. 751); which last case shows that a substantive motion is the proper course. If ever there was a case in which costs ought to be inflicted, it is this, where the objection was of a most frivolous and absurd character. Yet not only did the parish officers appear, but the rule was enlarged from one Term to another. Inflicting costs will put a wholesome restraint upon frivolous objections at Sessions.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—There is a general rule, that costs of intermediate proceedings follow the event of the cause; but there is also a general rule in the opposite direction, that costs are not granted where the mistake has been the mistake of the Court. For my part, I do not think that we are at liberty to give up any portion of our jurisdiction; and although the practice should be certain, still we are not bound to observe either of these rules in every case. I think this was a most frivolous objection, and one which the justices should not have allowed. Then the parties think proper to defend and endeavour to keep possession of what they had thus gained. I think, in the exercise of our discretion, it is a most proper case for granting costs against them.

PATTESON, J.—The general rule is, that costs go to the successful party, and ought so to do. There may be a strong case for an exception, but this is nothing of the kind. Here the officers contested the rule of their own accord. It is said, that it is like a verdict being set aside for misdirection, but it is to be recollected that not in every case of a mistake by the judge or Court are costs withheld, for the Court of Error gives costs. So here the Sessions were no doubt wrong, but costs ought to be given.

WILLIAMS, J.—The resistance to the mandamus was at all events an unnecessary act, for if proper attention had been directed to the objection, the officers must have seen that there was nothing in it.

Rule absolute.

GORDON v. LAURIE.

Arrest—Duty of officer—32 Geo. 2, c. 28.

It is the duty of a sheriff's officer, under 32 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 1, expressly to request his prisoner to nominate some convenient place to which he may be taken.

M. Chambers, Q.C. moved to set aside the verdict, and enter a nonsuit for a new trial. It was an action under 32 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 1, for conveying the plaintiff to goal within twenty-four hours, without his consent, though he did not refuse to be carried to some other convenient house. The facts were proved mainly by the plaintiff's broker. It appeared he was arrested on January 29th, in the morning, and at his own request was taken to the officer's house or office, while some negotiation was going on with the plaintiff in the action. In the evening he asked the officer to allow him to remain there until he could arrange matters. The officer said he must go, as they were going to close the house. The plaintiff then asked if there was any private house or sponging-house, and was told they were all given up. The plaintiff wrote a letter while there, to the execution creditor, in which he said, "If you will not arrange, I intend to go to Whitecross-street Prison." Something also passed about the arrest being illegal, and heavy damages. It was left to the jury to say whether he went to prison for his own purposes; and that if he was misinformed as to his rights, he did not go voluntarily. To this it was objected, that the officer was not to be liable in this action for mere misinformation; and that also it appeared clear that the statute had been complied with; a place had been nominated by the plaintiff, but it was not fit or convenient. He was bound to know his legal rights, and the officer was not bound to ask him where he would go. (Simpson v. Renton, 5 B. & Ad. 35; Dewhurst v. Pearson, 1 C. & M. 366; Pitt v. Middlesex (sheriff), 4 M. & P. 726, 1 D. P. C. 201, were referred to.)

PATTESON, J.—I think all was rightly left to the jury by the Lord Chief Justice, according to the law as laid down in Simpson v. Renton (5 B. & Ad. 35), which expressly decided that it is the duty of the officer to request him to nominate some place. Here this was not done. The plaintiff saying "May I not be taken to some sponging-house?" is not nominating it within the Act. The question as to his voluntarily going was left to the jury, and decided in the negative. In Silk v. Humphrey (4 Ad. & E. 960), the facts stated in the plea were held to be equivalent to a refusal.

WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The rule that a person is bound to know his legal rights cannot possibly apply here. It has been expressly decided that the officer must inform him and put the question. To these cases we adhere.

GODCHILD v. PRITCHARD.

Practice—Summons at chambers.

An application at chambers refused for insufficient materials cannot be made upon amended materials, either at chambers or to the Court.

An application for particulars must be upon affidavit that none or insufficient particulars have been delivered.

Miller moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiff to give particulars.—The declaration contained counts for work and labour, money paid, and account stated. It appeared that he had applied to Williams, J. at chambers, but without any affidavit that particulars had not been delivered. It was then asserted that particulars had been delivered, and the summons was dismissed. A second summons was then taken out, and an affidavit produced, and Williams, J. refused it, because they did not come right at first. An affidavit was now produced. [PATTESON, J.—You have been a second time at chambers.]

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—You ought to have gone properly prepared at first. We cannot interfere now.

PATTESON, J.—It is a well-understood practice that such an application ought to be accompanied by an affidavit.

Rule refused.

ROBINSON v. HAWKESFORD.

There is no time fixed by law within which a cheque must be presented so as to charge the drawer, where no loss or damage has been sustained by him from the delay.

This was a special case, in which the simple point raised was whether the drawer of a cheque was discharged from his liability upon the cheque by the delay of a fortnight in the presentment, all other circumstances remaining the same, and he having suffered no injury by the delay. The Court called upon Cooking, on behalf of the defendant.—He cited Alexander v. Burchfield (8 Sc. N. R. 555); Moule v. Brown (4 B. N. C. 266); Serie v. Norton (2 M. & R.).

Atherton, contra, was not heard.

By the COURT.—Where any loss may have occurred from the delay, then we may consider the question as stated here; but upon the bare question now argued, we have no doubt whatever that a delay in the presentment does not discharge the drawer of the cheque.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

SPRINGETT v. MORRELL.

Pleading—Reply.

Replevin—Avovery for rent in arrear.

Pleas in bar—First, as to 14s. 6d. parcel of the rent—viens in arrears, concluding to the country; secondly, as to 22l. 6s. the residue of the said rent, a tender before the distress.—Verification.

Demurrer, assigning for cause that the pleas in bar improperly divided the avowry, which only shewed one answer to the grievances complained of by the declaration, and could not be divided in the manner attempted; that each of the pleas by itself raised an immaterial issue, and was no answer to any part of the avowry, and that two issues were tendered where only one was necessary.

Aspinwall, for the demurrer, was heard, and the Court then put it to Bramwell, contra, whether he would amend, which he elected to do, the Court having expressed a strong opinion.

Authorities cited:—Voisin v. Jenkin (3 A. & E.); John v. Jenkin (1 C. & M.); Comm. Dig. tit. Pleading, K. 30; Cliff's Entries; Chitty on Pleading.

Amendment accordingly.

Note.—In this case the mode of pleading adopted, and which the Court seemed to think bail, was in the form given by Mr. Chitty, who supports it by a reference to Comyn's Digest, and also to Cliff's Entries, where the same form is to be found.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF HOLME.

Settlement by apprenticeship—Notice of binding, what sufficient under 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 2.—What examinations to be sent with order of removal. A notice of the intended binding of a poor person as an apprentice, under 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 2, is sufficient, if sent to one only of the overseers of the parish in which the master lives.

If upon the application to justices for an order of removal, evidence is tendered on the part of the parish to which the proposed removal is to take place, and the justices hear it, but it is not taken down in writing, or transmitted with the order to the appellant parish, that is no ground of objection to the order of removal.

Upon appeal against an order of removal, the order was confirmed, subject to a case, which submitted the following questions to the Court:—1. Whether a notice of the intention to bind a poor person apprentice, under the provisions of 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 2, is sufficient, if directed to all the overseers of the parish in which the master lives, but sent to one of them only. 2. Whether it was a sufficient ground of objection to the order that the examinations of three persons, whose evidence had been offered before the justices on the part of the appellant parish, and received by them, had not been taken down in writing and sent to the appellants with the order of removal.

Greenwood, in support of the order of Sessions.—1. Where notice is required to be given to overseers, notice to one is generally sufficient (R. v. Warwickshire Justices, 6 Ad. & Ell. 763; 3 Nolaan, P. L. 527, n.; and R. v. Staffordshire Justices, 4 Ad. & Ell. 483); and the words at the termination of sec. 2 of 56 Geo. 3, c. 139, "unless one of each overseer shall attend and admit such notice," make no difference. 2. It is not to be disputed, that all the examinations upon which the order is made must be sent to the appellant parish. (R. v. Outwell, 9 Ad. & Ell. 386; R. v. Black Cartleton, 10 Ad. & Ell. 679.) Even copies of documents are to be sent, but this rule is confined to evidence taken down by the magistrates. It does not mean that every idle word which a witness might utter is to be taken down and sent. If the magistrates in any case neglect their duty, and refuse to take evidence which they ought to take, then the remedy is against them by mandamus; but here the evidence was offered on the part of the appellants, and they were clearly not bound to take the least notice of it.

Merivale, contra.—1. Generally, notice to one overseer is sufficient; but this is a particular case; and the proper construction of the Act is, that notice must be given to all, "unless one shall attend and admit the notice." The object is to insure the protection to the apprentice; and great care is taken that the notice shall reach some of the overseers. (R. v. Threlkeld, 4 B. & Adol. 229.)

By the COURT.—There is no doubt that the service of the notice is good; and, as to the other point, it cannot be said that the order was made upon the examinations, which were not sent. If the evidence had been offered by the removing parish, perhaps, in that case, the justices would have no discretion; but here some evidence was tendered to the justices by the opposite party, not on which, but notwithstanding which, the order was made.

Order confirmed.

REG. v. SAFFRON WALDEN.

Settlement by estate—Residence within ten miles—Measurement of distance.

Stat. 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 68, in order to gain a settlement by estate, renders necessary a residence within ten miles of the estate: Held, that the distance is to be calculated by the length of a straight line drawn from one point to the other.

On appeal against an order of removal, founded upon evidence of a settlement by estate, gained since the passing of stat. 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, the Court of Quarter Sessions confirmed the order, subject to a case; which stated that the house in which the pauper dwelt was situate in one parish, and more than ten miles from the estate situate in another, in respect of which the settlement was claimed, if the distance were to be measured by the nearest mode of access, but within ten miles if the distance were to be measured from the boundary of one parish to the boundary of the other, or by a straight line drawn from one point to the other. The proper mode of measurement was submitted to the Court.

M. Chambers, Q.C. and Wordsworth, in support of the order of Sessions, contended that the proper mode of calculating the distance was from boundary to boundary, or by drawing a straight line between the estate and the place of residence. The latter was the mode prescribed by statute as to the parliamentary franchise, and is spoken of as reasonable by one of the Court in Leigh v. Hind (9 B. & C. 774); though in that case a different mode of calculation was adopted, because the question there arose on the construction of a covenant in restraint of trade. If the distance were to be calculated by the nearest mode of access, the distance would be constantly shifting; one day the estate would give a settlement, and the next day not. Further, in a case of doubt, the Court will lean in favour of the settlement.

Marsh, contra.—Admitting that the boundary of the parish, in which the estate is situate, is the terminus à quo, the question is, what is the terminus ad quem, and how is the distance to be measured? The statute is clear, that the party must inhabit within ten miles; and a party inhabits at the house where he lives. If the distance is to be measured to the boundary of the county, the estate and the place of residence might be fifty miles distant; and then the object of the statute, which is, that the settlement should only be gained where the estate is under the personal control of the owner, would be defeated. Then as to the mode of measurement, that by the nearest mode of access is the most reasonable; it does not follow that it should be by a public road; but the ordinary meaning of the words of the Act is, a distance of ten miles by the nearest possible mode of access. No person could go in a straight line from one place to the other without trespassing. The distance between two livings, held by one incumbent, has been declared by legislative construction to mean the distance according to the nearest mode of access; and Leigh v. Hind (9 B. and C. 774), is in favour of the appellant.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—There are statutes which prescribe one mode of calculation, and others which prescribe another mode; and there is a case in which it was suggested by the learned judge, that the natural mode was to measure the distance as the crow flies; but the object of the contract there being to prevent any interference with the trade of one of the parties, a different mode was adopted. We are left, therefore, very much at large to decide this question; and no materials are presented to us, except the Act of Parliament. Under these circumstances, we are bound to lay down a fixed and arbitrary rule; and the rule, which, in the abstract, we think most reasonable is, that the measurement should be made by a horizontal line drawn from one point to the other; which we assume can be done. By laying down that rule, difficulties will be avoided, the settlement will not be constantly shifting, gained as yesterday and lost as yesterday, as the road may be lengthened or shortened.

PATTESON, J.—We must lay down an arbitrary rule. The words of the statute are "ten miles;" and I think it is the more reasonable construction to say that that means ten miles as the crow flies.

WILLIAMS, J.—What can the statute mean but an actual distance of ten miles from the one place to the other? As to the danger of trespasses being committed, we are spared that consideration in this case; because the distance calculated in that way is expressly found in the case. Order confirmed.

Masters and Servants Act.

Under the Masters and Servants Act, 4 Geo. 4, c. 36, s. 3, an instrument, purporting to be at the same time a warrant of commitment and a conviction, must set forth the evidence as in a conviction.

Per PATTESON, J.—It must also adjudge imprisonment.

This was a motion to quash a commitment under the Masters and Servants Act, returned upon habes corpus, on the ground that it did not set forth the evidence. It recited the complaint and adjudication upon it, and did therefore commit, and called upon the officer therein named to apprehend, and the jailer to receive.

Bodkin (with him Huddleston), against the commitment.—This is in fact a conviction, not a mere commitment or order. (Re Gray, 1 N.S.C. 354; R. v. Richards, 5 Q.B. 296; R. v. Cheshire Justices, 5 B. & Ad. 439, were cited.)

Pashley, contra.—This is not a conviction nor an order, but only a commitment. Convictions are records, and ought to be on parchment. Every ingredient necessary to make this valid is here,—jurisdiction, offence, fact of conviction. (Daniel v. Philips, 1 C. M. & R. 668.) This is a warrant. A commitment is not a record. (Whalley v. Jones, 5 East, 250; Cooper v. Jones, 3 M. & S. 283; Wood v. Fenwick, 10 M. & W. 298; Canadian prisoners' case, 9 A. & E. 731.) A conviction may be produced at any time. (Re Reynolds, 1 D. & L. 846; Re Fletcher, ib. 796.) It would be absurd if he should be discharged to-day for this being bad, and not have an action against the jailer because a good conviction is produced.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—We must deal with this as we find it. There is nothing to show that the original was not on parchment, and we shall presume that it was. We cannot take notice of the means that may exist for producing good convictions at another time, when the question is whether this instrument is a sufficient warrant for detaining. It professes to be at one and the same time a commitment and a statement of a conviction. As the latter, it is bad in point of law, because it does not set out the evidence upon which it is founded. The prisoner, therefore, is entitled to his liberty.

PATTESON, J.—I am of the same opinion. This is also bad, because, after professing to convict, it does not adjudge an imprisonment, but calls upon the officer to apprehend, and the jailer to receive.

WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

Conviction quashed.

Re TURNER.

Masters and Servants Act.

An information under the Masters and Servants Act, for absence and neglect thereby to fulfil the contract, must aver that it was without the consent of the master, or without legal excuse within his knowledge. The information ought to show the nature of the contract, for it is not every contract of service that is within the statute, and non constat that there may not be an exception.

Quære, whether a contract binding a servant to work for the master absolutely for eleven months, in certain mines, on receiving a certain remuneration by the piece for his work, but not binding the master to find him a certain amount of work in each week, nor to find him any work in case of accidental or unavoidable damage or obstruction to any engine, gearing, or machinery, or to the said mines, or any of them, or to the workings thereof, is a valid contract, so as to bring him within the Act?

Bodkin (with him Huddleston) moved as in the preceding case. 1. The information (which was framed as above) did not disclose any legal offence. (Paley on Convictions, p. 108; R. v. Corden, 2 Burr. 2279; R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 536; R. v. Jarvis, 1 Burr. 149; Ex parte Aldridge, 2 B. & C. 600; Fletcher v. Callhopp, 16 L. J. 49, M.C.; Newman v. Earl of Hardwicke, 9 A. & E. 124.) 2. It does not show the nature of the contract. It might be not within the statute. (Harding v. Ryde, 9 B. & C. 603.) 3. As to the validity of the contract, 1 Smith, L. Cas. 182; Hitchcock v. Coker (6 A. & E.); Horne v. Greaves (7 Bing. 743), and other cases were cited.

Cesling, Edward James, and Fry.—As to the first point, the following cases were cited: R. v. Chandler (1 Ld. Raym. 581); R. v. Speed (5 Ld. Raym. 583); R. v. Cripps (2 Strange, 711; Bac. Abr. Indictment, H. 3); R. v. Marsh (2 B. & C. 772); Mann v. Dover (3 B. & Ad. 103). As to the second point, it is the same as the first, and involved in it. The contract is valid. (Williamson v. Taylor, 5 Q. B. 175; Young v. Timmins, 1 C. & J. 341; Morris v. Smith, 3 Dougl. 277; Sykes v. Dixon, 9 A. & E. 693; Aspin v. Austin, 5 Q. B. 671.)

Bodkin and Huddleston replied.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—The question really is, does the information disclose any offence? for if not, the magistrate had no authority to commit. It never could have been the intention of the legislature that mere absence should be an offence under this Act. It therefore is necessary that the absence should be shown to have been without the consent of the master, which was a fact to which the master could speak, or at all events, without lawful excuse to the knowledge of the master, or the person authorized to complain. As to the second point, it was quite obvious that the magistrate ought to be enabled to see whether the contract contained any exceptions that withdrew the alleged misconduct from the operation of the statute. It ought, therefore, to be set out. As to the third point, I, for one, should be very slow to deliver an opinion that would have the effect of relieving persons from being amenable to the law into which they so voluntarily and deliberately enter.

PATTESON, J. and WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

PENNYELL and OTHERS v. RHODES and ANOTHER. Stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, ss. 11–17.—Act of Bankruptcy—Compounding for debt.

Proceedings being taken against a debtor under stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, ss. 11–12, by obtaining a summons from the Court of Bankruptcy, upon a debt of 149l. 4s. the debtor filed an admission that he was indebted to the creditor in the sum of 149l. Held, that the omission of the 4s. being obviously accidental, and not implying a denial that the 4s. was due, did not prevent that admission from constituting an act of bankruptcy.

On the fourteenth day after the filing of that admission (an action having been in the mean time commenced), an agreement was entered into between the debtor and creditor, whereby the latter agreed to accept six bills of exchange and a judge's order for the payment of the amount of the debt by weekly instalments. The bills were handed by the debtor to the creditor's attorney at the time, but were immediately restored by him, because, as a matter of professional etiquette, he wished to receive them through the hands of the debtor's attorney; and on the next day but one the judge's order, containing the terms agreed upon, was obtained, and the bills were sent by the debtor's to the creditor's attorney: Held, that the agreement entered into on the 14th day, was a "compounding" of the debt within the meaning of the stat. 5 & 6 Vict.

c. 122, s. 14; and that therefore no act of bankruptcy was committed, although the fulfilment of the terms of the agreement was not complete until some days after the 14th.

This was a feigned issue to try the right of the plaintiffs, as the assignees of one James Bradshaw, to certain goods which had been seized in execution by the defendants. The verdict was taken for the plaintiffs by consent, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a special case. The case stated the following facts: the fiat against James Bradshaw issued on the 27th March, 1844; and the bankrupt was indebted to the defendants in the sum of 149l. 4s. from the 6th Feb. to the 3rd March in the same year, and thence hitherto, save as therein after mentioned. The defendants proceeded under stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, for the recovery of that debt; and on the 8th February, 1844, obtained a summons from the Court of Bankruptcy, containing the usual endorsement of the notice to the party summoned; whereupon, on the 15th February following, the bankrupt signed the following admission, which was on the same day filed in the Court of Bankruptcy:—"I, the undersigned, James Bradshaw, of &c. in the county of Middlesex, do hereby confess that I am indebted to Messrs. Rhodes and Cruicknell, of &c. in the sum of 149l." No further or other admission, deposition, or other proceeding whatever, was had, made, or entered into, and no further or other step was taken in the said Court of Bankruptcy by the said bankrupt, until the fiat issued; and there was no enlargement of the time for complying with the above-mentioned summons, or for any purpose whatever. On the 8th Feb. an action was commenced by Messrs. Rhodes and Cruicknell against the bankrupt, to recover their debt; and on the 17th, notice of declaration was served. On the 21st a letter was written by the bankrupt's solicitor, proposing to pay the debt by weekly instalments of 50l. each; but that proposal was declined. On the 29th Feb. a meeting took place between Mr. Rhodes and the bankrupt; at which the bankrupt offered a judge's order for the amount due from him to Messrs. Rhodes and Cruicknell, payable by instalments of 50l. per week, and also to deposit with Messrs. R. and C. six bills of exchange, which the bankrupt then produced. Nothing was said about the odd money; all the costs were to be paid down, but the amount was not mentioned. The bankrupt delivered the six bills of exchange to Mr. Adams, who consulted with his client, Mr. Rhodes, as to their value; and Mr. Rhodes, then, in the presence of his solicitor, Mr. Adams and of the bankrupt, agreed to accept the deposit of the bills, and acceded to the terms proposed. The bankrupt asked Mr. Adams whether the bankruptcy proceedings would be stayed; and he replied, that of course the bankruptcy proceedings went for nothing. The bankrupt gave the six bills to Mr. Adams for the purpose of his keeping them for his clients, Messrs. Rhodes and Cruicknell; but Mr. Adams delivered the six bills of exchange back to the bankrupt, and said that, as a matter of professional etiquette, he wished that the bills should be delivered to him through Messrs. Davies, the attorneys of the bankrupt; but no time was mentioned when the bills were to be sent by Messrs. Davies to Mr. Adams. On the same day the bankrupt took the bills to his attorneys, and a letter was written containing the above terms. On the 1st of March following, a summons was taken out by the bankrupt's attorneys to obtain a judge's order in pursuance of the said agreement; and on the 2nd of March the order was drawn up and sent to Messrs. R. and C. or their attorneys, the six bills being sent in a letter to their attorneys on the same day. In pursuance of that agreement two instalments were paid; but upon default in payment of others, final judgment was signed, and execution issued on the 23rd March. The question for the opinion of this Court was, whether the facts above stated disclose an act of bankruptcy by the said bankrupt committed before the levying of the said execution, so as to render the same invalid as against the plaintiffs, in which case the verdict was to stand for them. If not, the defendants to have their execution satisfied thereon, and a nonsuit entered.

Friday, May 29.—Watson, Q.C. for the defendants, contended that no act of bankruptcy had been committed; and

The COURT, being of that opinion, gave judgment for the defendants, in the absence of Willes for the plaintiffs, as he was engaged in another court.

Willes was now heard accordingly for the plaintiffs.—1st. An Act of bankruptcy was committed by the bankrupt, under s. 15 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, which provides that a trader signing an admission for part only of a demand, and not making a deposition that he believes he has a good defence to the residue, if he shall not within fourteen days next after the filing of such admission, pay, secure, or compound for the same; and, as to the residue shall not, within fourteen days after personal service of the summons, pay, secure, or compound for the same, or enter into a bond to pay any sum recovered with costs, shall be deemed to have committed an Act of bankruptcy on the 15th day after service of the summons. The present case falls within that section; because the admission is of 1491; whereas the demand upon which the summons issued was of 1491. 4s. [PATTERSON, J.—The statute must mean an admission of part, as part; implying, therefore, a denial of the residue. It cannot apply to a case when clearly the intention is to admit the whole; but 4s. is accidentally omitted. 2nd. Treating this as an admission of the whole demand, an act of bankruptcy was committed under s. 14 of the same Act, because the bankrupt did not within fourteen days after the filing of the admission, "pay or tender, and offer to pay to such creditor the amount of such demand, or secure, or compound for the same to the satisfaction of the creditor." The 29th Feb. was the 14th day; and the agreement then entered into was neither a paying, securing, or compounding for the debt. It could not be a securing, because the bills were not delivered until the 2nd of March; nor was it a compounding, because that word must be taken in its ordinary mercantile sense, which is that of giving and receiving a part for the whole of a debt. He cited Ex parte Gooddy (1 M.D. & D. 677); Ex parte Brown (16 Ves. 472); Ex parte Musgrave (3 M.D. & D.); and Smith's Compendium of Mercantile Law.

By the COURT.—We have heard nothing to alter our original impression. The language of the statute is very simple; and we think that the facts stated in the case do not disclose an act of bankruptcy. 1st. The admission of the debt was clearly intended to apply to the whole demand; and the omission of the 4s. was accidental. This is a case, therefore, not coming within sec. 15; the obvious meaning of which is, that if a trader admit part only of the demand, with the intention of denying the residue, then, unless he fulfil the requisites of that section, he shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy. 2ndly. There is no ground for limiting the meaning of the word "compound," as Mr. Willes suggests. It is sufficient that on the 29th a bargain was entered into between the bankrupt and the creditor, with which the latter was satisfied. It may be that that arrangement could not properly be called a securing of the debt, because the bills, from a very proper adherence to professional etiquette, on the part of the creditor's attorney, were not delivered at the time; but the bargain was a binding one at that time, though all the steps for completing it could not then be taken.

Judgment for defendants.

REG. D. INHABITANTS OF ST. GILES'S IN THE FIELDS.

Police magistrates—Order of removal—Complaint of chargeability.

An order of removal, in reciting the complaint of chargeability must shew that the paupers were actually chargeable.

Therefore, an order reciting "that whereas complaint hath been made that J. J. and E. J. are lately come into the said parish, endeavouring to settle there, contrary to law, and it appears unto me, the said police magistrate, &c. and I do adjudge that they are become chargeable to the said parish," &c. was held bad.

Quære, does an order made under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, by a police magistrate, sufficiently shew jurisdiction, by describing him as "one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the county of Middlesex; one of the police magistrates of the metropolis, sitting at the Police Court, Great Marlborough-street?"

Upon appeal the Sessions had quashed the order of removal, subject to a case.

Prendergast and Howarth, in support of the order.—There are three fatal objections to the order upon the face of it, for defective allegations of jurisdiction. It is made by a single police magistrate, under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, and he is not described so as to shew that he had jurisdiction. (a) Then it does not state that any complaint had been made that the paupers were chargeable. The statement is as follows:—"Whereas complaint hath been made to me, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the county of Middlesex (one of the police magistrates of the metropolis, sitting at the police court, Great Marlborough-street, in the parish of St. James's, Westminster, within the metropolitan police district), by the churchwardens, &c. that James Jenkins and Elizabeth Jenkins are lately come into the said parish, endeavouring to settle there contrary to law; and it appears unto me, the said police magistrate of the metropolis, and I do adjudge, that they are become chargeable to the said parish; and upon examination, &c." The chargeability is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction. Then it does not say that the adjudication of chargeability does not shew the evidence was taken on oath, or indeed at all. (R. v. Great Bedwin, Burr. S.C. 163; R. v. Angell, Cas. Hardw. 124.)

M. Chambers, contra, was directed by the Court to consider the second objection.—True, the ordinary forms shew that the complaint contained a statement of chargeability, but the 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, does not require this; by that we are to be governed. There are also cases to the same effect. (Re Weston Rivers, and St. Peter, 2 Salk. 492; Res v. South Marston, 1 Strange, 189; Res v. Inskip (5 M. & S. 299), was to the same effect. [PATTERSON, J.—The Court decided that on the ground that the facts stated amounted to a statement of a legal chargeability; it may be taken by implication that they were chargeable, for they were adjudged to be so.]

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The statute of Charles does not regulate this; for by the terms of that statute no express adjudication is necessary. But that is, and always has been, held an essential part of the order. And it must shew that the complaint stated the paupers to be chargeable. It has always been the practice to do so. The early cases are of no weight whatever; for it is evident that the Court endeavoured to get rid of the objections without considering their legal value.

PATTERSON, J.—Even upon the statute it seems necessary by implication. But now it is clear that they must be shewn to have been actually chargeable.

WILLIAMS, J.—This has been the invariable practice, and considered the origin of the jurisdiction as much as an information is the foundation of a conviction. Res v. Inskip was, I dare say, right; but it was because the facts amounted to chargeability.

Order of Sessions confirmed.

REG. V. POCCOCK.

Exemption from rates.

The buildings occupied by the Normal School belonging to the British and Foreign School Society is not within the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, so as to be exempted from rates.

The sixth section gives two periods within which a rated inhabitant may appeal; first, four months after the first assessment after the filing of the certificate, or four months after the first assessment after exemption claimed by the society.

Semble, that the society is not at any time protected by the certificate alone, but must also shew that it is within the other provisions of the first section.

This was a rule for quashing an order of the Surrey Sessions confirming, on appeal, a certificate granted by the barrister, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, exempting the Normal School belonging to the British and Foreign School Society from rates.

Martin, Q.C. (with whom were Wallinger and J. Clarke), in support of the order.—Upon this case there are two points; first, whether this is, within the definition of the Act, "a building belonging to a society instituted for the purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively; and a question as to the period within which the appeal was made. The case finds all the other essentials mentioned in the first and second sections; and if the barrister can give this certificate, the order must be confirmed. The building is used as a Normal school, attached to the British and Foreign School Society. The primary object is to instruct persons in the science of teaching, and prepare them to act as teachers in branch schools. This is done by means of lectures, and other modes. To it is attached, also, an adult and children's school, to which a small sum is paid by those who frequent it; but the case finds that there is no profit. The object of this Act was to exempt mechanics' institutes, and other societies for the purpose of spreading literature and knowledge, from rates. It was not designed for bodies like the Royal Academy and Royal Institution, which two societies were exempt, without the Act. Proper teachers are most especially needed, and the science of teaching is quite a distinct pursuit and object of education. [PATTERSON, J.—Why might it not apply to any school, then?] That would not be a society, and would be carried on for profit. Secondly, the appeal was not in time. The certificate was obtained and filed on Sept. 9, and the first assessment was Oct. 1. Notice was given to the collector in November, and to the trustees, who make this rate, on Feb. 6. The appeal was not entered till the Easter Sessions. The statute gives six months time to appeal after the first rate, after the filing, or after the first rate after such exemption claimed. This does not give two periods for the choice of the inhabitants, but means, that the certificate being filed shall operate as notice; then the time to appeal must date from that; but if it be not filed, then from the period of the exemption claimed. [PATTERSON, J.—Suppose the certificate obtained and filed, but the society continued to pay rates, then by the lapse of a few months they would obtain exemption and bar appeal; can this be so?] It is not necessary to decide what the effect of that would be; here it was filed. The filing is not the act of the society, but of the clerk of the peace. The exemption claimed means if a delay takes place in the filing.

M. Chambers, Q.C. and Hayes, contra.—This is not a society instituted for literature, science, or the fine arts exclusively. The society contemplates, as is shown by its rules, the advancement of education generally among the lower classes. It is to provide schools, and incidentally it trains teachers, for which purpose this Normal School was founded. It might equally be said that any school to which a few persons subscribed, and put in masters, would be exempt. Amongst the objects of this society is instruction in reading, and writing, and needlework; under what head would these fall? Then the appeal is in time. The statute gives two periods, either to date from the filing, or from exemption claimed. The barrister only decides ex parte upon production of the rules, and if the society lies by for a short time and exemption is not claimed, there would be no power to appeal.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I think the statute gives two periods for an appeal against the certificate of the barrister: first, after the filing of the certificate at the Sessions; and secondly, as the inhabitants might not know of the certificate being obtained, or whether the society could act upon it, after the exemption actually claimed. This appeal, therefore, was made in time. As to the main question, whether this is within the terms of the Act, it is impossible to attempt to give an operation to the Act without lamenting the loose and unsatisfactory way in which it is drawn. It is scarcely possible to mention any institution as to which great doubt might not be raised whether it was within the Act or not. The object is to exempt from a general liability, and the words must therefore be plain. The title is to exempt "scientific and other literary societies." I am inclined to think they point rather to societies which have the least claim to such exemption—those composed of opulent and learned men, meeting to discuss matters for advancing the knowledge of mankind generally; and not to associations of poor men of the humbler classes desirous of improving their minds, such as mechanics' institutes, which ought to be exempt from rates, and would have been, if the attention of the legislature had been drawn to the words of the statute. Even as to mechanics' institutes some difficulty might be felt, but, in the present case, I feel still greater difficulty, and must say that I think it is not within the Act. It is not a society exclusively for literature, science, or the fine arts, although quite as useful, and as much entitled to exemption. I cannot help observing further that the statute does not make the certificate of the barrister final, or empower him to declare that the society is to be exempt; it only makes the obtaining of the certificate a sine qua non, with the additional difficulty of shewing that it is in other respects within the Act. I do not give any decisive opinion upon that, but trust that the deficiencies of the statute will speedily be remedied.

PATTERSON, J. and WILLIAMS, J. concurred.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

May 26 and 28.

BOYDELL v. HARKNESS.

Where an action is brought, venue London, against the indorser upon a bill of exchange, drawn payable in London, it is sufficient, after pleading over, if the declaration allege a general presentment.

(a) This point was not decided, but Patterson J. observed, that in the 10th section, as well as in the form given by the Act, the same description was used.

Semble, it would also be sufficient upon special demurrer.

This was an action of assumpsit upon a bill of exchange, drawn by Leonard Simpson on J. Powilston, whereby the said "L. S. required the said J. P. to pay to the order of the said L. S. in London, 1981, value received, three months after the date thereof," indorsed by L. S. to the defendant, and by the defendant to T. R. and by T. R. to the plaintiff. The declaration went on to aver "that the said J. Powilston did not pay the same, although the same was presented to him for payment on the day when it became due," and then concluded in the ordinary form. The only plea was a denial of the notice of dishonour, the issue upon which was found for the plaintiff. The venue in the action was London.

In last Term, Byles, Serjt. had obtained a rule to shew cause why the judgment should not be arrested, on the ground that the declaration, as it shewed that the bill was drawn payable in London, ought to have averred, not a general presentment, but a presentment in London. Gibb v. Mather (8 Bing. 214), Lyon v. Holt (5 M. & W. 250), were mentioned.

Dowling, Serjt. now shewed cause.—The allegation of presentment is, at all events, good after verdict. There is sufficient to shew a presentment to the payee, which must be taken to have been such a presentment as is required by the previous part of the declaration. No other place besides London is mentioned in the declaration. This form is in accordance with the Rules of Court, T. T. 1 Wm. 4, and H. T. 4 Wm. 4. According to the former of these (see the last form but one in the Schedule and Directions, 1), our declaration would have averred "that the bill was then and there presented to the said J. P.," but by Rule H. T. 4 Wm. 4, pl. 8, "The name of a county shall in all cases be stated in the margin of a declaration, and no venue shall be stated in the body of the declaration, or in any subsequent pleading." It was not intended by the rule to relieve the plaintiff from the necessity of proving every thing which he had to prove before. If the presentation had been traversed, the plaintiff would have been bound to shew presentment in London. Supposing such a traverse, and issue found for the plaintiff, the Court would not have allowed this objection after verdict. A fortiori, the objection cannot be made when presentation is admitted. The presentment would have to be proved to have taken place in London, but a strict allegation of it is unnecessary. (Parks v. Edge, 1 Cr. & M. 429.)

Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule.—First. This declaration would have been bad before stat. 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 78. (Rame v. Young, 2 B. & B. 165; Saunders v. Bowes, 14 East, 500.) Secondly. Statute 1 and 2 Geo. 4, c. 78, relates only to acceptances. Here the bill was drawn specially payable at a particular place. Thirdly. The defect would be fatal even upon general demurrer. It is not cured by verdict, because there is no issue, and therefore no verdict, upon this particular part of the declaration. [MAULE, J.—It is not so much that there has been a verdict as that the defendant has pleaded over. Where matter defective on special demurrer is good after verdict, it is supposed that the judge has directed the jury with a view to that sense of the pleading which will sustain the action. If there be a general demurrer, the party treats the declaration as a thing requiring no answer; if he pleads over, he takes it in a sense that requires an answer. So in Hobson v. Middleton (6 B. & C. 295), Bayley, J. says, "That after pleading over, an equivocal expression is to be taken in that sense which will support the previous pleading." That applies only where the part defective is pleaded over to. The law upon the effect of pleading over is laid down in 1 Wms. Saunders, 228. Butt's case (7 Rep. 25), and Dr. Bonham's case (8 Rep. 120), are authorities to shew that pleading over merely cures matters of form. See also 1 Chitty on Pleading, 7th ed. 704. [COLTMAN, J.—What would you say, if "then and there" had been inserted with the allegation of presentment?] Even that would not do. This is not merely an equivocal expression: it is an absolute defect. It is a mere accident that the venue is London, and, with reference to this point, cannot place the parties in a better position than if the venue had been some other county. This is within the proviso of the Rule H. T. 4 Wm. 4, pl. 8, "provided that in cases where local description is now required, such description shall be given."

TINDAL, C.J.—It appears to me that this case is decided by the new rule last referred to. It must now be taken as if the venue inserted in the margin were continued throughout the declaration; just as if it had been in the old form, "afterwards on such a day the bill was then and there presented, &c." I think that would have sufficiently averred a presentment in London.

COLTMAN, J.—It is unnecessary to advert to the effect of pleading over. It would have been quite sufficient in the declaration to allege that the bill was presented in London; then comes the rule, and prohibits the insertion of that special venue as unnecessary.

MAULE, J.—I think the venue in the margin sufficiently applies to the presentment. The Rule of Court referred to is—"The name of a county shall in all cases be stated in the margin of a declaration, and shall be taken to be the venue intended by the plaintiff." That makes it absolutely necessary to state the name of the county in the margin; and then it goes on—"no venue shall be stated in the body of the declaration, or in any subsequent pleading." Now, what is venue? It is the place where a material fact stated in the pleadings is alleged to have taken place, and was formerly important to determine from what place the jurors were to be summoned. The rule does require that the place where a material fact takes place should be stated, because it requires the county to be named in the margin, and that place is to be taken to be the place where the plaintiff alleges every matter of fact to have happened. If it is immaterial to prove that the fact took place in London, the plaintiff need not prove it; if material, he must prove it. This declaration, therefore, does contain an allegation that presentment was made in London, and that allegation, being material, if traversed, must have been proved.

CRESSWELL, J.—This case is determined by the Rule of Court. Before the rule, every material and traversable fact must have had a venue. Then the rule says, you are to read the margin in the body of the declaration. You are to construe the declaration as if the venue were inserted. Rule discharged.

DOE DEM. GAISFORD V. STONE.

At the trial of an ejectment a deed was put in which was a mortgage of the premises from S. to the lessor of the plaintiff. Indorsed upon the deed was a memorandum of further charge of later date, signed only by the defendant, in which he described himself as the purchaser of the equity of redemption of the within-mentioned premises: Held, that he could not, after this, set up in defence a prior mortgage to a different party.

At the trial of this ejectment, before Erie, J. at the last assizes for the county of Somerset, the following deeds were proved and put in:—Aug. 28th, 1828. A mortgage of the premises by Robert Saunders to Alfred Prothero. May 5th, 1829. Mortgage in fee by Saunders to the lessor of the plaintiff. An indorsement upon the last-mentioned deed, dated May 21st, 1842, and signed by the defendant in the following words: "Memorandum, that by indenture of surcharge, bearing date the 5th day of May inst. the within-mentioned premises were charged by me, William Stone, the purchaser of the equity of redemption thereof, with the payment of the further sum of 300l. and interest from the said 5th day of May." Erie, J. directed a verdict for the plaintiff. In last Term, Channell, Serjt. had obtained a rule, pursuant to leave reserved, for entering the verdict for the defendant, on the ground that the title was shewn to be in Alfred Prothero, and not in the lessor of the plaintiff.

Manning, Serjt. (with him Bailey) shewed cause.—According to the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee, it does not lie in the mouth of the defendant to say that, at the time of the mortgage to the lessor of the plaintiff, Saunders was not in possession. The defendant, by his memorandum, precludes himself from setting up any better title than Saunders himself could, and Saunders would be estopped from setting up a title in somebody else, at the date of the deed of May 5th, 1829. He referred also to Slatterie v. Pooley (6 M. & W. 664).

The COURT called on Channell, Serjt. (with him Fitzherbert) in support of the rule.—The lessor of the plaintiff was no party to the memorandum, and there would therefore be no estoppel for want of mutuality. Neither can the memorandum operate as a declaration by the defendant against his own interests, as in Slatterie v. Pooley. He admits, indeed, that he came in under Robert Saunders; but that may have been as a purchaser of the equity of redemption under a mortgage prior to that made to the lessor of the plaintiff. He would then be bound, as the owner of the equity of redemption, to ascertain who are the mortgagees, and pay them off in their order. Besides, as a declaration, the memorandum is imperfect, as it refers to some indenture not produced.

By the COURT.—By the indorsement the defendant acknowledges that he has no better title than what he derives from Saunders. He refers to the deed upon which his memorandum is indorsed, and speaks of the within-mentioned premises. What right has he to set up any title which Saunders could not?

DOE V. ROE.

Practice—Ejectment.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for judgment against the casual ejector. The affidavit of service of the declaration and notice in ejectment did not set out the full Christian names of the tenant in possession, upon whom it was served, but only his initials and his surname. It was submitted that in certain cases it would be almost impossible to ascertain the full Christian names of the tenant upon whom it was necessary to serve.

Rule absolute.

REYNOLDS V. FENTON.
Pleading—Foreign judgment.

To an action upon a foreign judgment, it is not sufficient to plead "that the defendant was not served with process, nor had any notice of process, nor did he appear in Court to answer in the said suit;" without shewing distinctly that by the law in force in the foreign court, proceedings in an action brought there, of necessity commence with process.

Assumpsit, setting out a judgment or decree recovered against the defendant in the Tribunal of Commerce, in Brussels, in the kingdom of Belgium, and in consideration thereof a promise by defendant to pay.

Plea. That although the said judgment or decree in the declaration mentioned, was obtained by the plaintiff against the defendant, he, the defendant, was not at any time served with any process issuing out of the said Tribunal of Commerce in and of the said city of Brussels, in the said kingdom of Belgium, in the declaration mentioned at the suit of the plaintiff, for the causes of action for which the said judgment was recovered, nor had he at any time notice of any such process, nor did he, the said defendant, at any time appear in the said Court to answer the plaintiff in the said suit or action on which the said judgment or decree was so obtained, as in the said declaration mentioned.

Verification. General demurrer.

Channell, Serjt., in support of the demurrer. The plea is bad for not shewing that the defendant was not resident or domiciled in Belgium. (Douglas v. Forrest, 4 Bing. 686; Smith v. Nicolls, 5 Bing. N.C. 208; Cowan v. Braidwood, 1 M. & G. 882). He may have had an agent at Brussels, or he may have waived the service; or the Tribunal of Commerce may be a mere Court of Appeal, and the defendant may have been summoned to the inferior Court. Ferguson v. Mahon (11 A. & E. 179) was probably decided before Cowan v. Braidwood was reported, and cannot be sustained. It does not appear that by Belgian law a suit commences necessarily with process. The mere absence of a writ as the commencement of a suit is not contrary to natural justice. (Buchanan v. Rucker, 1 Camp. 62.)

Talfourd, Serjt., for the defendant.—The term "process" is not confined in its meaning to a mere written document; it will denote any method by which the proceedings in an action are commenced. This plea is identical with the plea in Ferguson v. Mahon (11 A. & E. 179), and was framed upon it; primâ facie, it furnishes a good defence to the action. If the necessity of process were waived, or there were any other excuse for its absence, that should be replied. The law, as laid down by Lord Ellenborough in Buchanan v. Rucker (1 Camp. 62), was afterwards upheld by the full Court (9 East, 192). A person who seeks to enforce a foreign judgment, must shew either that the party was summoned, or that there was some excuse for the defect. (Cavan v. Stewart, 1 Stark. N. P. 525; Bequet v. Mac Carthy, 2 B. & Ad. 951). [MAULE, J.—Your plea states merely that you had no notice of process; it is consistent with that, that in Brussels proceedings commence with a verbal summons from the plaintiff to the defendant. You do not even say that you had no notice of the proceedings. Primâ facie, the plea must be taken to mean that. This objection is on general demurrer. We cannot say that the issue of process is necessary to natural justice. Your plea might perhaps have sufficed, if it had said that the Court had no jurisdiction, except in cases where process issued.]

By the COURT.—You had better amend.

Talfourd, Serjt. prayed leave to amend accordingly. The defendant to amend, otherwise judgment for the plaintiff.

MESSENT V. REYNOLDS.

Pleading—Implied covenants.

Where the declaration in an action states an agreement, "whereby the defendant agrees to let to the plaintiff certain premises, subject to the same conditions as are mentioned in a certain memorandum of agreement made between the defendant and A B," without shewing what the memorandum is; the Court cannot infer an absolute covenant for quiet enjoyment from the defendant to the plaintiff.

This was a special case stated by agreement for the opinion of the Court. It set out a declaration in an action by the plaintiff against the defendant, whereby it appeared that, by a memorandum of agreement, "the defendant agreed to let to the plaintiff a certain house and premises, situate, &c. subject to the same conditions as were mentioned in a certain other memorandum of agreement, made between the defendant and one John Flight, for the term of eight years;" it then stated the plaintiff's entry, mutual promises, and "that the defendant promised, undertook, and agreed that the plaintiff should peaceably and quietly use, occupy, possess, and enjoy during the term;" it then proceeded to shew an eviction of the plaintiff, not by Flight, but by some party having title paramount. The plea was non assumpsit, and the question raised for the Court was, whether the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant raised such a promise as was set up, and whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

Talfourd, Serjt. for the plaintiff.—No doubt this agreement amounted to a lease. If it contained the word demise, that would have imported a warranty; but there is no magic in the word itself, and any words of present demise, such as these, will import the same. The plaintiff assumes that he is able to demise for eight years, subject to a certain agreement. If that agreement contained anything to prevent such a promise as this being implied, the defendant should have shown that. It is true that in Granger v. Collins (6 M. & W. 458) the Court held that this kind of warranty was not implied from the mere relation of landlord and tenant. But the distinction between that case and this is, that here the agreement is specially stated. [CRESSWELL, J.—Is this agreement anything more than evidence of the creation of the relation between landlord and tenant?]

Channell, Serjt. (with him Hoggins) for the defendant.—The plea of non assumpsit drives the plaintiff to prove not merely the agreement, but also the covenant for peaceable and quiet enjoyment. The agreement to which the defendant's agreement is subject not being set out, we may infer its contents to be unfavourable to the plaintiff's case. (Jackson v. Cobbin, 8 M. & W. 790.) They were then stopped by the Court.

TINDAL, C. J.—The plaintiff is not entitled to recover. He wishes the Court to say, that in the defendant's agreement there is implied an absolute covenant for quiet enjoyment. No doubt in a lease such a covenant is implied by law in the word demise. I do not, however, rest on the point that here that word is not used. At all events, there ought to appear to be an absolute demise of the term in respect of which the covenant is to be implied. Here the letting is subject to conditions; and how are we to say that it is not a conditional term? Those conditions may have been broken, and the eviction may have been the proper and natural consequence of the breach. I think the inference drawn by the plaintiff cannot be supported in law, and that there is no promise such as is alleged in the declaration.

COLTMAN, J. concurred.

MAULE, J.—The declaration does not even lay the promise to have been that the defendant should quietly enjoy, subject to the conditions in the other memorandum. Those conditions may have been to pay 500*l.* on a certain day, which may not have been paid. The objection goes entirely to the merits of the case. It is clear that the defendant did not represent himself as seized in fee, but that he really was and represented himself to be a person having title under Flight, and willing to hand over his estate with all its conditions. The assumption in the declaration is, that the defendant pretended to have the power to grant absolutely what he only grants conditionally.

CRESSWELL, J.—There is no evidence of an express promise, but it is said the law will imply one. How can we assent to that, when the conditions annexed to the letting are not set out, and we know not what they are? Even if the word "let" would be equivalent to a demise under seal, which I by no means admit, yet when there are certain unknown conditions to the letting, the plaintiff cannot assume an absolute unconditional covenant.

Judgment for the defendant.

SUTTON v. PAGE.

To a declaration by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, the defendant pleaded, "that the plaintiff and defendant accounted together of and concerning the said causes of action in the declaration mentioned, and all other claims and demands then being between the plaintiff and the defendant," and then went on to allege a payment of what upon the accounting appeared to be due. The plaintiff replied, "that the plaintiff and defendant did not account together of and concerning the causes of action in the declaration mentioned, and of all other claims and demands then being between the plaintiff and the defendant modo ac formâ."—Held, that the replication was good on special demurrer.

Assumpsit.—Indorsee against acceptor of a bill of exchange for 120*l.* 6*s.*

Plea.—That after the accruing of the causes of action, &c. and before the commencement of the suit, the plaintiff and defendant accounted together of and concerning the said causes of action in the declaration mentioned, and all other claims and demands then being between the plaintiff and the defendant, and then amounting to a certain large sum, to wit, 1,000*l.*; and that, on the said accounting, a certain small sum, to wit, the sum of 40*l.* and no more, was found to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff. The plea then went on to aver payment of the sum of 40*l.* so found to be due.

Replication.—That the plaintiff and the defendant did not account together of and concerning the causes of action in the declaration mentioned, and of all other claims and demands then being between the plaintiff and the defendant modo ac formâ.

Special demurrer, on the grounds that the traverse taken in improper and too large; that the lease tendered is immaterial; that the issue is taken on matters of inducement; that the traverse should have been in the disjunctive, &c.

On a former day, Channell, Serjt. had obtained a rule to set aside the demurrer as frivolous, against which Gaselee, Serjt. was to have shown cause, but it was agreed that the case should be argued upon the validity of the demurrer itself.

Gaselee, Serjt.—The traverse in the replication is too large. It puts the defendant upon proof that the parties accounted concerning all matters in dispute, whereas it is sufficient if they accounted concerning the bill of exchange, and one other cause of action. It is no answer to say that the replication merely follows the plea, for in Palmer v. Ekins (2 Strange, 818) it is said: "It is no answer to say, that the defendant has traversed in the words of the declaration; for unless it be materially alleged, he is not to follow it." (Stephens on Pleading, 282; Goram v. Sweeting, cum notis, 2 Sandd. 207, a, last ed.; Basen v. Arrol, 6 M. & W. 559; Com. Dig. Pleader, G. 15.) Besides, the issue is immaterial. If the plaintiff accepted the 40*l.* it is no matter whether they accounted. The proper traverse would have been to deny the taking of the 40*l.* in satisfaction.

Channell, Serjt., was not called on.

TINDAL, C. J.—The plea, as it appears to me, consists of two matters of fact; the accounting and the payment of the balance. Unless the plea contained both these, it would furnish no answer to the action. The plaintiff has a right to take issue upon either of these;—upon the accounting, for instance, as he does here. The defendant says, "We accounted together concerning the bill of exchange, and all other claims and demands." The plaintiff follows him, and denies that any such accounting took place. But then the defendant objects, "You have followed me too closely; you were bound to confine your answer either to the bill of exchange, or to that and some other subject of account." To this there is a very short answer: if the plaintiff had so replied, the other party would speedily have turned round upon him, and said, "There were other claims between us, and the accounting respecting them reduced the debt to the small sum which I have stated in my plea." I think, however, that the issue is properly taken. All the cases cited are where the traverse is to an allegation in the declaration, not to its full extent material. That has nothing to do with a distinct allegation in the plea, upon which the defendant chooses to stake his defence.

The rest of the Court concurring.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

HAMMOND v. COLLS.

Practice—Amendment.

Where judgment had been given for the defendant upon a demurrer to a replication twelve months ago, the Court refused to allow the plaintiff to amend upon payment of costs.

This was an action of trespass. The declaration contained five counts. The eighth plea was pleaded to the first and second counts, and the tenth plea to the third and fourth counts of the declaration. The replication to each of these pleas was demurred to specially, and after argument the replication to the tenth plea was held to be good, but judgment was given for the defendant upon his demurrer to the replication to the eighth plea, on the ground that the traverse in the replication was too large. These demurrers were argued and judgment given in Trinity Term, 1846. (See Hammond v. Colls, 14 Law J. N.S. C.P. 288.)

Manning, Serjt. now moved for a rule to show cause why the plaintiff should not be at liberty to amend his replication to the eighth plea upon payment of costs, or why he should not be allowed to insert another count in his declaration. He mentioned that under certain circumstances the Courts had allowed amendments, even after writ of error brought.

TINDAL, C. J.—We do not allow additional counts to be inserted two Terms after service of declaration. We ought not to permit an amendment in the pleadings a year after the subject-matter has been disposed of.

Rule refused.

DOE. dem. BAILEY AND OTHERS v. FOSTER.

A memorandum between A B and C D, "that provided a licence can be obtained from the lord of the manor, A B will grant, and C D will accept, a lease of certain premises for 21 years, and pay the rent, &c. and that until such lease shall be executed, the said yearly rent shall be payable and recoverable, by distress or otherwise, in like manner as if the lease had been executed," is not a lease but an agreement merely.

Where a party is let into possession under such an agreement, a notice to quit, given by an agent, in the name of A B, E F, G H, and J K, is a good notice.

This was an ejectment to recover certain copyhold property, in the parish of St Mary, Walthamstow, in the county of Essex. The declaration contained four demises:—1. That of Bailey and Allan, churchwardens, and Collard and Jensen, overseers of St.

Mary, Walthamstow. 2. That of James Pistor (previous copyholder). 3. That of Webber and Budd. 4. That of Stoker and Bailey. The defendant had been let into possession of the premises under the following memorandum:—"June 23, 1842—Memorandum of agreement between H. F. Gadsden, as agent for, and on behalf of, Webber and Budd, churchwardens of the parish, &c. of the one part, and John Foster, of the other part, the said H. F. G. provided a licence can be obtained from the lord of the manor, but without any right for Foster to require the consent or sanction of the poor-law guardians, agrees to grant and execute, or cause to be granted and executed, a lease of all that, &c. (describing the premises), to hold to the said Foster, for the term of 21 years, from Midsummer-day next, at and under the clear yearly rent of 30*l.* payable quarterly, such lease to contain the usual covenants, &c. and Foster agrees to accept the lease and sign a counterpart, and to pay for the same, &c. and until such lease and counterpart shall be executed, it is agreed that the said yearly rent shall be payable or recoverable, by distress or otherwise, in the same manner as if the lease or counterpart had been executed." This memorandum was signed by the defendant.

On the 24th December, 1844, a notice to quit, requiring the defendant to give up possession of the premises at Midsummer-day next, but not saying to whom possession was to be given, was served upon the defendant, and purported to proceed from Messrs. Hindman and Howard (attorneys) "as agents for and on behalf of Webber and Budd, late churchwardens, &c. and Stoker and Bailey, present churchwardens, and Wigram and Taylor, present overseers, &c." A verdict was found for the plaintiff at the trial, subject to several objections, and a rule had been obtained by Byles, Serjt. for a nonsuit or a verdict for the defendant, against which,

Channell, Serjt. (with him Booth) shewed cause.—All the demises but the third were now abandoned, and the objections thereupon remaining to be argued were, first, that the memorandum of June 23, 1842, was an actual lease, and being merely stamped with an agreement stamp was inadmissible in evidence; secondly, as to the sufficiency of the notice to quit; thirdly, that the demise was improperly laid.

On the part of the plaintiff, the following cases were referred to: Doe dem. Coore v. Clare (3 T. R. 739); Hayward v. Hansell (6 A. & E. 265); Bicknell v. Hood (5 M. & W. 104); Hope v. Booth (1 B. & Ad. 498); Doe dem. Jackson v. Hiley (10 B. & C. 885); Doe dem. Higgs v. Terry (4 A. & E. 274); Gouldsworth v. Knights (11 M. & W. 337).

Byles, Serjt. (with him Ogle), for the defendant, and in support of the rule, referred to Bacon's Abridgment, Leases, K.; Pincro v. Judson (6 Bing. 210).

TINDAL, C. J.—The plaintiff is entitled to recover on the third demise. This is not a lease, but an agreement merely. There seems to have been some doubt who were the lessors, and Webber and Budd agree subordinately to receive the rent, in case a lease cannot be obtained. Webber and Budd being churchwardens, and having let the defendant into possession, their right never shifted, and the tenant ought to have obeyed the notice to quit which was given him. The defendant has shewn no other party in whom the legal estate vested.

COLTMAN, J.—The parties had some difficulty about a future lease, and in the mean time agree to take the best terms they can get. They therefore consent to a tenancy so long as they can agree. Whatever title Webber and Budd had at the time they have now, because there has been no legal transfer of their legal estate. Their title by estoppel is as good as ever.

MAULE, J.—The notice to quit was quite good, although persons joined in it who had nothing to do with it.

CRESSWELL, J. concurred. Rule discharged.

HOLDEN v. THE LIVERPOOL NEW GAS AND COKE COMPANY.

Where a gas company were in the habit of supplying gas to a private residence, and there were inside the house a pipe and a stop-cock, by means of which all the gas could be prevented from escaping, the tenant left the house, giving notice to the company that no more gas would be required, but omitting to turn off the stop-cock; the company took no steps to prevent the gas from entering the house, and an explosion took place: Held, that the defendants were not liable in this case for negligence for the damage occasioned to the owner of the house by the explosion, as it was the duty of the tenant to have turned off the stop-cock.

In this case a rule had been obtained for setting aside the nonsuit, against which, in Hilary Term last, Channell, Serjt. (Crompton with him), shewed cause; and Sir Thomas Wilde (J. Henderson with him) supported the rule.

The case is fully stated in the subjoined judgment, which was now delivered by TINDAL, C. J.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court. The plaintiff in this case having been non-sited upon a trial that came before my brother Cross-well at the Liverpool assizes, a rule to show cause was granted why such nonsuit should not be set aside and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection. The declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed of a house, and that the defendants were possessed of large quantities of dangerous gas, and that the defendants took so little and such bad care of the gas, that it passed into the house of the plaintiff, and exploded and damaged the plaintiff's house. The defendants pleaded the general issue, "not guilty," and the learned judge ruled, on the evidence brought forward, that the injury was not occasioned by the neglect of any duty cast by law upon them, the defendants. We think, on the facts proved at the trial, such direction was right. The plaintiff was the owner of a house which had been let out to successive tenants, the last of whom had been in possession for about two years, the house having been supplied with gas by the defendants during the whole time of his tenancy by means of pipes and fixings, which were put up and fixed within the house at the expense of the plaintiff—the landlord—and all of which were his property. The last tenant had quitted the house about ten days before the explosion took place. Previously to his quitting, he gave notice to the company that no further supply would be wanted by him, and requested them to remove the lamp from the dining-room, which was his property. The plaintiff left the house in the care of a servant on the 29th of March, and there was no appearance of the pipe having been left improperly, and there was no such of gas in the house. No explanation was given as to the mode in which the escape of the gas, or the explosion which took place on the 8th of April, was occasioned; but it might fairly be inferred that the inside pipe between the gas-meter and the burner had been cut by some wrong-doer, who had entered the house during the time it was empty, and during the interval between the days. The mode by which the gas was conveyed to the house was a tube or pipe, which communicated with the main in the street, and which passed through the outer walls into the meter, and from thence supplied two lamps in the house, which were fitted up with proper stop-cocks fitted to each. There was a stop-cock to each between the inside of the wall and the meter, of which the tenant had the key, and he could stop the gas entering the house altogether, if such stoppage was required; but the company had no stop-cock to the gas at the outside of the meter. On the part of the plaintiff, it was contended that it was the duty of the defendants, on notice by any tenant of the house that the supply of gas was no longer wanted, to turn off the gas completely from the house; that they had no right to introduce the gas into the house after such notice, and that if an outer stop-cock in the street was absolutely necessary for the purpose, it was their duty to have provided such stop-cock accordingly; and if such duty was cast by law on the defendants, the direction of the learned judge was undoubtedly wrong, as no such stop-cock was provided. On looking at the Act under which this company was formed, no such direction appears to have been given to the company by the legislature, though it appeared in evidence that a different company had been formed in the same town, and that such company had used an outer stop-cock in the same way, but they had no authority, as it appears to us, to do so; and as the legislature is silent on this point, the common law would impose no precise duty on the defendants, or any other duty than that which is expressed in the doctrine generally held, the duty of using proper and sufficient care in the supply of gas. Now, looking to the liability of the defendants in this point of view, it appears to us that the injury sustained by the plaintiff is not solely attributable to the want of due care on the part of the defendants, but that the plaintiff has, by his own voluntary act, been contributory to it himself. The plaintiff knew that the pipe which brought the gas into the house still remained as before, with the stop-cock in the inside of the house, which would prevent the gas from being supplied to the house, if properly turned off; and the house being without a tenant, was under his own charge and care. We think, therefore, the plaintiff was himself wanting in ordinary care, in not seeing that the stop-cock in the inside was closed, which would effectually have prevented the gas from escaping; and this defence appears, as we think, open to the defendants, under the general issue, on the decision in the case of Bridge v. The Grand Junction Railway (3 M. & W. 344). We, therefore, think the nonsuit right, and the rule for setting it aside must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

Wednesday, June 3.

HUTTON v. THOMPSON.

On an action of debt on a judgment, a plea that a fi. fa. had issued on the judgment, indorsed to levy part of the sum recovered, and that that writ had been executed, and the money received under it paid over to the plaintiff, is bad on general demurrer. Plea.—The issuing of a fi. fa. indorsed to levy 15*l.* and a levy of the same, and payment over to the plaintiff.

General demurrer.

Manning, Serjt. was to have argued in support of the demurrer; but the Court, having intimated a strong opinion that the plea was bad, called on Channell, Serjt. who abandoned the argument.

MAULE, J.—You are trying to make this mere indorsement on the fi. fa. as effective as a release under seal.

TINDAL, C. J.—The plea is clearly bad.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, May 28.

EVANS v. WATSON.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule, calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the Master should not review his taxation, on the ground that he had improperly allowed the expenses of a witness, summoned from abroad, at the rate of 7*s.* a day, for 300 days. Widdis v. Brasier (3 Dowl. 499) was referred to.

Rule to show cause.

TILT v. LOANES.—Sir Theo. Wilde, Serjt. moved to put off the trial, upon affidavits that material witnesses were abroad.

Application granted.

WALLIS v. BROWN and ANOTHER.—Byles, Serjt. showed cause against the rule obtained by Allen, Serjt. for setting aside the appearance entered for one of the defendants. The question turned entirely upon the credit due to the different affidavits.

Rule discharged.

SUMMERS v. OSMEN.—Dewling, Serjt. moved for a rule, calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the Master should not review his taxation, on the ground that the Master ought to have allowed the defendant the costs of making a judge's order, which the plaintiff had failed to obey, a rule of Court.

Rule to show cause.

SABENT v. WRIGHT.—Allen, Serjt. moved to enter up judgment upon a warrant of attorney, more than a year old.

Rule absolute.

SIGGARS v. PAYNTER and ANOTHER.—Channell, Serjt. (with him J. Brown), showed cause. Talford, Serjt. in support of the rule.

Rule absolute for a new trial, upon payment of costs.

ELSTON v. GASCORNE.—Shee, Serjt. was to have shown cause. Channell, Serjt. (with him Wordsworth), to have supported the rule for a new trial. In consequence of an intimation annexed to his report by the judge who tried the case.

Rule discharged.

GIBSONS v. ALIBON.—Channell, Serjt. (with him Bovill), showed cause. Shee, Serjt. (with him Petersdorf), in support of the rule for a new trial. The action was case for maliciously holding to bail. The judge who tried the cause, though he thought that want of reasonable and probable cause was not proved, had declined to decide that point, and had left both that question and the question of malice for the jury. After argument upon the facts, the Court now thought that the judge ought to have held, and to have told the jury, that there was no reasonable or probable cause for holding the plaintiff to bail.

Rule absolute.

Friday, May 29.

SPECIAL PAPER.

TUCKWELL v. MORRIS.—Channell, Serjt. appearing for the plaintiff, and no one appearing for the defendant.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

CARE v. MAUDE.—Talford, Serjt. for the plaintiff. Channell, Serjt. for the defendant, admitted that he could not support the demurrer.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

ROBERTS v. JUSTINE.—Talford, Serjt. for the plaintiff. No one appearing for the defendant.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

DORMAY v. BORRADAILE.—Channell, Serjt. (with him F. Lee and Campbell), for the plaintiff. Sir Theo. Wilde, Serjt. (with him R. Palmer), for the defendant. Cur. adv. vult.

REG. v. HEMSWORTH.—Talford, Serjt. moved that it might be referred to the Master, to examine the defendant upon the interrogatories, and to report to the Court.

Rule absolute.

Saturday, May 30.

DAVIES v. LOWNDSE.—Talford, Serjt. moved to respite the jury process in this writ of right until next Term.

Application granted.

TOWERS v. TURNER.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the judge's order for a writ of trial, and all subsequent proceedings, should not be set aside, and why a repleader should not be awarded. There were several issues, but the order for a writ of trial, and the writ of trial itself, commanded the sheriff to try the issue. The cause had been tried before the under-sheriff, and at the trial the defendant appeared by counsel. One of the pleas was a plea of payment of 10*l.* in full satisfaction and discharge. The plaintiff replied that "the defendant did not pay the sum of money made ad form. as in the said plea mentioned." A repleader was desired, because the replication was not "that the defendant did not pay the sum of money in the said plea mentioned modo ad form."

Rule refused.

PRICE ET UXOR v. JAMES.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule for the plaintiff to show cause why the rule for a new trial should not be discharged. The rule for a new trial, upon payment of costs, had been made absolute last Term, but there had been no service of the rule, and no appointment to tax costs.

Rule to show cause.

COUTLAS v. BOWES, Clerk.—Talford and Channell, Serjts. (with them O'Malley and Wells), showed cause against the rule for a new trial. Sir Theo. Wilde and Byles, Serjts. (with them Prendergast), supported the rule.

Argument adjourned.

Monday, June 1.

ELY v. SMITH.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to show cause why the judgment of non pros. signed herein, and all subsequent proceedings, should not be set aside at the cost of the defendant. The writ had been served and appearance entered in last vacation; and it was contended that the plaintiffs had the whole of the present Term in which to declare. Stat. 13 Car. 2, at 2, c. 2, s. 2, and Foster v. Prynes (6 M. & W. 664), were quoted.

Rule to show cause.

COUTLAS v. BOWES.—Argument concluded.

Cur. adv. vult.

DONALDSON, Clerk, v. HANSON.—Dewling, Serjt. (with him M. Smith), showed cause. Channell, Serjt. (with him Fitzherbert), in support of the rule.

Cur. adv. vult.

DONALDSON, Clerk, and OTHERS v. FORSTER.—Channell,

Serjt. (with him Bovill), showed cause. Byles, Serjt. (with him Ogle), in support of the rule. Argument adjourned.

Tuesday, June 2.

Re BULL.—Allen, Serjt. moved for a rule calling upon one of the Commissioners of the District Court of Bankruptcy at Leeds, and upon the gaoler of York Castle, to show cause why the bankrupt should not be discharged from custody. The application was substantively the same with that made in the Bail Court in the same case in last Term (LAW T. Vol. VII. p. 117), and met with the same result.

Rule refused.

DONALDSON, Clerk, v. FORSTER.—Argument concluded. (Reported in another part of this paper.)

Rule discharged.

PIGGOT v. EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY COMPANY.—Channell, Serjt. (with him Bovill) showed cause. Shee, Serjt. in support of the rule. It was an action on the case for negligence, whereby some stacks of the plaintiff had been set on fire by sparks from the steam-engines of the defendant. Evidence had been received, that on occasions different from that upon which the negligence was said to have taken place, large sparks had been thrown by the engines to a considerable distance. It was objected, upon moving for a new trial, that this was evidence of misconduct upon the part of the defendants at different occasions from that which furnished the present action, and therefore inadmissible. Upon this point, and upon the ground that the verdict was against evidence, the rule was granted. The judge who tried the case now reported that the evidence had been given to show that the steam-engines were capable of throwing sparks to the distance at which the stacks stood from the railway. The case was argued on the other point. Rule discharged.

Wednesday, June 3.

Rule to show cause.

DONALDSON, Clerk, v. EYER.—Channell, Serjt. (with him Wilde), for the plaintiff. Talford, Serjt. (with him Bovill), for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

JOLI and ANOTHER v. STEWART.—All the paper books having been delivered by the plaintiff, and the defendant not having paid for his copies, Manning, Serjt. prayed the judgment of the Court.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

HATWARD v. BENNETT.—Byles, Serjt. for the plaintiff. Talford and Channell, Serjts. for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

REVES v. GROOM.—Talford, Serjt. moved to set aside the appearance entered for the defendant, and all subsequent proceedings, on the ground that the defendant had not been served with process.

Rule to show cause.

Thursday, June 4.

SMITH and ANOTHER, Executors, v. EARL OF CHARLEVILLE.—Channell, Serjt. moved for leave to sign judgment in the sci. fa. hercin. He mentioned that the affidavits were entitled as this motion is, and not in the original action which had been brought by the testator.

Application granted.

SAME v. EARL OF MORNINGTON.—Channell, Serjt. made a similar motion to the above.

Application granted.

FRANCIS v. DODSWORTH.—Manning, Serjt. moved for a rule to show cause why the demurrer or rejoinder to the replication herein should not be set aside for duplicity.

Rule to show cause.

GALLY v. ROUND.—Shee, Serjt. (with him Bramwell) was to have shown cause. Byles, Serjt. (with him Leach) to have supported the rule. After reading the report of the judge who tried the case.

Rule discharged.

TEMPEST v. KILLNER.—Talford, Serjt. (with him Cleaveley) for the plaintiff, consented to have the verdict reduced to 2*5*l. Byles, Serjt. (with him Altherton) for the defendant.

Rule accordingly.

BOWLEY v. BELL.—Byles, Serjt. (with him Archbold), showed cause. Channell, Serjt. (with him Altherton), in support of the rule.

Cur. adv. vult.

REVELL v. WETHERELL.—Byles, Serjt. asked for judgment upon a plea of non tiel record to an action on a judgment. The judgment was recovered upon May 14, 1845, the date assigned to it in the declaration; but the record had been entered as of Easter Term, contrary to rule H. T. 11 Geo. 1, whereby it is ordered that issues are to be entered on record of the Term in which they are joined. Issue in this case was joined in Hilary Term 1845. The Court ordered the record to be amended, and gave

Judgment for the plaintiff.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

KNIGHT v. THE MARQUIS OF WATERFORD. Construction of 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 100—Tithes—What is a modus within the meaning of the words "DE MODO DECIMANDI."

This was an action of debt for not settling out tithes, and came before the Court on a motion for a new trial on the ground of misdirection.

At the trial it appeared that the plaintiff was the rector of the parish of Ford, in which parish there were certain lands belonging to the defendant and his ancestors.

The action was brought to recover triple the value of tithes claimed to be due to the plaintiff in respect of those lands.

The defence set up was, that a modus of 40*l.* had been from time immemorial, and still was, payable by the lord of the manor of Ford to the person in lieu of tithes, and that the tithes were paid to the lord.

The payment of this modus was proved for 63 years, and also that the lord had enjoyed the tithes during that time, whereupon the learned judge directed the jury that the case fell within 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 100, and the jury found for the defendant. Sir F. Kelly, S.G., Sir Theo. Wilde, Q.S., Knowles, Q.C., and Crompton, showed cause, citing Pigot v. Heron (Cro. El. 596, 1 Moor. 483); Dykes v. Thompson (1 Wood. 513, 1 Eagle & Y. 692); Phillips v. Prytherick (4 Wood's Decr. 73, 3 E. & G. 1273); Pigot v. Simpson (Cro. El. 763); Stamford v. Donbar (13 M. & W. 892). Watson, Q.C., Addison, and Manisty, appeared to support the rule. The arguments appear so fully in the judgment, that it is unnecessary to set them out here.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHIEF BARON.—In this case, which was heard before my brothers, Parke, Alderson, Rolfe, and myself, on Thursday and Friday last, the principal question was elaborately argued by the learned counsel on both sides. That question was, whether the prescription or right under which the defendant insisted on his non-liability to tithes in kind to the plaintiff, the rector, was a modus exemption, or discharge of tithes under the 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 100, s. 2, and rendered, therefore, valid by user for two incumbencies, and three years for a third, and such further time as would make sixty-three years under the provisions of that Act. We are all of opinion that it was not a modus exemption or discharge, and consequently that there must be a new trial. The jury found that the defendant and his ancestors had, during the term mentioned in that statute immediately preceding the commencement of the statute, held and enjoyed the lands in respect of the title for which the action was brought, freed and discharged of title by reason of a payment to the lord of the manor of Ford of an annual sum of 40*l.* payable as and for payable, &c from time immemorial in lieu and compensation of all manner of tithes within the said manor; and that it was part of the same custom that the lord, in consideration of the payment of 40*l.* should leave to him, his heirs, and assigns, a tenth of all titheable matters in the said manor, or any part thereof; and upon this finding, with reference to which the opinion of my brother Rolfe was given on the trial, the question arises, whether it be within the statute or not. The right they have claimed, if it has existed beyond time of legal memory, would (subject to an objection which will be afterwards noticed) be valid upon the principle laid down in the cases of Pigott v. Heron (Croke, Eliz. 519; Moore, 483); Pigott v. Simpson (Croke, Eliz. 763); Philips v. Prytherick (3 Eagle and Young, 1273); and Dykes v. Thomson (Eagle and Young, 692); and though in the first-mentioned case of Pigott v. Heron, according to the report in Croke, the Court appears to have treated the prescription as consisting of two parts: the first, a modus by the lord for himself and his tenants, to bar the parson from demanding tithes in specie; and the second, a prescriptive right in the lord to have the tenth thereof, &c. not as tithes, but a temporal right, analogous to a rent service of his tenants; yet the judges of the court, in the subsequent case of Pigott v. Simpson (Croke, Eliz. 763) and Lord Coke's statement in the Bishop of Winchester's case (2 Coke, 45 and 46), put the decision upon a different ground, and treated the prescription as giving the lord a title, by the special matter to title as such, as appurtenant to his manor, with a right to sue for them in the spiritual Court, and this appears to us to be the true principle of this decision. The prescription gives a title to the lord to the tithes themselves lying in the manor, and the only payment to the rector is the principle or prescriptive rent (as it is termed in Dykes v. Thomson), given as the, or compensation for the, parcel of tithes; and this view of the case was evidently taken by the House of Lords on the appeal from the decree of my brother Alderson, reported in 11th Clark and Fennelly, their Lordships having treated the claims of the defendant, not, as properly speaking, a modus, but a claim of title to a parcel of tithes as against the parson, and therefore they reversed the decree; a court of equity not lending its assistance in a case of dispute of title to the tithes; this being, therefore, a prescription title to a parcel of tithes, and the immemorial payment, a prescriptive rent for them, the Act appears to all of us not to apply; the pension is not a modus according to the legal definition of that term, De modo Decimandi, 13th Coke, page 12. It is not given in satisfaction of tithes, for the occupier has always been liable to pay tithe, and has paid them either by render or retain, though not the rector; a modus and a liability to pay tithe in kind for the same land cannot co-exist; they are perfectly inconsistent; nor do we think that this is a modus in the sense of that term, as used in the Act, for we see no reason to believe that the framers of the statute used it in any other than its proper sense; and this appears by section 1, which provides that if a modus has been paid for thirty years, it may be defeated by shewing the payment of tithes in kind, that is, the payment to any one; and the word must be used in the same sense in the subsequent part of the clause, so that a modus in the sense given by the Act is as inconsistent with the render of tithe, as it is according to its proper legal acceptance; and it is clear that this is not an exemption "or discharge," the lands of which the title is claimed in this suit being liable to the payment of tithe according to the alleged prescription.

In truth, there is a contest between the lord and the rector as to the tithe to a parcel of tithes admitted to be due from the occupier to some one; the statute never was meant to apply to disputed tithes, to the ownership of tithes, or to make a bad tithe to a parcel of tithes good. It was enacted, in cases of the occupier who had not paid tithe in kind at all, but been totally exempt, or had paid something in lieu of it, for a long period, and relief is given by shortening the time of prescription, and thus facilitating the proof of his title to exemption, or to pay tithe otherwise than in kind. We all, therefore, think that there must be a new trial, when the question to be decided on the whole evidence will be, whether the payment of 40*l.* a year was immemorial or not. If it should be proved to be such, the question will arise whether the prescription for the lord and his assigns to take the tithes be good, a point which has not been fully argued before us, and upon which we do not feel called upon to give any opinion in the present stage of the proceedings. Therefore, the rule for a new trial must be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

BROWN v. WILKINSON.

In an action against the owner of a ship for an injury to another vessel by collision, the measure of damages recovered may be commensurate with the value of the ship doing the injury at the moment the injury is caused.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff to recover compensation from the defendant, as owner of a certain vessel which had come in collision with a ship of the plaintiff, and had done her considerable injury. The defendant having suffered judgment by default, a writ of inquiry to assess damages was executed before the Secondary, when a verdict was given for the plaintiff for 259*l.* which was the full amount of the injury done. Upon this a rule was obtained by Fish, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new inquiry had, or a verdict entered for nominal damages, on the ground that the damages were excessive. The grounds for this motion were, that the 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, limited the damages to be recovered to the value of the ship inflicting the injury, and the freight then accruing due to her owners. Now in this case, the vessel doing the injury had, at the time she inflicted the injury on the plaintiff's ship, given herself a death-blow, and had immediately sunk; it was therefore contended, that her value at that time was to be the amount of damages, and as she had received her death-blow, it could be but nominal.

Watson, Q. C. and James, now (Feb. 11) shewed cause, and contended that the measure of damages was to be taken at the time of the collision, and not afterwards; that it must be taken, in fact, at a time when, being a floating body capable of motion, and governed by the defendant's agents, she committed the tortious act for which compensation was sought; they also contended that as the defendant had suffered judgment by default, he could not now raise this defence, but should have done so by a prope plea.

Martin, Q. C. and Firsh, contra.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

PARKE, B. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—In this case, the plaintiff sued the defendant, as the registered owner of a certain brig, for negligence and improper navigation of his vessel, by which the plaintiff's vessel was injured. The Court gave judgment by default; at the inquisition, the jury assessed the damages at 251*l.* Mr. Fish moved, in Michaelmas Term last, for a new inquiry on the ground that by the same strike that did the damage to the plaintiff's vessel, the defendant received her death wound, and soon after sunk. The defendant contended that his vessel was of no value at the time of the plaintiff's loss, and that by the 53 Geo. 3, c. 159, s. 3, the damages ought to have been merely nominal. In this (Hilary) Term cause was shewn by Mr. Watson, who submitted that the rule should be discharged, and the case was fully argued. It was contended that the object of the statute, the 59 Geo. 3, c. 159, s. 3, was to give to British shipping all the protection in navigation from loss that foreign states extend to theirs. This protection goes to the extent of permitting the owner, at the end of a voyage, to give up the vessel in its then state, with a full satisfaction to the parties, and if it be lost the owner is altogether exempt from the benefit of insurance beyond the surplus. Supposing the act to have been framed on this principle, and to have this effect, we ought to know the time it happened, the defendant's vessel having been totally lost immediately after the defendant was really exempt from all liability. If this argument were well founded, the consequence would be, the defendant ought to plead; at the same time the total loss is matter of defence to the action, although the judgment by default admits all liability to pay some damages. But the argument cannot be supported. It may indeed be true the legislature, by giving relief by a series of statutes on the subject, ending with the 53 Geo. 3, had the former statutes in view, and proceeded in their spirit, but they have not introduced the liability in the provisions of this statute. There is not a word in the statutes protecting shipowners from all liability if the ship is lost, whatever the result be, or to take away the benefit to any parties of insurance under any circumstances whatever; all that they have done is to restrict the liability of the shipowner to the value of the ship and freight at the time, but no more. The Act specifies the value shall go to the extent to which the owner is to be liable in case of single loss, and restricts the liability to that value simply when there are several losses; it gives the right to the parties who can present a description of their value to have it apportioned among the several claimants. The statute, in the event of one loss only, does not give the shipowner a right to file a bill, and to go to a court of equity to decide on the value of the ship, but it leaves the amount of damages sustained to be settled by a court of law, and hence in the present case the defendant must be liable to some amount, and must shew only some amount or some value of ownership. At what time the value was to be established, if the matter was res integra, is a question that is not one of much doubt; the Court of Queen's Bench have already decided that the value was not to be calculated at the time of the commencement of the voyage, but at the time of the loss; and in so doing, they have not adverted to the circumstances that arise from several losses. Then the statute in this section clearly contemplates some value to be paid into court; and if there are several losses at the time, and what loss as to value, is to be given. This section is not considered by the Court in W— v. Dixon (2 B. & Ald. 2), and probably if it had been adverted to, it would have said that is the value at the commencement of the voyage, which is that which naturally would be the amount of the shipowner's insurance, and which would be the same whatever the number of accidents there might be during the voyage, and that would have been the value contemplated by the statute. From the practice in the Court of Admiralty, no light can be thrown on this question, for that Court has another and different jurisdiction. But with regard to the question whether the value is to be taken as the measure of liability, as the point has been decided by the case referred to, we pause before we overrule that authority. It is not, however, necessary for this Court to do so; for we think, according to the true meaning of that decision, that the value at the time of the loss to which the damages are restrained, is the value at the moment the loss commenced by the collision with the defendant's ship, when the injury is inflicted, and that cannot be reduced by the consideration that the defendant's vessel is about to founder, at which time it really is of no value. It would be to exempt the defendant altogether, which the statute does not contemplate under any circumstances. Now, in this case, it is immaterial whether we take this value, or the value of the defendant's vessel at the commencement of the voyage, as the limit of the damages to be given; for the present, we think that the verdict given is correct, and that the rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

LAW v. THOMPSON.

*Where plaintiff's particulars of demand claimed a sum of money to be due for plaintiff's services as clerk to the defendant; and by his amended particulars the plaintiff claimed the amount as due for his services, "after the rate of 200*l.* per annum;" and at the trial the evidence shewed a sum to be owing from the defendant to the plaintiff for services performed by the latter, such services to be paid for by a certain per-centage on the defendant's business: Held, that there was a material variance between the particulars and the case established by the evidence, and that the plaintiff ought to have been nonsuited.*

Joseph Browne shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained by Jervis, Q. C. to enter a nonsuit in the above case—the rule having been moved on the ground that the plaintiff's particulars of demand were not supported by the evidence. The action was in assumpsit, and by his particulars the plaintiff claimed the sum of 450*l.* for his services as clerk to the defendant from August 1837, to Oct. 1839, inclusive. The defendant applied for further particulars, and in his amended particulars the plaintiff added the words, "after the rate of 200*l.* per annum." The pleas were, non assumpsit, the Statute of Limitations, and a set-off; and by the plea of the Statute of Limitations, the plaintiff's claim was reduced to the sum of 100*l.* for which amount the verdict was given; but the evidence established a claim on the part of the plaintiff for commission, to be estimated by a certain per-centage on the amount of business done by the defendant in each year.

Joseph Browne.—There is no doubt that in this case the plaintiff was bound by the wording of the amended particulars, but the question is, whether or not the defendant was misled by them. [ALDERSON, B.—A salary is totally different from a payment by commission at so much per cent.] It is submitted that the defendant was not damaged by the incorrect mode of stating the claim. [ALDERSON, B.—The principle on which you make your claim is wrongly set forth; the contract between the parties for a payment by way of salary would be quite different from a contract to pay a per-centage.] If the defendant has been misled by the plaintiff's particulars, the proper course is for him to bring that fact under the notice of the Court by affidavit; here no such affidavit is produced. (Hurst v. Watkins, 1 Camp. 66; — v. Bower, ib. 69, note.) If it appeared to the Court, either by affidavit or from the nature of the misstatement, that the defendant was, or must necessarily have been, misled, the Court would, no doubt, hold that the plaintiff was bound by his particulars. (Lambirth v. Roff, 8 Bing. 411.) At all events, the rule should be for a new trial, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his particulars.

Jervis, Q.C. and Crompton, in support of the rule.—In Mahon v. Ward (Law T. Jan. 1846), there was no substantial variance; here there is. It is not indispensable that there should be an affidavit by defendant that he was misled. Many cases occur in which the judge would nonsuit; but in which the defendant, knowing, as he must do, what the contract really was, could not have been misled.

PLATT, B.—Suppose a declaration with two counts for goods sold and delivered, and for freight, and suppose the particulars are for goods sold and delivered only, that would not be sufficient. Here the defence prepared would be materially influenced by the particulars, because the Statute of Limitations would apply differently according to the nature of the contract between the parties; that is, whether the plaintiff's claim be for a salary or for commission. (Holland v. Hopkins, 2 B. & P. 243.)

POLLOCK, C.B.—In this case there is a substantial variance between the case set up at the trial and the plaintiff's particulars; a payment by way of commission is very different from a payment by way of salary. I think the plaintiff ought to have been nonsuited; but as the jury have found a verdict for the plaintiff, which is stronger than an affidavit of merits would have been, there should be a new trial, on payment of costs by the plaintiff.

ALDERSON, B.—In determining whether the particulars in any case are sufficient, we must consider not merely whether the defendant has, in fact, been misled, but whether they were calculated to mislead him; that is, whether a reasonable man would, under the circumstances, be probably deceived by the particulars—that is the true test.

ROLF, B.—I concur. The question is this, are the particulars calculated to mislead? It has often been held, that particulars were sufficient, which, although wrong, were not calculated to mislead.

PLATT, B. concurred.

Rule absolute for a new trial, on payment of costs by the plaintiff. The plaintiff to be at liberty to amend within a week after taxation.

BEST v. ROBINSON.

In an action for goods sold and delivered, the particulars delivered were for goods bargained and sold: Held no variance.

This was an action for goods sold and delivered, money lent, and on account stated. The particulars were for goods bargained and sold. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff.

Pearson moved for a nonsuit, or a new trial, on the ground of a variance between the declaration and particulars of demand, and contended that the plaintiff had no right to give evidence of goods sold and delivered under a particular for goods bargained and sold.

ALDERSON, B.—This is no variance; goods sold and delivered are necessarily bargained and sold; no child could be deceived as to what he had to meet under this declaration and particular.

ENGLEMAST v. MOORE.

It is necessary in an attorney's bill that the court in which the business is alleged to have been done should be stated.

This was an action of debt on an attorney's bill.

Plea—That no bill was delivered.

Replication, as to a portion of the amount claimed—that a bill was delivered; and as to the residue, a personal delivery of the bill to the defendant.

The rule was moved on the ground that the court in which the business had been done was not specified.

Jervis, Q.C. and Simon, having shewn cause,

Martin, Q.C. and Hugh Hill, in support of the rule for a nonsuit.—The plaintiff was bound to deliver a bill of costs shewing clearly the nature of the transaction in respect of which the business was transacted for which the claim was made; it must be such that the party charged may know, on looking at the bill, whether the charges made in it are correct or not. This must be so, because those charges are different in the different courts; and unless this information be given in the bill, the defendant could not judge as to the propriety of referring the bill to taxation, or whether, if referred, a sixth would be taken off or not. They referred to the remarks of Lord Denman, C. J. in Martindale v. Faulkner (10 Jurist, 161), and the statutes 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, s. 23; 6 Vict. c. 73, ss. 7, 37, 42.

By the COURT.—The bill ought to contain a statement of the court in which the business was done, not necessarily in the heading of the bill, but in some part of it. The object of the statute is, to allow the plaintiff a month for consideration, as to whether he had better refer the bill then to taxation or not. Unless the name of the court is stated, it would be impossible for the defendant to know whether, on taxation, a sixth would be taken off; it is therefore necessary that the information required should be given.

Rule absolute.

SPECIAL PAPER.

HENRY v. GOLDNEY.

A plea in abatement is bad which states that the debt sued for was contracted by the defendant jointly with A B, and that an action for the recovery of the same debt is pending against the said A B.

This was an action brought against the defendant, who was one of the provisional directors of a railway company, for money alleged to be due from him to the plaintiff.

Plea, in abatement.—That the debt was contracted by the defendant jointly with one A B, and that an action for recovery of the same debt had been commenced, and is now pending against the said A B. Demurrer.

Crompton, in support of the demurrer, was stopped by the Court, who called on Bramwell, who appeared in support of the plea.—If the Court hold this plea to be bad, the decision will tend to encourage a multiplicity of actions on joint contracts, and will put it in the plaintiff's power to cause great vexation and embarrassment to the contract of parties; the rule of law, nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa, applies emphatically to such a case. [ALDERSON, B.—How so? That maxim would apply if this defendant were sued jointly with the other party in the action previously commenced; but it does not apply where the two actions are against different parties. POLLOCK, C.B.—You ought to have pleaded the nonjoinder in abatement first, and when the plaintiff had issued his writ, and declared against both the contract of parties, you might have pleaded the pendency of the former action, which would have been good.] If this plea is held to be bad, an absurdity will be occasioned by the stat. 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 8. That section enacts, that "no plea in abatement for the nonjoinder of any person as a co-defendant shall be allowed in any court of common law, unless it shall be stated in such plea that such person is resident within the jurisdiction of the court, and unless the place of residence of such person shall be stated with convenient certainty in an affidavit verifying such plea." Now, if an action were brought against one of several joint contractors, of whom one was abroad, the party sued could not plead in abatement, by reason of the above enactment, and the plaintiff might consequently bring separate actions against the other parties residing within the jurisdiction of the Court. The observations of Alderson, B. in King v. Hoare (13 M. & W. 494, 498), are strong in my favour. There it was held that a judgment (without satisfaction) recovered against one of two joint debtors, is a bar to an action against the other; there the learned baron intimated that a creditor cannot, in the case of a joint contract, have several suits against the different parties to such contract. [ALDERSON, B.—Why cannot the defendant here plead in abatement? If he did so, the plaintiff would probably discontinue the first action.] He must in the first place apply to the Court for a rule to discontinue. [POLLOCK, C.B.—Yes; but that is grantable ex debito justitiæ.] In an action in form, ex delicto, it is submitted that a plea framed like the present would be good, and there the defendant could not plead in abatement. [POLLOCK, C.B.—You may sue each of several joint-stock proprietors, but a judgment recovered against one would be an answer to a second action.] Boyce v. Baileiff, (1 Camp. 58, 2 Cas.); Boyce v. Douglas (cited ib. s.); Earl of Bedford v. Bishop of Exeter (Hobart, 137); and the judgment of Holt, C.J. in 1 Shower, 75, are authorities in support of this plea. [ALDERSON, B.—This plea of the pendency of another action depends on the principle that a man shall not be twice vexed for the same cause of action, but that does not apply where the two actions are against different persons.] This plea may be supported on another ground, viz. that the plaintiff seeks to recover a chose in action; and if the plea were not allowed, the plaintiff might recover this chose in action from each of several parties. The absurdity involved in this would be apparent if the claim were for a specific chattel, or for land. The main argument, however, for the defendant is, that before the Act of Wm. 4, above-mentioned, only one action could be brought on a joint contract, and if an action had been brought against each co-contractor there would have been an adequate remedy, whether this plea were held to be good or not; whereas, since the statute, this plea would afford the only defence where one of the contracting parties was out of the jurisdiction. The remedy by audita querela would be altogether ineffectual, because the parties might all be taken in execution at the same time.

POLLOCK, C.B.—This plea is bad. The same party is not, in this case, twice vexed for the same cause of action, and the maxim which has been so much relied upon does not apply; when a contract is joint and several, each of the contracting parties may be sued upon it, but then the debt or damages can be only once recovered by the plaintiff. All the defendants, except that one against whom execution was first issued, would have relief in some shape or other. Torts are, in their nature, joint and several; and Lord Ellenborough's dictum, as cited from Campb. R. is extra-judicial and incorrect. This dictum, it is true, has been adopted by Mr. Chitty, in his work on Pleadings, but it is not supported by any authority. Here the party first sued should have pleaded in abatement. As he omitted to do this, it remained for the present defendant to plead in abatement. Prior to the statute 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, only one action against all jointly could have been brought if the parties had taken the proper steps. That Act was framed without reference to the rules of pleading, and the object of the 8th section was to prevent the injustice and embarrassment which were so frequently occasioned to a party suing, by reason of his nonjoinder of all the contracting parties. This Act has nothing to do with the present question, and, independently of its provisions, I hold this plea to be bad.

ALDERSON, B.—The defendant ought to have pleaded in abatement; and, on the other party being made a co-defendant, a plea should have been pleaded of the pendency of the action previously commenced against him. This would have been a good defence as to both the defendants.

ROLF, B.—King v. Hoare has no bearing on this case; that was decided on the principle that the prior action had proceeded to judgment. The rule transit in rem judicatam was held to be applicable.

PLATT, B.—If there were execution against one of the defendants only, he could of course sue his co-defendants for contribution. It is quite true that the law, according to the cases cited, will not permit a double vexation, but here the defendants in the two actions are different persons. There must be judgment for the plaintiff. Judgment for the plaintiff.

STEADMAN v. HOCKLEY.

A certificated conveyancer has no lien on deeds sent to him, and in respect of which business is to be done by him.

This was an action of debt, to which the defendant pleaded that he was a conveyancer duly certificated under the statute, and entitled to fees as such—that the deeds sued for were delivered to him for business to be done respectively by him—that he did this business, and that a sum of money was due and owing from the plaintiff to him for and in respect of such work and labour, and that defendant was entitled to hold the deeds for the money so due and owing. To this plea the plaintiff demurred specially; the plea did not set out any agreement between the parties, or any custom by virtue of which a lien could be claimed; the question therefore was, whether the common law recognized the lien contended for set up by the defendant.

Bovill, in support of the demurrer, remarked on the inconvenience which would result if such a lien as that set up by the plea were allowed; he cited Scarf v. Morgan (4 M. & W. 270, 282); Saunders v. Bell (3 Cr. & M. 304); Eyre v. Shelley (6 M. & W. 269, 274).

Udall, in support of the plea, referred to Holles v. Clavidge (4 Taunt. 807), and contended that a right to lien existed wherever an article was bailed, under circumstances bringing it within the 5th Act of Parliament mentioned in Coggs v. Barnard (Lord Raym. 909). Unless from the nature of the thing bailed there would be something inconsistent with a lien. He also cited Jackson v. Cummins (5 M. & W. 342); Poucher v. Norman (5 D. & R. 648); Ex parte Grove (3 B. N. C. 304); Phillips v. Robinson (4 Bing. 106); Leeds v. Hancock (4 C. & P. 152).

The Court, however, without hearing Bovill in reply, gave judgment for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Saturday, May 30.

O'BRIEN v. BRYANT.—This was a rule of Greenwood's calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the defendant should not have leave to plead a plea that had been disallowed by Mr. Baron Platt at chambers, on the ground that it amounted to the general issue. It was, in substance, that the defendant had not spoken the word "black-leg" with regard to the plaintiff in the sense alleged in the declaration. Lush now appeared to shew cause, but said that he could not distinguish this case from the one cited by Mr. Greenwood of M'Gregor v. Gregory (11 M. & W. 387), and therefore he must be content to submit to the rule being made absolute.

Rule absolute.

HEAD v. SAYER.—V. Lee moved to set aside the judgment herein on the ground of irregularity.

Rule nisi.

CLARK v. LEVI.—Ogle moved for leave to plead the bankruptcy of the plaintiff. This had been refused by Mr. Baron Platt at chambers, on the ground that it was not an issuable plea. He cited Wallis v. Hallett (5 Bing. N.C. 485).

Rule nisi.

WALSTON v. SPOTTISWOODE.—Martin, Q.C. v. Lee, and Peacock, were heard for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Monday, June 1.

DEAN and CHAPTER of ELY v. CASE.—Martin, Q.C. (Woolidge, with him) was heard for the plaintiffs; Watson, Q.C. (Bagle, with him) contr.

Cur. adv. vult.

MAYOR of SALFORD v. ACKERS.—Crompton was heard in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

BERTON v. WOOD.—Humphrey, Q.C. moved to set aside a distringas on the ground that the writ on which it issued was four months old, and consequently a nullity.

Rule nisi.

BRENNAN v. WILKINS.—Crowder, Q. C. in support of the defendant; Wills, contra. Cur. ado. vult.

Thursday, May 28.

MORRIS v. CORPENTON.—T. W. Saunders moved for a rule to rescind the order of Mr. Baron Alderson directing the defendant to be held to bail, and for the defendant's discharge from the custody of the Sheriff of Herefordshire, on the ground that the order had been improperly obtained. Rule nisi.

FENWICK v. BOYD.—Watson, Q. C. showed cause; Unthank, contra. Cur. ado. vult.

LOUISE v. DOUGLASS.—Martin, Q. C. and Hill, showed cause. Jervis, Q. C. and Greenwood, contra. Cur. ado. vult.

Friday, May 29.

LAVINIA v. DOUGLASS. Rule discharged.

WALSTAN v. SPOTTISWOODE. Part heard.

Tuesday, June 2.

M'LAREN v. BERRY.—It was arranged that this case should be heard by Rolfe, B. at chambers.

In the matter of GEORGE SALTER.—Jones moved for a rule, calling on George Salter, an attorney, to shew cause why he should not account to the Overton Friendly Society, in Denbighshire, for money received by him on behalf of the society, by whom he had been employed as attorney. Rule to shew cause.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

FILBY v. HODGSON.—This case was tried before Pollock, C.B. at the last sittings in London. The question turned entirely on the evidence given at the trial as to reputed ownership of certain goods. There was no point involved in it of any interest, and the Court thought that the rule for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, should be discharged. Humphrey, Q.C. and Cleahy, in support of the rule. Martin, Q.C. and Dowdell, contra. Rule discharged.

HILLS v. CHOMELAND.—This was an action of trespass, but involved no point of the slightest interest to the professional reader.

*Rule absolute for a new trial, unless the plaintiff consents to enter a stat processus within a week.*

BISSELY v. BOYDELL. Part heard.

Wednesday, June 3.

SPECIAL PAPER.

The judgment in Heale v. Baldwin; Rosburgh v. Blunt; Rosburgh v. Broke; and Rosburgh v. Thomson, followed that in Henner v. Goldney, above reported. There was no argument, the point being the same in each case.

TORRE v. WAT.—The judgment in this case followed that in Allport v. Nutt (14 L.J. N.S.; C.P. 272; S.C. 3 Dowl. & L. 233). Hayes, for the demurrer. Cowling, contra. Judgment for the defendant.

CHARLTON v. LINDSEY. Part heard.

GRAHAM v. SPALDING.—This case was not argued. Judgment for the plaintiff.

RAIL COURT.

Thursday, May 28.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

BEALE v. SHARP.

Where a defendant absconds to avoid his creditors generally, the Court will (upon the proper calls and appointments being made) grant a distringas to compel an appearance, though it does not appear that the defendant has absconded himself to avoid the plaintiff in particular.

Miller moved for a writ of distringas to compel an appearance under the following circumstances. The usual calls and appointments had been made, and the writ left with the wife of the defendant, who stated that, nine weeks before, her husband had absconded with a considerable sum of money to avoid his creditors, to whom he was much indebted. It was now submitted, that notwithstanding there was no direct evidence that the defendant kept out of the way to avoid the process of the plaintiff in particular; yet, as he was keeping from home with the view of evading his creditors generally, it amounts to the same thing. (Channing v. Cross, 9 Dowl. 118; Archer v. Brindley, 9 Dowl. 38.) Application granted.

Saturday, May 30.

BURROWS v. GABRIEL AND OTHERS.

A party attending for the purpose of serving a writ of summons saw a person whom he understood to be a servant, and gave her the copy, intending afterwards to apply for a distringas, and did not, therefore, in doing the writ within the three days, as required by the rule of Court. It afterwards appearing, that the person to whom the copy writ was so delivered was the defendant, the Court granted leave to enter an appearance without such indorsement.

Charnock moved for a distringas to compel an appearance, in respect of two of these defendants, and for leave to enter an appearance for the third. It appeared, that the defendants in this case were three females, and that many attempts were made to serve them with process; and that on the 21st of March, a copy of the writ of summons was left with a person at the house of the defendants, who appeared to be a servant. It was subsequently discovered that this person was Ann Gabriel, one of the defendants; as regarded her, therefore, the leave of the Court was sought, under the circumstances, to enter an appearance, notwithstanding the writ had not been indorsed as to the service within three days, as required by the R. G. M. S.W. 4, s. 3, and for a distringas against the other two defendants. (Brook v. Edridge, 3 Dowl. 642.)

*Application granted to enter an appearance, and for a distringas.*

Monday, June 1.

CLUTTERBUCK v. HULLS.

An attorney of the Courts at Westminster was arrested as he was returning from the County Court, where he had been professionally engaged. On an application for his discharge, upon an affidavit, stating that he was a certificated attorney, duly admitted in the superior courts, but not stating that he had signed any roll of attorneys in the County Court. Held, that in the absence of any proof to the contrary, it sufficiently appeared that he was entitled to practise in such court, and being therefore privileged, was ordered to be discharged.

F.V. Lee showed cause against a rule for discharging the defendant out of the custody of the sheriff of Gloucestershire. It appeared that the defendant, being a certificated attorney, and duly admitted in the Courts at Westminster, was arrested as he was leaving the County Court of Gloucestershire, where he had been professionally engaged as an attorney in several actions. The affidavit upon which the motion was made stated the fact of his being duly on the roll of attorneys of the Queen's Bench, but did not state that he had signed the roll of attorneys of the County Court pursuant to the 6 & 7 Vic. c. 73, s. 27. It was now contended, that the defendant not having sworn that he had signed the roll in the County Court, had not shewn himself entitled to practise there, and was therefore not privileged.

Miller, contra, argued that the defendant had sufficiently shewn that he was an attorney authorized to practise in the County Court; that it was not to be inferred that there is any roll of attorneys in that Court (as he believed there was none); and that being a duly admitted attorney in the superior Courts, it should be presumed that he had done all that was requisite to practise in the County Court, particularly as he was actually practising there, and that the privilege from arrest, in the present instance, is that of the client and not of the attorney. Cur. ado. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN now delivered judgment as follows:—It seems to me that the defendant is entitled to his discharge on the ground of privilege; for without discussing whether it is or is not necessary to warrant an attorney in practising in the County Court, that he should have signed the roll (my impression being that it is not necessary), I think that enough is shewn by his affidavit to justify his discharge, for it is said that he was an attorney of the Courts at Westminster, and that he was acting as an attorney in the County Court, and it was for the other side, therefore, to have shewn that he was not entitled so to practise, and this particularly, as the privilege is not so much that of the attorney as of the client. The rule, therefore, will be absolute for the defendant's discharge. Rule absolute.

Tuesday, June 2.

ROGERS v. VANDERCOMBE.

When a plaintiff is under terms to try peremptorily at a particular sitting, and fails to do so, the Court has power to enlarge such undertaking, and will do so upon good cause shewn.

M. Smith shewed cause against a rule to discharge a rule for judgment, and to enlarge a peremptory undertaking. The facts were these; the plaintiff having neglected to try within the usual period, a rule was obtained for judgment, as in case of a nonsuit, which rule was discharged upon a peremptory undertaking to try at the sittings after last Hilary Term. Shortly before the cause would have come on, the plaintiff made an application for its postponement, on the ground of the absence of a material witness; it was then, however, discovered, that a material defect existed in the record, whereupon the cause was struck out. In Easter Term a rule absolute was obtained for judgment, as in case of a nonsuit, for not proceeding to trial pursuant to the peremptory undertaking; and then the plaintiff moved for and obtained the present rule. It was now contended, that the Court has no functions to grant the plaintiff any further indulgence, for that by the 14 Geo. 2, c. 17, which regulates these motions, it is enacted, that if, after time has been granted the plaintiff for the trial of his issue, "he shall neglect to try such issue within the time or times so allowed him, and in every such case, the said judge or judges shall proceed to give such judgment as aforesaid;" and that the plaintiff having neglected to comply with the terms of his peremptory undertaking, the judgment against him must be absolute. (Ward v. Turner, 5 Dowl. 22, 2 Dowl. & L. 640.)

Crowder, Q.C. argued that the term "neglect," in the latter part of the section, must be construed as in the former part, and must be taken to mean wilful neglect; that here there was no neglect—the plaintiff intending to try, but being unable to do so on account of a defect in the record, independently of which the plaintiff was prepared to shew at the trial a good ground of postponement. (Lumley v. Dubourg, 5 Dowl. & L. 80.) Cur. ado. vult.

His lordship this day gave judgment, holding that the word "neglect," in the latter part of the 1st section of the 14 Geo. 2, c. 17, should be construed with the same latitude as the same word in the former part, and must be taken to mean intentional neglect; and that, as in the present case it appeared that the plaintiff had really intended to try his cause, he was entitled to the indulgence which he sought on payment of the costs incurred.

Rule absolute; the plaintiff peremptorily to go to trial at the adjourned sittings after Term, and to pay the costs of the day, including the summoning and returning of the special jury, and of this application.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, May 28.

HOMER v. BARNETT.—Wordsworth moved to set aside the copy and service of the writ of summons, it having been served more than 200 yards from the borders of the county into which it issued. Rule nisi.

In the matter of the arbitration of BRECH v. THOMAS v. F. Williams moved to set aside the award herein. Rule nisi.

Ex parte The late SHERIFF OF BRECON.—M. Smith moved to set aside the attachment against this party with costs, or for a stay of all proceedings. Rule nisi.

REAR v. BRINSON AND ANOTHER.—Petersdorf moved, on the return of the certiorari herein, to quash the order of petty sessions. Rule nisi.

Friday, May 29.

REG. v. EATON AND ANOTHER.—Couch moved to re-open a rule and make it absolute, the terms of the rule in the cause enabling him to do so on default of payment of a sum of money. Rule opened and made absolute.

REG. v. THE TOWN COUNCIL OF LICHFIELD.—Whitmore, Q.C. shewed cause against a rule for enlarging the time for the return to the writ mandamus herein. Whitmore, contra. Rule enlarged upon terms.

CLUTTERBUCK v. HULLS.—F. V. Lee shewed cause against discharging the defendant out of custody. Miller, contra. Cur. ado. vult.

HARTLEY v. MILBURN.—Unthank shewed cause. T. W. Saunders, contra. Rule discharged upon a peremptory undertaking.

Saturday, May 30.

DAVIS v. JONES AND ANOTHER.—Jervis, Q.C. moved for a rule calling upon the defendant, Catherine Jones, to pay the amount of the sheriff's possession money. Rule nisi.

WOOD v. NEW.—O'Brien moved for a rule to amend the judgment roll by inserting the Christian name of the defendant. Rule nisi.

BRADSHAW v. ALLANDER.—Prendergast moved for a new trial herein (which was tried before the judge of the Sheriff's Court, when a verdict was found for the defendant), on the ground of the verdict being against evidence, and for misdirection. Rule nisi.

LIFSCOMBE v. TURNER.—T. W. Saunders shewed cause against a rule for reviewing the Master's taxation. Brown, contra. Cur. ado. vult.

Monday, June 1.

EGG v. WHITE.—Parry moved for a rule to discharge the peremptory undertaking in this case, and for leave to enter a stat processus, the defendant having become bankrupt since the giving of the undertaking. Rule nisi.

Wednesday, June 2.

WHITWELL v. WAYTE.—Buill moved to set aside a distringas to compel appearance, on the ground that the writ of summons had never come to the defendant's hands, was not left at his dwelling-house, and that he had no knowledge of its having issued. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE COMMISSIONERS OF EXCHES.—Martin, Q.C. moved to discharge the rule for a writ mandamus obtained herein last term, and for a fresh rule, some error having been made in the former application. Rule nisi.

DEER v. RAPERDEN.—Crowder, Q.C. moved to dispend the plaintiff (for vexatious proceedings), and for the costs of the day, in not trying his action pursuant to notice. Rule nisi.

REG. v. CHORLEY.—Moody moved for a certiorari to remove an indictment, found at the last Tanaton Assizes, for obstructing a footway, in order that it may be tried on the civil side at the Assizes, to the end that there may be a special jury and a view. Writ granted.

CHRISTIAN v. SPILSBURY.—Gray moved for a rule to set aside the appearance entered ex. abs. and all subsequent proceedings, on the ground that the defendant was not served with process. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE THAMES HAVEN DOCK AND RAILWAY COMPANY.—Lush moved for a writ mandamus commanding the above company to pay over a sum of money, recovered for damages, and, if necessary, to make a call on the shareholders for the amount. Rule nisi.

REG. v. HOARE.—Greenwood moved for a certiorari to remove from the Dorset Sessions an indictment found there against the defendant for giving false answers, under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 34 (the Municipal Corporation Act), at the municipal election for Bridport. Writ granted.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Thursday, May 14.

(Before Mr. Commissioner EVANS.)

Re THOMAS KNIGHT.

A commissioner may not properly adjourn the hearing of a disputed adjudication beyond the time allowed by the statute.

Thomas Knight appeared on the fifth day after service of the adjudication, under a fiat in bankruptcy issued against him, to shew cause against its validity, on the ground that an act of bankruptcy was not sufficiently proved. The objection was allowed.

Turner, for the petitioning creditor, proposed to prove other acts of bankruptcy, and asked for adjournment of the hearing, in order to enable him to produce witnesses, citing 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 23.

Cook, for the bankrupt, objected that the Commissioner had no power to adjourn the hearing, the five days allowed by the statute having elapsed.

His Honour said that the circumstances of the case would justify the adjournment asked, but he doubted his power to grant it. He would, however, take the opinion of his brother commissioners upon the point.

Having done this,—

His Honour said that there was a difference of opinion as to their power of adjourning a disputed adjudication to a period beyond the five days appointed by the statute. If the argument were to continue to midnight, the point would press for decision; but the adjournment being asked for another day, he doubted his power to grant it, and must therefore annul the adjudication.

REPORT OF THE LORDS COMMITTEE ON THE BURDENS ON LAND.

THE resolutions with which the Committee have summed up their report have been already presented to our readers. They allude briefly to diverse plans which had been suggested for diminishing the cost of conveyancing. We now extract from the body of the report itself the paragraphs relating to Law Reforms recommended, as they have an immediate interest for the readers of the LAW TIMES.

BURDEN OF TITHE COMMUTATION.

The committee are of opinion that the tithe commutation rent-charge operates as a burden on the land which is subject to it; inasmuch as a certain amount measured in produce must be paid, whatever may be the nature of the cultivation or the return made by it. The value of the crops, without reference to the natural qualities of the soil, being taken into consideration in fixing the basis on which the commutation rests, lands, which by artificial means were rendered highly productive during the seven years on which the commutation is based, have become in consequence permanently liable to a heavy rent-charge. Mr. Weall in his evidence states, that the high farming introduced at great expense in the parishes of Beddington and Wallington had raised the tithes during the years preceding the Commutation Act from 8s. 6d. per acre to 7s. and 8s. per acre. Mr. Bennett remarks, that the heaviest wheat-lands have the heaviest tithes upon them; thus imposing the heaviest charge where cultivation is the most expensive. Mr. Cramp says, the tithe in the parish in which he resides amounts to 17s. 6d. per acre; and Mr. Blamire, in answers 2,544 and 2,525, confirms the evidence of preceding witnesses, that the rent-charge amounts, in some cases, to more than one-half the rent; that one-third is not an unusual proportion; and that there are some rare cases where the rent-charge is equal in amount to the whole rent. On the supposition of a continued reduction in the amount of proceeds derived from capital invested in the cultivation of the land, it is self-evident that titheable land would be abandoned sooner than land which is tithe-free; and though the landowner has no claim whatever to the property of the tithe-owner, the tithe itself would in that case have the effect of diverting capital from its cultivation. The committee, therefore, submit to the consideration of the House the fact that, 4,000,000l. levied under the Tithe Commutation Act becomes payable out of the proceeds of the land before any portion of them is available or applicable to the profits of the capital invested in its cultivation. It is further important to consider the effect of this charge on the land in the case of a serious fall in the price of agricultural produce. Under the old law, the value of the tithe would correspond with that of the crop; but under the law of commutation it would take several years before the land would be relieved in the amount of its tithe.

INEQUALITY OF STAMP DUTIES.

The stamp duties levied under the head of deeds and instruments in 1844, amounted to 1,644,366l.; but a portion of this sum being derived from other sources, ought to be deducted before the burden affecting real property in that respect can be correctly estimated.

The committee, moreover, wish to direct particular attention to the important evidence given by Messrs. Senior, Stewart, and Baxter, on the unequal pressure imposed by the various Stamp Acts on dealings with real property. The last-named witness, Mr. Baxter, says, the stamp upon a 50l. sale (calculating a certain length of conveyance), would amount to twelve and a half per cent.; on a 100l. sale to five per cent.; on a 300l. sale to two and a half per cent.; on a 500l. sale to 1l. 14s. 3d. per 100l.; and above that sum one per cent.

COST OF CONVEYANCING.

The transfer, moreover, of real property is subjected by law to other difficulties, expenses, and inequalities, of a similar character. According to the evidence of the same witness, the expenses, including stamps, upon a sale of 50l. value, amount to no less than thirty per cent.; upon a sale of 100l. value, to fifteen per cent.; upon a sale of 600l. value, to seven and a half per cent.; upon 1,500l. five per cent. The committee are convinced that the marketable value of real property is seriously diminished by the tedious and expensive process attending its transfer. Nor is it only in the transfer of real property that the pressure of this burden is felt. It is a work of time to raise money on landed security, and the law expenses incident to the transaction are a considerable addition to the interest on the sum borrowed. The transfer of the debt or mortgage is also attended with serious expenses to the mortgagor; the process of discharging the land from one loan, and subjecting it to another, being both heavy burdens upon the proprietor. Mr. Baxter gives the following evidence on the expenses attending mortgages:—"A mortgage for 50l. would cost, in stamps and law expenses, thirty per cent.; a mortgage for 100l. would cost twenty per cent.; a mortgage for 450l. would cost seven per cent.; a mortgage for 1,500l. would cost three per cent.; a mortgage for 12,500l. would cost one per cent.; for 25,000l. it would cost 15s. per 100l.; and for 100,000l. it would cost 12s. per 100l."

LEGACY AND PROBATE DUTY.

Freeholds are exempt from legacy and probate duty. The committee have not been able to ascertain the exact amount of legacy and probate duty paid by leasehold property; but they feel it their duty to draw attention to the fact, that leaseholds are not only liable to the stamp duties on dealings with the property inter vivos, but also to the probate and legacy duty. Nor can the committee avoid reminding the House, that legacy duty is paid in every case where the testator has devised his lands to be sold; and, according to the evidence of Mr. Baxter, a solicitor of very great practice, nine wills out of ten in the middle ranks of life convert the whole land into personality for the purpose of division. The evidence of Mr. Presley tends to confirm the previous evidence of Mr. Baxter, that a considerable portion of the legacy duty is raised on freeholds devised to be sold for the purpose of division. The witness states that Mr. Trevor, the controller of the legacy duty, estimates it (the portion raised on freeholds devised to be sold), at five-twelfths of the amount. Assuming the legacy duty to be 1,200,000l. he estimates the proportion of duty arising from real estate at 500,000l. "I think," the witness continues, "he has put it too high. I do not think that more than a fourth, or scarcely a fourth, of the 1,200,000l. legacy duty arises from land." The witness, however, does not include leasehold property in his calculation; which, being liable to both probate and legacy duty, must be added to the above-mentioned estimate, before we arrive at the full portion of the legacy duty arising out of the proceeds of the land.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT, REMOVAL AND RATING.

The agricultural witnesses complain also of the restriction in the choice of labourers imposed on the farmer by the law of settlement; and Mr. Coppock, the clerk of the Stockport Union, bears evidence to the hardships and expenses occasioned by the present state of that law.

The question having been raised as to the principle adopted in rating railways to the poor-rate, the committee have examined Mr. Coope and Mr. B. Russell on the subject; and it appears from their evidence that the uniform principle of assessing all fixed property at the net rent or clear amount at which it can be let, has not been departed from. Railways are rated as improved land, on the net rent a company of carriers would give for the occupation of the same; and, as the rents of a railway would depend materially on the profits derived from the carrying trade on it, the profits are taken as a guide to arrive at the net rent. Mills are rated on the same principle, namely, the rent for which the mill, with its appurtenances, would let. Considering the changes occasioned by the creation of real property, as well as those taking place in the relative value of different descriptions of real property, the committee need scarcely point out the advantage as well as justice of periodical and uniform valuations.

SHORT FORMS AND REGISTRATION OF DEEDS.

The committee earnestly request the attention of the House to the important evidence of Mr. Stewart, on the evils proceeding from the length of deeds connected with real property; and while the committee acknowledge the benefit of the act passed last session respecting outstanding terms and short deeds, they are at the same time anxious to impress on the House the necessity of a thorough revision of the whole subject of conveyancing, and the disuse of the present prolix, expensive, and vexatious system.

The committee have received evidence on the advantages of a registration of deeds in Scotland and Ireland, and on the great facilities afforded by means of similar institutions to dealings with real property in foreign states. The committee, however, limit themselves to the expression of their opinion, that a registry of title to all real property is essential to the success of any attempt to simplify the system of conveyancing.

Such a report from such a quarter cannot fail to lead to early and considerable changes materially affecting the interests of the Profession.

ARREST IN EXECUTION.—In the proposal by Mr. Serjeant Manning to the Lord Chancellor for the amendment of the law of bankruptcy, and insolvency, the question of retaining arrest in execution is considered. The learned serjeant is of opinion that it is "inexpedient" in its present form. He says, "The propriety of allowing arrest in execution at the mere will of the judgment creditor has been so often discussed, that I do not trouble your Lordship with a repetition of the arguments which have been used upon the subject. It appears to be an inconvenient mode of getting at the property of the debtor, where there is property, and it often operates as a great hardship and oppression where there is none. It is true that it not unfrequently happens that the assets of an insolvent debtor are too artfully covered to be capable of being brought within the reach of any process against property, or of being affected by any legislative provision for transferring the property of the debtor to an assignee; and it is equally true that coercion by imprisonment of the person is at present the only mode by which such assets can be effectually reached. Imprisonment, however, often fails in producing the necessary discovery, whereas the inducement which now exists for concealing property, in the belief that it may hereafter be safely produced and enjoyed without disturbance under the false name of after-acquired property, would, it is conceived, be in a great degree removed by the establishment of a continued modified liability on the part of the debtor. Imprisonment for debt can have only two legitimate objects in view—the protection of the creditors against the malversations of the debtor, and the protection of the public against a recurrence of misconduct on the part of the debtor and others. It is conceived that, upon the adoption of the enactments now suggested, the dangerous power of imprisonment at the sole discretion of the creditor may be safely abolished, without regard to the formal distinction which now prevails between debts secured by judgment or other matter of record, and debts which are not so secured. Debtors who have misconducted themselves, and those who, upon reasonable grounds, are suspected of an intention to defraud their creditors, will be secured both for the preservative and for the penal jurisdiction of the court, and means will be afforded, as well to protect creditors against the dissipation, alienation, or concealment of that which is in truth their property, as to punish the misconduct by which their losses have been occasioned." Mr. Serjeant Manning is of opinion that arrest upon process of execution upon judgments in civil actions should be permitted only where such judgments are founded upon a malicious, wilful, or fraudulent act or omission, injurious to the person, to the reputation, to the property, or to some domestic relation of the plaintiff. These views are opposed to those of Mr. Commissioner Law, as expressed in his Report on the Law of Bankruptcy and Insolvency, wherein he describes a debtor as a "wrong doer." Mr. Serjeant Manning speaks of that report as an able one, and containing valuable information, of which he had availed himself. The question of "arrest in execution" is one of some importance, and should be well-considered before it is interfered with. In strict morality a debtor is a "wrong doer," but by branding him with the epithet, he may descend to something worse, whereas, by affording him a measure of hope, he might, by honest exertions, recover his position.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

No subject relating to the administration of the law has been mooted since our last, save a few cases on points of secondary interest, which will be found among the reports.

EXEMPTION OF LITERARY INSTITUTIONS FROM RATES.

Our readers will perceive that the construction of this statute has again been under the consideration of the Court of Queen's Bench, and another society, which had been supposed by Mr. Tidd Pratt to be entitled to exemption under the statute, declared not to be within its provisions. We do not feel inclined to quarrel with this decision, although the object of the British and Foreign School Society, or rather of the Normal school then more particularly considered, is a much nearer approach to the purposes of literature and science than those of the Religious Tract Society. But the decision may be fully supported upon the words of the Act, which require that the society shall be "instituted" for purposes, &c.; for it is clear that the Normal schools were not the sole objects of the society, which, as its name imports, is directed much more to assist the spread of education by grants of money and subscriptions, than to forward the science of education, for which it was, though unsuccessfully, contended, that the Normal school was supported. As, however, all the judges concurred in expressing their great regret that the statute was so vaguely and imperfectly expressed; and Lord Denman flinted that it was even doubtful whether Mechanics' Institutes, which unquestionably were most in the view of the framers of the Act, are within it, we do trust that the Government will, of their own accord, bring in a Bill to amend and explain the Act; or, if they will not do it, that the subject will be forced upon them by some active member of the House of Commons. Where are the friends of education and well-wishers to the improvement of the humble classes of society?

Besides, however, this special decision, the Court came to an important conclusion as to the power of appeal given by the 6th section. They admitted that the words were very obscure, but held that there were two periods, at the option of the appellant, viz. either within four months of the first assessment after the filing of the certificate, or within four months of the first rate made after the society distinctly claimed exemption; although what would constitute a claim of exemption is nowhere defined by the statute.

It seems to us somewhat remarkable that, among the proposed interpretations of the words, "such exemption claimed," it was not suggested that it referred to the power given to a society to go to the Sessions, in case the barrister refused the certificate, and get their rules filed by the Sessions (sec. 5). We do not mean to say that this is clearly the meaning, but it is a meaning, and we apprehend that although there would be, this anomaly of an appeal from the Sessions to the Sessions, yet as the proceedings at Sessions under that section would be ex parte so far as the society, that the inhabitants would not be bound to acquiesce in such exemption. We certainly should have wished to have seen the decision of the Court upon this point, but it was not once mentioned.

It will be seen, also, from the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice, and Mr Justice Patteson expressed himself to the same effect, that the Act apparently does not give power to the barrister to decide what is within the statute absolutely, and that the certificate is only one, among several conditions, which must be fulfilled, and that the absence of any one of these would render the certificate useless. It was mentioned by Mr. M. Chambers that the very point was now pending before the Court in an action of trespass (see supra, 145).

All these difficulties and doubts upon what was intended to be a boon to the middle and lower classes of society, and an encouragement to intellectual pursuits, imperatively shew the necessity of a speedy amendment of the law, which should include, in justice, a ratification of the certificates already granted under certain provisos and qualifications.

REMOVAL.—EXAMINATIONS.

We wish to draw particular attention to the case of Reg. v. Ratcliffe Caley, reported in our last week's number (supra, 782). It shews that each examination for an order of removal should be complete in itself, and with all the requisites of jurisdiction, and that it will not suffice to take several upon the same sheet of paper, although the heading of each after the first is, touching the above-named settlement, and is dated on the same day, and at the same place, and signed by two persons of the same name, if it does not also shew that it was taken before a competent authority, in other words, that they were justices, &c.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.

STATISTICAL SOCIETY, April 20.—T. Tooke, Esq., V. P. in the chair.—The paper read was "On the Criminal Courts of the Metropolis, and their Operation," by J. Fletcher, Esq. Resuming the subject of criminal statistics at the point of the excess of juvenile offenders, made manifest by papers read before the society by the Rev. W. Russell, Mr. Fletcher gave an outline of the history, organization, cost, and operation of the police courts and higher criminal courts of the metropolis; endeavouring to discover whether, in their early treatment of early offences, some means might not be found to stem or to divert the tide of crime at its outset. The coroners' courts are the most ancient existing courts of police; and next to these in antiquity are the Lord Mayor's and that of the aldermen respectively. Beyond the limits of the City there were no justices of the peace but those included in the usual commissions of the several counties, until about fifty years ago. The Government then established the Bow-street Police-office, in which stipendiary magistrates were appointed to sit; seven other offices were created in 1792; and the Thames Police-office in 1800. Two other establishments in the eastern and western suburbs of the metropolis, each with two domiciles, have recently been added; and these eleven, with the two City courts of the Mansion-house and Guildhall, form the existing police tribunals. The annual expense of the whole metropolitan establishment, including 4,000*l.* for the superannuation of magistrates and officers, amounts to about 45,000*l.* of which nearly 10,000*l.* is defrayed by fines and fees, leaving 35,000*l.* to be discharged out of the public purse. The two city offices may be stated to cost about 6,500*l.* of which about 650*l.* is met by fees. Of about 48,000 persons, whose cases are in each year summarily disposed of at the metropolitan police-offices without the City, 20,000 are discharged, 15,800 fined, 1,300 imprisoned for periods not exceeding seven days, 3,000 above seven and not exceeding fourteen days, 5,000 above fourteen days and not exceeding a month, 2,000 not exceeding two months, 850 not exceeding three months, and only about 50 for higher terms, not exceeding six months. About 5,000 are annually committed for trial in the superior courts. The general or quarter sessions of the peace, held by the magistrates of each county and bailiwick, comprising different parts of the metropolis, were in full and uninterrupted operation, until 1834, when the Old Bailey Session, forming the court of gaol delivery for the City of London and county of Middlesex, was converted into the present Central Criminal Court for the whole of the metropolis and its neighbourhood in whatever county included. Such are the advantages of this court, which disposes equally of the most trifling and the most serious cases committed for trial, that it has absorbed a great portion of the business which formerly went to the sessions; and it was even debated in the Commons Police Committee of 1838, whether it would not be better to abolish the latter altogether, and divide their functions between the magistrates of police and the Central Criminal Court, to which six-sevenths of the criminal business is actually brought, while the parts of Surrey, Kent, and Essex within its jurisdiction are already wholly relinquished to its powers by the magistrates of those counties. To dispense with the second trials at the higher courts of juvenile offenders for petty larcenous crimes, at a great expense to the public in money, time, and annoyance, and to the further initiation of the young culprits in every degrading subterfuge, Mr. Fletcher suggested, not the abolition of the trial by jury in such cases, but rather its extension, in a modified form, into the police courts themselves, in like manner as it now exists in the County Court of Middlesex, since its extension, in 1836, to the recovery of debts not exceeding 10*l.* Thus, with a small jury of assessors serving for the day, the police magistrate might safely be intrusted with the disposal, at once, of the very petty cases which form more than one-half of the present business of the Central Criminal Court, which would thus be enabled to absorb the remainder of the criminal business of the Westminster and Middlesex Sessions of the Peace, without any express alteration in its constitution. These courts would thus cease to entail a heavy expense, while the police magistrates and police courts, whose daily influence upon the thoughts, feelings, and manners of the population is incalculable, would at once gain the support of a higher public opinion, which they merit, and the assistance of intelligent men of the middle classes, well qualified to deal with such cases as it is proposed to leave to them, and whom the sitting magistrates would array, on each occasion requiring their assistance, precisely as a judge arrays the jury of a superior court.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

We are assured that the Common Pleas is positively to be thrown open by legislative enactment during the present Session, the existing Serjeants to be compensated with patents of precedence. The effect will be still more to scatter about the leaders at the Bar, and to make suitors far more dependent upon their juniors, inasmuch as it will be impossible for them to rely upon the leader's presence when the cause comes on; and it will be impossible for certain men to confine themselves to particular Courts, because on their Circuits they must take the causes from any Court, and those they conduct on the Circuit they must fight also at Westminster. The first effect will be to flood the Common Pleas with business, not only because it has an excellent Bench, but because there will be an impression, that as it has little business, a case will be sure of a speedier hearing. For the same reason the Exchequer, as being now the most crowded court, will be for a time suddenly avoided. We throw out this hint, that the practitioner may take it into his calculation when he issues a writ. It will be seen that the Exchequer has disallowed the plea of lis pendens, in the case of an action for the same debt brought against several persons, liable jointly and severally, intimating that the proper course for the defendants to pursue was that we had ventured to recommend, namely, that judgment should be permitted to go against one of the defendants, and then that the rest should instantly plead that judgment in bar to their actions; and the Judges remarked that this may be done even purs darrein continuance. To bring up the heavy arrears of business before the long vacation, the Queen's Bench will sit for ten days, and the Exchequer for three weeks after term.

So heavy are the reports, that we are obliged again to omit a variety of leading articles, and every other matter that would bear postponement, and most probably we shall find it necessary next week to have another double number. Many long judgments have been given, and many more are expected daily.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

LEGAL DINNERS.—The annual grand meetings of the Societies of the Inner and Middle Temples have taken place. That of the latter society was held last evening, when the benchers and several of the judges, members of the society, mustered in strong force and partook of a grand entertainment in the hall, which, as usual on extra occasions, was densely thronged by members of the bar and "commoners" of the society, who, as usual at the annual great grand banquet, did honour upon the occasion to the Queen, in extra allowance of old port. On the 3rd instant, the periodic great grand dinner of the benchers of the Inner Temple took place in the hall of that society, and was attended by most of the judges, of whom there were the Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Baron Parke, Mr. Baron Alderson, Mr. Justice Patteson, Mr. Justice Williams, Mr. Justice Erle, Mr. Justice Cresswell, Mr. Baron Platt, the Master of the Rolls, &c.

MUNIFICENT BEQUESTS.—The late Samuel Barber, esq. of Walsall has bequeathed the following sums of money to the under-mentioned institutions:—To the General Hospital, Birmingham, 500l.; Queen Mary's School, Walsall, 500l.; Deaf and Dumb Institution, Edgbaston, 500l.; the British and Foreign Bible Society, 500l.; the Church Missionary Society, 500l.; the Church Pastoral Aid Society, 500l.; St. Peter's Church, Walsall, 200l.; the parish church of Cannock, 100l.; the Blue and National School, Walsall, 100l.—Wolverhampton Chronicle.

IRISH CHANCERY APPOINTMENTS.—This day the Lord Chancellor appointed his son, Mr. Henry Sugden, to the office of assistant-registrar of the Court of Chancery, in the room of Mr. O'Keefe, promoted to the office of registrar, rendered vacant by the death of Mr. Francis Prendergast. His lordship has also appointed his son-in-law, Mr. Reilly, as his private secretary, in room of Mr. Henry Sugden. The former office is permanent, the latter depends on the continuance of Sir Edward Sugden himself in the chancellorship.

Heirs-at-Law, Next of Kin, &c. Wanted.

[This is part of a complete list now being extracted for the LAW TIMES from the advertisements that have appeared in the newspapers during the present century. The reference, with the date and place of each advertisement, cannot be stated here without subjecting the paragraph to duty. To Readers and Correspondents.

We cannot insert, or notice in any way, any communication that is sent to us anonymously; but those who choose to address us in confidence will find their confidence respected. NEITHER CAN WE UNDERTAKE TO RETURN ANY MANUSCRIPTS WHATSOEVER.

LEX.—We are not aware of any special rule requiring two witnesses; there may be. If there is a doubt, the safest course is to have them.

LEX (Berwick).—Mr. Saunders's "Practice of Summary Convictions" will contain a number of forms and other matter not in the body of the treatise as it appeared in the LAW TIMES.

A SUBSCRIBER.—Forms of notices of claim and objection may be had at members' prices, with the name of the county or town printed, if a number be required, and the order be sent at once.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The volumes of the LAW TIMES, neatly, strongly, and uniformly bound, for 5s. 6d. each, with the name and address of the owner on the cover, 1s. extra, if sent to the office. If the numbers for binding be transmitted by the post, they must be tied in a parcel open at the ends, and contain some distinguishing mark by which it may be recognised, of which the publisher should be advised by letter and directed how he shall return the bound volume. Advantage may be taken of the same parcel to enclose other books for binding.

The numbers comprising the first volume of the VERULAM REPORTS of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases may also be transmitted for binding in like manner.

NOTICE.

The LAW DIGEST is now completed. Being stamped, it may be sent by post, or may be had, sewn in a wrapper, price 5s. 6d.

NOTICE.

The subscription for the current half-year is now due, and subscribers desirous of availing themselves of the great reduction allowed for pre-payment, should forward the same in the course of the ensuing week. The prepaid subscription is 1l. 5s. for the half-year, and 2l. 7s. for the year, being a reduction respectively of 25 and 30 per cent.

Post-office Orders must be made payable to Mr. JOHN CROCKFORD, Publisher of the Law Times.

TO READERS.

The Publisher will be obliged for information as to the whereabouts of one Mr. Richard Jackson, lately of Hull, solicitor. He has taken the Law Times up to within a few weeks, when it was stopped in consequence of a letter being returned indorsed "Left Hull." Immediate application was made to the postmaster to ascertain to whom he had been in the habit of delivering the papers addressed to Mr. Jackson. His reply is, that "all newspapers, as well as letters, arriving here, addressed to R. Jackson, esq. solicitor, Hull, are delivered at Miss Marshall's, Parliament-street, in this town, where he had an office for a long time, and at his request they were so delivered. I have this morning sent in there, and am informed a person calls there and redirects them, but his address cannot be given." As this is a very gross case, the Publisher will feel much obliged to any reader who could, in confidence, inform him where this Mr. Richard Jackson is to be found.

There is also a Mr. H. S. Pyke, who was formerly at Kendal, and afterwards at Newport, but is now, it is said, managing clerk in the office of some attorney in the country, information as to whose present residence would be esteemed a favour.

The Law Times has been sent for some time addressed to Mr. E. Bretherton, solicitor, Post-office, Old Swan, near Liverpool. Can any reader oblige with a line, stating if there be such a person, and where he is to be found?

CONVEYANCING.

THE reader must excuse the repeated return to this subject, on the score of its great and urgent importance to the future well-being of the Profession. Events are rapidly forcing on a change, and upon the manner in which it is met so much will depend, that timely forethought, while yet there is leisure for deliberation, may mitigate whatever of ill it may threaten, or even convert it into a good.

The summary of the recommendations of the Lords' Committee on the Burdens on Land, has been already submitted to the readers of the LAW TIMES. To-day we present to them extracts from the Report itself of all those passages in which questions are mooted affecting the law and the lawyers. From these it will be seen that the recommendations of the Lords are no hasty, inconsiderate suggestions, but the result of inquiry, and put forward with a positive view to their being carried into practice.

Another document published here last week, and which must have been read with interest, not only on account of its subject, but for the ability with which it was framed, is scarcely less ominous than the Report of the House of Lords. We allude to the Report of the Society for the Amendment of the Law, upon the practicability and propriety of abbreviating the verbiage of conveyancing, by the enactment of shorter forms, that shall have in law the same meaning. The Society now embraces almost all the distinguished lawyers of every party, and a considerable portion of the most influential of our statesmen. Whatever comes so recommended will be likely to receive the support of a Government always glad to have its labours relieved by the gratuitous aid of a body in whom it may place confidence, and it commands strength enough in Parliament to make opposition ineffectual. That Report was strongly in favour of short forms; but as strongly did it recommend that there should be no diminution of the rate of remuneration for legal bu-business done, and for this purpose that the mode of payment for conveyancing should be changed, and instead of a scale measured by number of words, the amount of skill and labour required should regulate the fees.

It is to this that we are anxious to direct the particular and early attention of the Profession. Seeing that there is little or no hope of retaining the present mode of payment, let them devise some other that shall equally secure to them that fair remuneration which is their right.

The Society, and its Short Forms Bill now before Parliament, propose a payment according to services. But the practical difficulty arises, how are these to be measured? It would rarely happen that all parties would set the same value upon the labour of one. There would be difficulties in permitting a man to be a judge of his own worth, and to charge accordingly; and the outcry among clients would be even greater than it is now, were a bill of costs to consist of so indefinite an item. For the purposes of business, it is essential that some sort of scale should be fixed by which, as the standard, a test may be applied in case of dispute. None has ever been suggested which would do absolute justice. In practice the costs never can be precisely measured by the labour bestowed. They are, and they will ever be, regulated, to a considerable extent, by the value of the property conveyed.

And it is the recollection of this tacitly established rule that induces us to recommend its adoption avowedly as the scale of costs in conveyancing. We mean not that it shall be sternly applied in all cases, whatever their peculiar features; but that the value of the property conveyed shall be the primary scale by which the solicitor shall be paid for the labour bestowed, where the case presents no extraordinary features. But where it can be shown that the title or the conveyance itself required unusual labour, then he should be entitled to demand such further fees for that extra work as the Master, on taxation, may think fit to allow.

We believe that some such plan as this would not only prove equally advantageous to the Profession with the present one of payment according to number of words, but that it would certainly give great satisfaction to clients. It may be averred, in opposition to it, that in fact the labour is not proportioned to the value, and that title and conveyance are as troublesome for a small as for a large property. This is true; but where a strictly accurate test is impossible, it is worth consideration whether that which we suggest is not, upon the whole, the best that could be devised, especially as it is the one now practically adopted in half the cases that occur, few solicitors making the same charges for a property of 100*l.* as for one of 1,000*l.* even although equal labour be bestowed upon both.

At all events, something should be done to prepare for coming changes. Mere dogged opposition will not long suffice to avert them. They must be met with counter-proposals and practical amendments, and thus they may be rendered harmless. But immense exertions among the Profession are necessary to insure a respectful hearing for their remonstrances.

SHAM LAWYERS.

HERE is an effusion of one of this pestiferous tribe, resident, we believe, in Blackburn. It is printed in red ink, to look as frightful as possible:—

SIR,—I am instructed by Mr. Geo. Whiston to seize all your goods and chattels, and to apply to you for a debt of 6*l.* due to him for goods, &c. Fall not at your peril. And if the same, together with all lawful costs and charges, be not paid to me, or to my client, within one hour from this date, an action will be commenced against you for the recovery of the same, under the provisions of the late Act of Victoria, chapter 127, and dated August 9, 1848, intitled, "An Act for the better Securing the Payment of Small Debts."

And for your information I hereby quote from the penal clause the following:—"Any debtor refusing to disclose every transaction respecting his property or the sale or disposal thereof, or having made away with his property for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, or of contracting more debts than he was able to pay, or who being in receipt of wages or salary, or other income, and shall refuse or neglect to pay such instalments as shall be fixed by the Court, for every such offence, and in respect of each and every such instalment, he shall be liable to forty days' imprisonment in the common gaol."

N.B. No imprisonment, under this Act, goes to extinguish any debt nor any instalment fixed by the Court, and by a late order of the Home Secretary, fraudulent debtors are limited to prison diet, and allowed to see their friends only once a week.

VERULAM PUBLICATIONS.

As the season is approaching when the Registration forms will be wanted, the usual notice is given that persons requiring considerable quantities may have the name of their county, city, or borough printed in the forms, if they will send their orders immediately.

Mr. SAUNDERS'S Practice of Summary Conveyances will be published on Saturday next. It is the first of the projected series of books of Practice to be published for the Society.

NECROLOGY

OF LEGISLATORS, MAGISTRATES, AND LAWYERS.

LORD WODEHOUSE.

Lord Wodehouse expired suddenly on Friday last, at Kimberley Park, Norfolk. The health of the noble lord had been on the decline for some months back, but his speedy dissolution was not at all anticipated. For the last two years the noble lord had partially abstained from public affairs. The deceased John Wodehouse, Baron Wodehouse of Kimberley, county Norfolk, in the peerage of Great Britain, and a baronet, was the eldest son of John first Lord Wodehouse by Sophie, only daughter and heir of Mr. Charles Berkeley, brother of John fifth Lord Berkeley, of Stratton, which title is now extinct. He was born 11th Jan. 1771, and married 18th Nov. 1796, Miss Charlotte Laura Norris, only daughter and heir of Mr. John Norris, of Wilton Park, Norfolk, who died about two years back. By his marriage he had issue six sons and five daughters, several of whom survive their noble parent. The deceased lord was lord lieutenant of the county of Norfolk, and vice admiral of that coast, and also colonel of the East Norfolk militia. He is succeeded in the hereditary title, and extensive family estates in Norfolk by his grandson, Mr. John Wodehouse (now, of course, Lord Wodehouse), eldest son of the late Hon. Henry Wodehouse, by Anne, only daughter of Mr. T. T. Gordon, now in his 21st year. The late lord, previous to his succeeding his father in the family honours in 1834, represented the county of Norfolk in several successive parliaments. The Wodehouse family were of great antiquity in Norfolk. They derived their descent through a succession of knights from the time of Henry I. John Wodehouse was gentleman of the privy chamber to Henry IV., and particularly distinguished himself at the battle of Agincourt, for which the king granted him an augmentation to his arms, and to which the family motto alludes; he died in 1430. His descendant, Sir Thomas Wodehouse, was made knight of the Bath at the marriage of Prince Arthur, eldest son of Henry VII. His great grandson, Sir Roger, was knighted by Queen Elizabeth, 1576; and his son, Sir Philip, was knighted by the Earl of Essex, at Calais, for his valour, and made a baronet 1611; he died 1623. His son, Sir Philip, an accomplished and learned man, died 1681; and his grandson, Sir John, died 1754, leaving the late Sir Armine Wodehouse, who died in 1777, having represented the county of Norfolk in five parliaments. His left issue the late Lord Wodehouse, father of the nobleman whose demise we have the duty of recording, who was elevated to the peerage in 1797. The late lord was cousin of Mr. E. Wodehouse, M.P. for East Norfolk.

JOURNAL OF PROPERTY.

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY

ON

THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

II. AS TO THE PURCHASER.

1. Of voidable purchases.
2. Persons capable of purchasing, and yet incapable of holding.
3. Persons totally disabled from purchasing.

THERE are a certain class of persons who, although capable both of buying and holding lands, are nevertheless enabled, at some future time, to annul the purchase: others there are, who, though capable of purchasing, are incapable of holding; and some there are, who are incapable of either holding or purchasing. Under the first class we may rank married women, infants, and persons of unsound mind. Under the second, aliens, attainted persons, corporations (whether lay or ecclesiastical), and, until recently, persons professing the Roman Catholic religion. And under the third, trustees, solicitors of vendors, commissioners, assignees, or the solicitor under a commission or fiat in bankruptcy: the committee of a lunatic, auctioneers, creditors who have been consulted as to the mode of sale, the governors of a charity, commissioners under inclosure acts, executors and administrators, all of whom are, except under certain restrictions which will be mentioned hereafter, incapable of becoming the purchasers of property they have anything to do with in those respective characters.

1. Of voidable purchases.

Married women.—A married woman may purchase an estate without her husband's consent, and the conveyance is good during the coverture, unless he, as he undoubtedly may, thinks proper to annul it. (Co. Litt. 3; 2 Blac. Com. 293; Bartholme v. Jordan, Doug. 452; Garband v. Allen, 1 Ld. Raym. 224; Francis v. Wizzell, 1 Mad. Rep. 258.) But after the husband's death, the wife, in case she survive him, may avoid the sale, whether he has assented to it or not, as may also his heirs; and this whether she dies before or after her husband, unless in the latter event she should do any act to express her consent or agreement.

Infants.—An infant, if he purchases during his minority, may waive any contract or conveyance made in pursuance of it when he comes to full age; or if he does not then actually agree to it, and dis without affirming it, his heirs may waive it. (Co. Litt. 2*b*; 2 Blac. Com. 292; Ketley's case, Cro. Jac. 320; 1 Roll. Abr. 731; Holmes v. Bagg, 3 Taunt. 366.) But still the purchase is not totally void, as it is in the power of the infant either to confirm or rescind it upon attaining his majority, and if once confirmed by him, it cannot afterwards be annulled. This confirmation may either be expressly done by an avowed confirmation, or by the performance of certain acts from which such confirmation may reasonably be implied (Franklin v. Thornbury, 1 Vern. 132); as, for example, by retaining possession of the purchased lands, or receiving the rents and profits; or by cutting down timber, or exercising other acts of ownership over the property. (Smith v. Lowe, 1 Atk. 489.)

Lunatics and Idiots.—The acts of a lunatic or non compos may, as we have already seen, be set aside, either by himself on recovering his senses, or by his committee, or his heirs, after his death (as to which, see ante).

2. Persons capable of purchasing, yet incapable of holding.

Aliens.—An alien is not disabled from purchasing lands, but he is incapable of holding them afterwards, because, upon office found, they become forfeited to the Crown. (2 Blac. Com. 293.) The only exception to this rule is, a lease of a dwelling-house and buildings for the purpose of habitation and trade (7 Rep. 17), which an alien friend will be entitled to hold for those purposes. But he cannot protect himself as to the possession of any other real property, by purchasing in the name of a trustee. The only means by which he can be enabled to hold real property in any part of the United Kingdom, is, by being made a denizen, or becoming naturalized, which will enable him to retain the possession of all lands acquired by him subsequently to those events. (Co. Litt. 2, b.) It was, indeed, not long since the prevailing opinion that the naturalization of an alien enabled him to hold lands acquired previously (Goulds, 29 pl. 4), though by becoming a denizen he would only be entitled to hold lands acquired afterwards; but more recent decisions have established that there is no such distinction, and that a naturalized alien is no more than a denizen capable of holding previously acquired lands. (See Mr. Radall's note to Hawk. Abr. Co. Litt. 17, n 38.)

Attainted persons.—Persons attainted of treason, felony, or præsumptio, are incapable of holding lands from the time of the offence committed (Co. Litt. 42; 2 Blac. Com. 290.) Hence, although they may purchase, it will be for the benefit of the Crown, or the lord of the fee, according to the nature of the crime. (Co. Litt. 2; 15 East, 463.)

Corporations.—Corporations, whether lay or ecclesiastical, aggregate or sole, are, without an express license to alien in mortmain disabled from holding any lands they may have purchased in their corporate capacity; which lands will become forfeited to the lord of the fee; and in case he fails to avail himself of the forfeiture within the prescribed time, the lands will go to the Crown. Hence the inhabitants or parishioners of any place are disabled from holding any lands purchased by them under those characters. (Co. Litt. 3 A.) The only exception to this rule seems to be the case of guardians and overseers of the poor purchasing lands for the purpose of a workhouse, which they are expressly enabled to do by Act of Parliament. (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 76.)

Roman Catholics.—Until within the last few years, persons professing the Roman Catholic religion who neglected to take the oath as prescribed by the stat. 31 Geo. 3, c. 32, were disqualified from holding lands, except for the benefit of their Protestant next of kin (stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 40.); but by statute 10 Geo. 4, c. 7, s. 23, a Roman Catholic subject is enabled to hold any real or personal estate, without being required to take any other oaths than may be required to be taken by any other of her Majesty's subjects.

3. Persons totally disabled from purchasing.

The total disability to purchase arises from two causes. First, that the parties whom it embraces cannot be both buyers and sellers; and, secondly, with a view to prevent fraud, which persons situated in certain relations might otherwise be tempted to be guilty of. Hence a trustee is not permitted to become a purchaser from himself of the whole or any portion of the trust property (Herne v. Meers, 1 Vern. 465; Ayliffe v. Murray, 2 Atk. 59; Fox v. Mackreth, 2 Bro. C. C. 400; Coles v. Tregothie, 9 Ves. 234; Ex parte Bennett, 10 Ves. 3; Morse v. Royall, 12 ib. 372) even at a sale by public auction (Whelpdale v. Cookson, 1 Ves. sen. 9; Lister v. Lister, 9 Ves. 631; Sanderson v. Walker, 13 ib. 602; Downes v. Glazebrook, 3 Mer. 207); which disability extends also to his solicitor. (Downes v. Glazebrook, supra; White v. Fussil, before V. C. Leach, June 29, 1818, referred to in 2 Mad. Pract. p. 110, 2nd edit.) But after a trustee is discharged from his trust he will no longer be disabled from purchasing of his cestui que trust; but then he purchases subject to the liability of having the sale set aside, if the cestui que trust were to say within a reasonable time that they were dissatisfied with the purchase, and can also shew that it would be for their advantage that this should be done. But, at the same time, if the trustee's conduct was fair and honourable, or rather, if there had been no unfairness on his part, he would be entitled to a return of his purchase-money, and all reasonable costs incurred by him in the course of the transaction. (Campbell v. Walker, 5 Ves. 678; see also Ayliffe v. Murray, 2 Atk. 58; Crowe v. Ballard, 3 Bro. C. C. 117; 1 Ves. 215.) And upon the whole it seems, that, notwithstanding a trustee cannot purchase of himself, he is allowed to purchase from his cestui que trust, provided there is a distinct and clear contract ascertained to be such after a jealous and scrupulous examination of all the circumstances, and there is no fraud, no concealment, no advantage taken by the trustee of information acquired by him in the character of trustee. (Coles v. Tregothie, 9 Ves. 246; Morse v. Royall, 12 Ves. 373.) And where an estate is vested in trustees upon trust for sale, and the trustee is desirous of becoming a purchaser, he may file a bill for the purpose of carrying the trusts into execution under the direction of the Court, and upon the sale apply to the Court for leave to become the purchaser upon offering to give more than any other person. (Campbell v. Walker, 5 Ves. 681.) With respect to a trustee for creditors purchasing any of the trust property on his own account, it appears doubtful whether the purchase could be sustained, unless with the concurrence of every one of the creditors; for though it has been said that if a majority of the creditors agree, it will be sufficient, (Whelpdale v. Cookson, 1 Ves. sen. 9), the correctness of this dictum is very questionable. (Ex parte Budge, 1 Mad. Rep.)

Solicitor or Attorney.—With respect to an attorney's purchasing of his client, the rule is, that, strictly speaking he is unable to do so as long as that relation subsists between them, yet when that relationship is dissolved, this disability will be removed. Where sales of this kind have been impeached, there has been some fraud or concealment on the part of the attorney; as, for example, he has purchased in the name of a third party, or by some means or other has contrived to conceal the fact of his being the actual purchaser; and when this is the case it would afford sufficient ground for rescinding the sale. In a recent case indeed where a solicitor purchased from his client in the name of a trustee, although at a price at which the vendor himself had authorized it to be sold, yet as the solicitor concealed the fact that he himself was the purchaser, the sale was set aside as fraudulent, notwithstanding there had been a possession of upwards of forty years under the conveyance; Trevelyan v. Charter (Rolls, January, 1835, afterwards affirmed in the House of Lords). And whenever an attorney or solicitor purchases from a late client, he should see that the latter employs some other attorney; otherwise, by mixing together the supposed character of attorney and purchaser, he will throw upon himself the onus of proving that he has given his client all that reasonable advice against himself, he would have given him against any other person. (Gibson v. Jayes, 5 Ves. 266; Wood v. Downes, 18 Ves. 120; Montesquieu v. Sandys, ib. 302; Pane v. Allen (Lord), 2 Dow. 289.)

Commissioners and assignees of bankrupts, &c.—Commissioners, assignees, and solicitors, under a commission or fiat in bankruptcy, are, as I have already remarked, disabled from purchasing the bankrupt's property, as are also the assignees of an insolvent debtor. (Ex parte Reynolds, 5 Ves. 707; Ex parte Hughes, 6 ib. 617; Ex parte Lacey, ib. 652; Ex parte James, 8 ib. 337; Ex parte Bennet, 10 ib. 381; Ex parte Morgan, 12 ib. 6. Ex parte Andrews, 2 Rose, 410; see also Hen. Bl. Law, 216); neither are the committee of a lunatic permitted to purchase the lunatic's estate, (Wright v. Proud, 13 Ves. 156); nor can auctioneers purchase the estate they are employed to sell (Whelpdale v. Cookson 1 Ves. sen. 9; Lister v. Lister, 6 Ves. 631; Sanderson v. Walker 13, ib. 602). Executors or administrators are also disabled from purchasing the estate or effects of their testator intestate (Hall v. Hallett, 1 Cox, 134; Burden v. Burden 1 Ves. & Bea. 170). This disqualification does not, however, extend to a residuary legatee (Hooper v. Goodwin, Cooper, 95), nor to the next of kin, nor to the heir at law of a testator who has devised away his real estate.

Mortgagee.—Whatever opinions may formerly have prevailed, it is now clearly settled that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee does not preclude the latter from purchasing the equity of redemption (Skinner v. Stacey, 1 Wils. 80; Goodtitle v. Pope, 7 T. R. 185; Ex parte Marsh, 1 Mad. Rep. 48). The cases in which transactions of this kind have been seemingly impugned, have been those in which the mortgagee has been a trustee for sale (Downes v. Glazebrook, 3 Mer. 200), who could not of course sell to himself; or where he has taken some undue advantage of his situation. (Gubbins v. Creed, 2 Sch. & Lef. 214; Webb v. Rorke, ib. 660; Hicks v. Cooke, 4 Dow. 10, 28).

15. Administration.
16. Matters of fact.
17. Cancellation, alteration, or erasure of documents.

I. PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS.

AFTER the contract is duly signed, the next step for the vendor's solicitor to take is to deliver an abstract to the purchaser, or his solicitor, either at, or within the time appointed by the contract or conditions of sale; and this the former should take care to do, as an omission of this kind would avoid the contract at law (Colonel v. Briggs, 1 Salk. 112; Lock v. Wright, 8 Mod. 40; Powell v. Pillett, Gilb. Rep. 188; Hamilton (Duchess of) v. Hamilton (Duke of), Grounds and Radiments of Law and Equity, 4; Berry v. Young, 2 Esp. N. P. C. 640), and in equity also, if time is made part of the essence of the contract. (Butcher v. Hinton, 1 Cha. Cas. 302; Keen v. Stukeley, Gilb. Rep. 155; Pope v. Roots, 7 Bro. P. C. 184; Feversham (Earl of) v. Watson, Rep. temp. Finch, 445; 2 Freem. 35; Halton v. Long, ib. 12; Lloyd v. Collett, 4 Ves. 689 (n); Radcliffe v. Warrington, 12 ib. 326; Hudson v. Bartram, 3 Mad. Rep. 440; Bochin v. Wood, Jac. & Walk. 419; Wiskv v. Cottle, 1 Turn. 78; Lechmere v. Brasier, 2 Jac. & Walk. 239; Levy v. Lindo, 3 Mer. 84; see also 1 Mad. Prac. 416, 2nd edition; 1 Foulbl. Eq. 394.) Even where no precise time is stipulated for the delivery of the abstract, it will be necessary that it should be delivered within a convenient time; but what limit is to be so considered is involved in considerable doubt. To avoid any questions, therefore, from arising about the matter, the vendor's solicitor should in every instance use due diligence in forwarding the abstract; for a delay on his part, to say the least of it, will afford a pretext for the same line of conduct on the part of the purchaser, which may often, as I have already remarked (see ante, 4, 5), cause great inconvenience to the vendor.

And as, on the one hand, the vendor's solicitor should be careful to deliver the abstract in proper time, so, on the other, the purchaser's solicitor should be equally active; and when a time is appointed for the delivery, the latter should make a point of demanding it on or before the time. It is not solely incumbent on the vendor to move by making a tender of the abstract; something also is incumbent on the purchaser to ask for it (Guest v. Homfray, 5 Ves. 283); and any laches on the part of the latter to do this may afford sufficient ground for rescinding the contract; and that even where no time is appointed for the delivery of the abstract, if the purchaser's solicitor permits a considerable time to elapse without asking for it.

Abstract by whom to be prepared.—In ancient days the practice seems to have been to deliver over the title-deeds themselves to the purchaser, and the abstract was prepared from such deeds by his solicitor, and at his own expense. This practice has, however, been long since done away with (1 Prest. Abs. 34), and the established rule now is for the vendor to defray the cost of the abstract, which is prepared by his own solicitor. The abstract only and not the title-deeds, is delivered to the purchaser's solicitor, who afterwards is allowed access to such title-deeds in order to examine them with the abstract, which latter expense is borne by the purchaser. Formerly, also, it seems to have been customary for counsel to compare the title-deeds with the abstract; but this practice is now disused: a duty of that kind being considered as falling more properly within the province of solicitors than counsel. In former times, also, it was by no means an unfrequent practice to employ counsel to prepare the abstract; but this is not done now, that task devolving wholly upon the solicitor; and a very important task it is; as it requires not only the strictest attention, but also an acquaintance with the laws of real property, and the nature and operation of the various assurances by which it may be transmitted from one person to another.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Thursday, May 7.

TAULOCK v. ROBEY.

Account on bill for redemption—Mortgagee and mortgagee—Parties—Form of decree—Practice.

Where upon a bill filed for redemption of mortgaged premises, the personal representatives of the original mortgagee who had first taken possession of the mortgaged premises was not made party to the suit, no account can be obtained of the rents, &c. during the possession of such original mortgagee.

The decree upon a bill for redemption directed the Master to take an account of what was due on the mortgage, and an account of the rents which had been received by the mortgagee in possession: Held that such a decree does not authorize the Master to charge the mortgagee with an occupation rent on the mortgaged premises which had been in his own possession.

Practice on dismissal of bill pending an interlocutory motion.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England, who had disallowed exceptions to the Master's report, which had been taken by the plaintiff. The plaintiff also moved by way of appeal for an enlargement of the time fixed by the decree for payment of the mortgage-money. The report which had been excepted to was made in May 1844; on the 19th of Nov. 1844, the exceptions were disallowed, and on the 28th of Nov. the plaintiff gave notice of motion for an enlargement of the time for paying the mortgage-money which had been appointed for the 30th of November. It was asked that the time might be enlarged for six months. On the 2nd of December the defendant obtained an order of course to dismiss the plaintiff's bill, because the mortgage-money found by the report to be due had not been paid. The order of dismissal was obtained without notice, and it had been contended that, pending a motion to enlarge the time for payment, such order of dismissal could not properly be made.

Roe and Miller supported the appeal.

Wakefield and Randell objected that the appeal could not be heard, inasmuch as, the bill having been dismissed, there was no such cause in court. There was no instance in which the time for payment of mortgage-money had been enlarged on decree for redemption; and Lord Eldon had expressly decided against it in the case of Novosielski v. Wakefield (17 Ves. 417). On that principle the Vice-Chancellor had refused the motion in March 1845, and until May 1846 there is no appeal. The order to pay the mortgage-money on a certain day, contained in a decree to redeem, operates as a decree of foreclosure absolute against the plaintiff in the event of nonpayment of the money.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Are there any special circumstances? You must open the whole question. Roe and Miller then opened the merits.—The mortgage was made in 1774 to the defendant's father, for securing the principal sum of 99l. 12s. 8d. In 1781, the mortgagee entered into possession, and continued in the personal possession of the premises until his death in the year 1817. The annual value of the property was about 12l. and the bill alleged that by charging the mortgagee with that yearly amount, he had been overpaid, all principal and interest, at the time of his death by the sum of 93l. The mortgagee devised the mortgaged premises to his son, the present defendant, who was also his executor, but the bill did not make him a party to the suit, or charge him as such executor. The defendant had remained in possession from the death of his father, and the decree having directed an inquiry as to what was due to the defendant on the mortgage, and an account of the rents of the mortgaged premises, the Master had reported that 372l. 5s. 11d. was due to the defendant on the mortgage for principal, interest, and costs. That was by charging the estate with the original debt of 99l. 12s. 8d. and interest from 1774, and without charging the defendant with any rent. It was admitted that, without the presence of the representative of Robey the elder, in that character, the account as against his estate could not be taken; but it was contended, on the part of the plaintiff, that, in order to ascertain what is due upon the mortgage, as directed by the decree, the Master should have charged the defendant with the value of the mortgaged premises since he had been himself in possession, namely from 1817. Even in that way, the defendant would have been shown to have received 138l. more than the principal and interest since the death of Robey, the father. The Master held that he was not authorized by the decree to charge the defendant with an occupation-rent, but the Master also found, at the plaintiff's request, the circumstances as to the dates of the mortgage, the entry, and death of the defendant's father, and that if he had been charged with a rent up to the time of his death, which would have amounted to 432l. the balance against him would have been 93l. This report had been excepted to by the plaintiff, because the defendant had not been charged with any rent, but the Vice-Chancellor overruled the exception. The exceptions had been overruled on the 19th of November, 1844, and the plaintiff had given notice of his intention to appeal from that decision before the 2nd of December, when the order to dismiss the bill was obtained, and the plaintiff's petition of appeal was answered on the 12th of the same December. The motion to enlarge the time for payment of the mortgage-money was then pending, and was heard on the 3rd of March, 1845. The motion was then refused.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The Vice-Chancellor having refused to enlarge the time, the order dismissing the bill stands.

Roe.—The present motion is to discharge the order of the Vice-Chancellor refusing the motion, to discharge the order for dismissing the bill, and that the time for payment of the mortgage-money may be enlarged. They cited Garland v. Littlewood (1 Beavan, 527); Green v. Baddely (7 Beavan, 274); Bennett v. Mathews (5 Jurist, 174); O'Connell v. Macnamara (3 Dru. & Warren, 411); Hamilton v. Houghton (2 Bligh, 169); Quarrell v. Beckford (1 Maddock, 269); Wilson v. Metcalf (1 Russell, 530).

Wakefield and Randell, for the defendant, were not heard.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The exceptions were heard on the 19th of November, and the appeal petition was not answered till the 12th of December. Why did not the plaintiff apply to the Court to stay proceedings?

Miller.—The motion to discharge the order to dismiss the bill, and to enlarge the time for payment, was then pending.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Then you did apply to the Court, and it decided against you. The Master is correct in his report, in point of law, for the report is consistent with the decree which directs the Master to take an account of what is due upon the mortgage for principal and interest, and of the rents received by the defendant. But the Master has also introduced into his report other facts which may lead to other conclusions; but those conclusions are not consistent with the decree.

Re DYCE SOMBER, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Allowances of election expenses incurred by the lunatic—Inquiries.

A petition was presented by the committee of the estate, which, amongst other things, prayed that a reference to the Commissioner might be directed with respect to an electioneering account sent in by Mr. Coppock, who had been the lunatic's agent at his election for Sudbury. The petition stated that the money had been expended on the lunatic's behalf in a contested election for the borough of Sudbury, in which Mr. Dyce Somber had been returned to Parliament, but that return had been questioned, and on petition, the lunatic was unseated.

Taney and Lloyd, for the petition.—It appeared from a memorandum found amongst the lunatic's papers, that he had paid no less a sum than 3,000l. on account of that election and petition, and the committee did not feel justified in making or recommending any further payment without inquiry.

J. H. Palmer, for Mr. Coppock, opposed the reference. The payments made during a contested election are of such a nature that it was almost impossible to produce vouchers for them, or to give evidence that the commissioner would deem to be technically satisfactory.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is impossible for me to direct a payment of a claim of that nature out of the estate of a lunatic, without a previous inquiry. The commissioner will decide upon the statements and evidence brought before him as to the propriety of the expenditure. The inquiry must be as to the state of the accounts between Mr. Coppock and the lunatic, for the purpose of ascertaining whether any, and what, sums are due to Mr. Coppock from the lunatic, or from Mr. Coppock to the lunatic, and such account must include the money already paid.

Re THE RECTOR OF LAMBETH.

Land taken by a railway company, in which an ecclesiastical corporation sole has a reversionary interest, must, under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 Viet. c. 18, s. 74, be paid into court, and the interest must be accumulated until the reversion falls into possession. The incumbent is not entitled to receive any part of the interest.

Kent supported a petition by the rector of Lambeth, which prayed that a sum of upwards of 2,000l. which had been apportioned as the share of the rector in some property taken by the South-Eastern Railway, might be invested, and the dividends ordered to be paid to the rector. It appeared that property had been granted on leases for long terms of years, of which thirty-one are still unexpired. The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 Viet. c. 18, s. 74, directs that "where any purchase-money or compensation, paid into the bank under the provisions of this or the special Act, shall have been paid in respect of any lease for a life or lives, or years, or for a life or lives and years, or any estate in lands less than the whole fee-simple thereof, or of any reversion dependent on any such lease or estate, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, in England, or the Court of Exchequer, in Ireland, on the petition of any party interested in such money, to order that the same shall be laid out, invested, accumulated, and paid in such manner as the said Court may consider will give to the parties interested in such money the same benefit therefrom as they might lawfully have had from the lease, estate, or reversion in respect of which such money shall have been paid, or a share thereto, as may be." Under that clause the rector asked that the money received from the railway company, in respect of his reversionary interest, might be invested, and the dividends ordered to be paid to the rector of Lambeth for the time being.

Cockrell, for the Archbishop of Canterbury, did not oppose the prayer of the petition, but submitted to any order the Court might make.

Anderson, for the railway company.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, after considering the clause, held that he had no power to order the immediate payment of the dividends to the rector, which must be accumulated for the benefit of the rectory of Lambeth at the expiration of the lease.

His lordship remarked that it seemed to be somewhat hard upon the rector, and suggested that an application might be made to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners on the subject.

YOUNGHUBAND v. GIBBORNE.

Restriction on alienation—Trust—What interests pass to assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency.

A fund given to trustees, for the maintenance, support, and clothing of an adult male person, the manner and means of such application being in the trustees' discretion, but the whole fund being applicable, forms a beneficial interest in the fund for the cestui que trust, which will pass to his assignees under the Insolvent Act. The cases of Twopeny v. Peyton and Godden v. Crowhurst, doubted.

By the will of Francis Duckinfield, certain real estates were given to trustees, upon trust to raise yearly during the life of his brother, John William Astley, an annuity of 400l.; and the testator directed that the annuity should be held by his said trustees "upon trust for the personal support, clothing, and maintenance of his said brother, so as not to be subject or liable to the claims of any person or persons to whom he should charge, anticipate, or otherwise incur the same, nor to his creditors under a commission of bankruptcy, or any Act for the relief of insolvent debtors, or to his own control, contracts, debts, or engagements." The annuity was to be paid to his brother from time to time, when and after the same should become due, until he should attempt to charge, anticipate, or otherwise incur the same, or until any other person or persons might claim the same; and from and after such attempt or claim, the same was to be applied by his said trustees, or some person under their direction, for or towards the personal support, clothing, and maintenance of his said brother, and for no other purpose whatsoever.

In May 1842 John William Astley was discharged as an insolvent debtor, and the plaintiff, as his assignee, instituted a suit in this court for the purpose of obtaining the annuity. The cause was heard before Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, who held that this was a trust for the benefit of J. W. Astley, and, as such, passed to his assignee. From that decree the insolvent appealed.

Hallett supported the decree, and contended that no continuing interest in property could be so given to an adult person as to prevent it passing to his assignees under a bankruptcy or insolvency. He cited and referred to Tullett v. Armstrong (4 Myl. & Craig); Brandon v. Robinson (18 Ves. 429); Foley v. Davidson (1 Bro. C. C. 203); Lear v. Leggett (2 Simons, and 1 Russell & Mylne); Pym v. Lockyer (12 Sim. 394); Green v. Spicer (1 Russ. & Myl.); Piercy v. Roberts (1 Myl. & Keen); Lord v. Buns (2 Young & Collyer C. C. 98); Rippon v. Norton (2 Beavan, 63); Page v. Way (3 Beavan, 20); Kearsley v. Woodcock (3 Hare, 185).

Wakefield and Beales, for the insolvent, contended that this was not a beneficial interest in the insolvent, as no money was to be paid to him, but simply a discretionary trust to maintain him. It was distinguishable from the cases which proceeded upon the principle that the insolvent or bankrupt had in substance an absolute beneficial interest. His interest in the annuity was forfeited by his insolvency to the trustees, who were to make another provision for him. They cited Dommelt v. Bedford (6 Term Reports, 684); Shee v. Hale (13 Ves. 404); Godden v. Crouhurst (10 Sim. 642); Twopeny v. Peyton (10 Sim. 487).

Hallett, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There is no dispute about the general rule. A party may give his property to another person, so as to go over in the event of his attempting to alienate, or of his bankruptcy or insolvency, but he cannot give a continuing estate to such person to subsist after his bankruptcy or insolvency. That would be to alter the legal incidents of property. The general principle is not controverted. In this case the testator has given his trustees authority to pay 400l. a year into the hands of the legatee, and he has declared that if he should attempt to charge, anticipate, or otherwise incumber the same, or become bankrupt or insolvent, the same should be applied by the trustees, or by some person under their direction, for or towards the personal support, clothing, and maintenance of the legatee, and for no other purpose. The legatee is entitled to the whole fund; it is to be applied for no other purpose or object, except for his benefit. I am of opinion that, under such circumstances, the legatee has an absolute interest in the annuity which passes to his assignees. I agree with the Vice-Chancellor, that if this case is not distinguishable from Twopeny v. Peyton, and Godden v. Crouhurst (10 Simons), then I also dissent from those cases. The legatee here has the whole benefit, and he being insolvent, that benefit must pass to his assignees. The decision of the Vice-Chancellor must be affirmed. As the Vice-Chancellor suggested that the case was a proper one for appeal, the costs of all parties will come out of the estate.

ROLLS COURT.

Friday, May 8.

FRISTEL v. KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.
Practice—Dissolving injunction—Alleged fraud—Usury—Motion to dissolve after replication and before publication.

A fellow of a college having by assignment mortgaged the stipend to which he was entitled in respect of the fellowship, and, in a suit to obtain payment, an order having been obtained by the plaintiff before answer filed, directing no further payments thereof to be made to any one till further order, the defendant, the fellow, put in his answer charging fraud, and alleging the stipend to be unassignable, and a replication being filed, he obtained an enlargement of publication, and then moved to discharge the order. The Court refused to consider the question as to whether the stipend was assignable, on an interlocutory motion; and the defendant being precluded from bringing forward his evidence by the enlargement of publication, the motion, though founded on the allegations of fraud, &c. in the answer, was refused, the costs to be costs in the cause.

This was a suit instituted by the plaintiff to obtain payment of 300l. and interest due upon a mortgage made to him on the 28th December, 1842, by the Rev. Lionel Buller, senior fellow of King's College, Cambridge, then residing out of the jurisdiction. The bill having been filed, the plaintiff moved for an injunction on the 10th of February, 1845 (see 4 Law T. 391), to restrain the bursars of the college from paying to Mr. Buller the annual stipend to which he was entitled in respect of his fellowship, and the motion was allowed to stand over till the 3rd of March following, when an order was made directing that no payments should be made to any one till further order. Mr. Buller having returned to England in December last, put in his answer to the bill, and thereby alleged that the transaction was fraudulent and usurious, for he had never intended nor proposed to the plaintiff to assign the emoluments of his fellowship, which he believed to be unassignable, but only to raise money on a deposit of certain articles of value, and upon a policy of assurance. He had given his bill also for the entire sum. The plaintiff, however, on their meeting to complete the loan, placed before him three deeds of assignment, one of the articles of value, another of the policy, and a third of the emoluments of the fellowship, which latter he at first refused to sign; but the plaintiff refusing to proceed with the business on any other terms, he, being in great distress for money, and being taken by surprise, did at last sign it. The transaction was therefore fraudulent. And, after all, he only got part of the loan in money, the rest being paid him in the form of a quantity of wine and brandy, which he believed were of much less value than the price charged. The transaction was therefore usurious. To this answer the plaintiff filed a replication, and the cause being thus at issue, both parties proceeded, or were in a condition to proceed, to take evidence. In this state of things Mr. Buller got publication enlarged, and now moved, on the allegations in his answer, to discharge the order of the 3rd March, 1845.

Tinney (with him Doria), for the motion.—As to the usurious and fraudulent nature of the transaction, the defendant swears he only got a part of the loan in money, and the other part of it was paid in articles of little value, so that interest at 5 per cent. is being paid for 300l. when the sum advanced is less than that sum. But the question is, whether the fellowship be capable of being assigned? [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Can that question be discussed on an interlocutory motion? If you argue it, it must be on the conviction that it is perfectly absurd to maintain the proposition that the emoluments of the fellowship are assignable.] There are two principles applicable to the present case; first, that no office, or profits of an office connected with duties to be performed, can be assigned; and secondly, an office cannot be deputed where duties are to be assigned. The property of the college is vested in the corporation, though it is distributed to individuals; but it cannot be said to be the property of any one, but of all. A suit was instituted against this very college, and a motion made on the 16th of August, 1830, for an injunction, and a receiver was refused. They cited Oliver v. Emsome (1 Dyer, 1 b); Maud's case (4 Coke, 110); Barwick v. Reade (1 H. Bl. 627); Flarty v. Odum (3 T. R. 681); Davis v. Duke of Marlborough (1 Swanst. 79); 2 Swanst. 108; Cooper v. Reilly (2 Sim. 560); Dean and Canons of Windsor (2 Beav. 544); Hodgkinson v. Wyatt (1 Q.B. Rep. 14); Com. Dig. Office, C. D.; 2 Rol. 93.

Turner (with him Hall), for the college.

Kindersley (with him Glasse) was about to oppose the motion, when

The MASTER of the ROLLS said he would not trouble him on the question of the assignment. After stating the facts, he observed that there had a cause before the Vice-Chancellor of England in 1830, the facts of which have not now been stated the Court, and besides, the statutes of the college would have to be examined, and yet counsel for the plaintiff had not even seen the case referred to. At the time of making the order, he did not decide this important question, nor would he on the present occasion, except that he ought not to take it for granted that the assignment was invalid. It was a matter of great importance to the college, and also to all persons having dealings with it. The argument involves this state of things, that a fellow may make a mortgage, and then turn round and say the emoluments are not assignable. Then, as it leads to that consequence, the public may be seriously aggrieved by it. A great deal of important matter had been brought forward, and much, to his certain knowledge, had not been brought forward. He would, therefore, not make the order to discharge on that ground. As to the fraud, he would hear the other side.

Kindersley.—The replication was filed in February last, and the defendant has now got publication enlarged; and then he comes and moves on the allegations of fraud in his answer, while we are stopped from using our evidence till publication passes, and have not the means of discussing the questions at issue. The matter would have been tried now, if publication had not been enlarged.

Tinney, in reply.—It is, if continued, almost a final order as against us, for Mr. Buller has nothing to live upon.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—On that subject I ought not to interfere. If, after putting in his answer, Mr. Buller had applied to the Court, such order as was proper in the case would have been then made; but a replication being filed, each party thereupon undertakes to prove his case; and the evidence would have been now ready on both sides; but the defendant having enlarged publication, the plaintiff is prevented from producing his proof; and then it is desired that I should grant the order on the evidence in the answer. I cannot do so. I refuse the motion; costs to be costs in the cause. If more than the sum due is accumulated, Mr. Buller may take the difference.

Kindersley said there was not near enough for principal and interest of the original debt, and there were costs besides.

KINDER v. LORD ASHBURTON.

Practice—Enlarging publication—Delay in executing commission to take evidence—Vague statements in affidavits.

Issue being joined in a cause in April 1843, a commission to take evidence was not sued out by the defendants till the year 1845, in the month of October of which year publication was enlarged to Hilary Term then next, then to March, then to the beginning of this present Trinity Term, and it was now sought to enlarge it to the end of the Term. The evidence was being taken in Mexico by the agents of the defendant, and it was stated on affidavit to be difficult to obtain it, as well from the nature of the evidence itself as the course of proceeding usual in Mexico; and on the oath of the defendants that there "was a reasonably near prospect" of the commission being returned by the end of the Term, the motion was granted.

This was a motion to enlarge publication in this cause till the end of the present term, in order that, if possible, a commission which had been sued out to take evidence in the republic of Mexico might be returned, and be made available by the defendants. The cause was at issue in 1843, and in March 1845, the commission was sent out by the defendants' agents here to their agents in Mexico, with instructions to proceed as fast as possible. Nothing more was done till May, when a duplicate of the commission was sent out, but nothing was said as to despatch. Other communications passed from time to time, but at first there was nothing said as to expedition; but ultimately a letter was written by the agents here, pressing the agents there to make haste, and informing them of the danger of delay, if no satisfactory explanation of it could be given. A letter was then sent by the agents in Mexico, stating that the delay arose from the difficulty of obtaining documents which it was necessary to obtain for the purposes of the commission; that all the documents which they had succeeded in obtaining previously had been translated, and that the taking of the evidence had been interrupted by the want of two documents, which then, however, had been found, and were ready to be translated. That was in January last, and nothing had been shewn to be done since. This was the fourth application to enlarge publication, there having been an enlargement from October last to Hilary Term, then to March, then to the first day of the present Trinity Term, and now it was asked to enlarge still further till the end of the Term.

Glasse (with him Lloyd) produced affidavits to shew how difficult it was to execute such a commission, as well from the nature of the documents as from the course of proceedings in Mexico. They also produced an affidavit by the defendants, in which they stated they had "a reasonably near prospect" of the return of the commission by the end of the term. On those grounds they asked for the order.

Turner (with him Heathfield) opposed the motion.—The delay had been great, and there was no peremptory urgency manifested in the letters to the agents in Mexico. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Were they to send an agent with a pistol?] There was too much indication of making excuses, and of suggesting to the agents there to do so. The plaintiff had his copies of documents in six days, and the defendants have not yet finished. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—He was fortunate, but that is no reason why they should obtain theirs in so short a time.] Under the circumstances, the most cogent evidence of diligence must be given.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Time, and very often a great deal of it, is necessary in the administration of justice; and Courts cannot act without a large allowance of it. The mere passing of time is not objectionable, if that be all; but the neglect of time is, for then there is unnecessary delay, and that is a grievance and a thing to be avoided. There is, however, a worse grievance, and that is, the exclusion of evidence that may be obtained. The resistance to this motion is grounded on this, that the defendants cannot give a reason for the delay of their agents in Mexico. What is said here is, that the agents of the defendants have urgently pressed the agents in Mexico to get the evidence, told them the danger of delay, and that, if no satisfactory account of it could be given, the consequences would be most unfavourable; and this is turned against them, and it is said they were thereby suggesting excuses to be made by the agents in Mexico. In one sense they were, but what else could they do? Well, again, it is said the statement of the defendants in their affidavit is vague—"a reasonably near," &c.—and so it is; and if the agents were here, and were making the statement, it would not be satisfactory; but what more can the defendants say? Having a reasonably near prospect of the commission being returned by the end of the term, they ask to enlarge publication. It is a reasonable request, and I shall enlarge accordingly, but the defendants must pay the costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Monday, April 27.

EYRE v. GREEN.

Construction—Jointure—Contribution.

A B by his marriage settlement covenanted to settle his estates in O. and B. or such part thereof as should be of the annual value of 900l. to the use of himself for life, and after his death to the use and intent that his wife C. should yearly receive for her jointure 800l. to be chargeable upon the hereditaments, so to be settled as aforesaid. No settlement was made by A B in pursuance of this covenant, but by his will he gave his estates in O. and B. to his wife and her assigns for life. By indentures executed after the date of the will, A B revoked his will as to the estates in O. and these, therefore, descended upon his heir-at-law. Held, that the estates in O. were not exclusively liable to satisfy the covenant in the marriage settlement, but that the estates in B. were liable to contribute.

By an indenture dated the 19th of December, 1803, being the settlement made on the marriage of William Hodges and Catherine his wife, after reciting (among other things) that he was seised in remainder in tail male expectant on the decease of his father, of the capital messuage of Boulney and other hereditaments in the counties of Oxford and Berks, the said William Hodges covenanted with E. F. Green, C. Green, J. Eyre, and W. Eyre, their heirs and assigns, well and effectually to grant and settle such estates, or so much and such part thereof as should be of the clear annual value of 900l. and upwards, clear of all incumbrances, to the use of himself for life, and after his death to the use, intent, and purpose, that the said Catherine and her assigns should yearly receive for her life, for her jointure, and in bar of dower, one annual sum, or clear yearly rent-charge of 800l. to be chargeable upon and yearly issuing and payable out of the said hereditaments, of the annual value of 900l. so to be conveyed as aforesaid, with usual powers of distress and entry, and subject thereto to the use of the said trustees for 100 years, upon trust for securing the said annuity with remainder to the use of the said William Hodges. No settlement or conveyance was ever made in pursuance of the covenant contained in the last-mentioned indenture. By the will of the said William Hodges, dated the 9th of May, 1806, after confirming the said settlement made on his marriage, he gave and devised to E. F. Green and C. Green, and their heirs, the said capital messuage called "Boulney Court," and all his farms, lands, and hereditaments in the county of Oxford, and his farms, lands, and hereditaments in the county of Warwick, in the county of Berks, or elsewhere in Great Britain, with their appurtenances, unto his wife Catherine, and her assigns, during her life, with divers remainders over. At the time of making his will, the testator was seised of a copyhold estate in Berkshire, and of freehold hereditaments in Oxfordshire, subject to a term of 2,000 years, created by Anthony Hodges, deceased, for securing 8,000l. and interest, and of freehold hereditaments in Oxfordshire, not subject to the term. By an indenture dated the 31st of May, 1806, the testator mortgaged his freehold estates in Oxfordshire not subject to the term of 2,000 years, to the said E. F. Green and C. Green, their heirs and assigns, for securing 3,000l. and interest; and by another indenture, dated the 25th of October, 1811, the same hereditaments were charged with the further sum of 2,000l. and interest. By indentures of lease and release, dated respectively the 4th and 5th of December, 1811, the testator granted and released unto and to the use of C. Green and G. Green, and their heirs and assigns, the said capital messuage, and all the hereditaments in Oxfordshire, upon trust for sale; and in the meantime to mortgage the same; and out of the money to pay certain sums, and to stand possessed of the surplus thereof, in trust for the testator, his executors or administrators, as personal estate, and as to such of the hereditaments as should not be sold, upon trust, for the testator, his heirs and assigns. And it was by the same indenture declared, that the said trustees should receive the rents of the said hereditaments, and the money to arise by the sale of the timber, and thereout pay the interest on the said sum of 8,000l.; and, in the next place, should pay to his wife Catherine an annuity of 750l. quarterly, for her sole and separate use. The testator died in January, 1813, without having revoked or altered his said will, except as the same was revoked or altered by the said indentures. In a cause of Hodges v. Green, it was declared that the indentures of the 4th and 5th of December, 1811, operated as a revocation of the will as to the Oxfordshire estates, which, therefore, descended, subject to the incumbrances affecting the same, to F. R. Hodges, the heir-at-law of the testator. The Berkshire estates, therefore, only passed by the will. By a decree made in this cause, dated the 5th of June, 1845, it was referred to the Master to inquire (among other things) whether the Oxfordshire and Berkshire estates, or either, and which of them, or any, and what part thereof, were subject to any incumbrance, other than the mortgages before-mentioned. By his report, dated the 21st of February, 1846, the Master, after stating the facts before-mentioned, found that the Oxfordshire estates, which descended to the heir-at-law, were exclusively liable to satisfy the covenant contained in the indenture of the 19th of December, 1803, and that the same were not subject to any other incumbrances than the said mortgages, if the same, or any, or either of them, were then subsisting, and the said annuity of 800l. To this report exceptions were taken, on the ground (among other things) that the Master ought to have found that the Berkshire estates were subject and liable to satisfy the said covenant, and to the payment of the said annuity of 800l., or some part thereof.

Bazalgette and Follett for the exceptions.

Russell and W. M. James, for Mrs. Hodges, supported the Master's report.

Swanston, F. Bayley, Wigram, and Smythe, for other parties.

The following cases were cited: Grigby v. Powell (5 Sim. 290; 3 Clark & Fin. 103); Knight v. Calthorpe (1 Vern. 347); Weyland v. Weyland (2 Atk. 632); and Middleton v. Pryor (Amb. 390, and Appendix J.).

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—My opinion is, that as Berkshire is mentioned in the settlement, and as the Berkshire property was entirely copyhold, the Berkshire property, for every purpose of the agreement, stands upon the same footing as if it had been freehold. I need not trouble you, therefore, as far as that point goes. It might have been very different if it had been both freehold and copyhold. The first question with which I have to deal is, I think, that which would equally have arisen had any other person than the wife been a devisee, or had she not been a devisee. It is contended that, in such a case, the whole of this obligation would, as between the devisee and the heir, fall exclusively on the heir by analogy to the case of ordinary specialty debts. How would it have been in the case of a rent-charge? In the case of a legal rent charge affecting the whole estate, the devisee and the heir must have contributed rateably, notwithstanding any personal liability on the part of the testator to pay, provided it appeared, from the nature of the transaction, that the real estate was intended to be the first fund to pay. In the same manner, if the rent charge had been equitable, I apprehend the same consequence would follow. Here the case stands thus, that instead of being a legal or equitable rent-charge affecting the whole estate, the whole estate is subject to a covenant upon the part of the testator that he will—~~pay~~ ^{provide} ~~for~~ ^{for} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~purpose~~ ^{purpose} ~~of~~ ^{of} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~estate~~ ^{estate} ~~to~~ ^{to} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~value~~ ^{value} ~~of~~ ^{of} ~~900l.~~ ^{900l.} ~~a~~ ^a ~~year~~ ^{year} ~~for~~ ^{for} ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~purpose~~ ^{purpose} ~~of~~ ^{of} ~~being~~ ^{being} ~~settled~~ ^{settled} ~~in~~ ⁱⁿ ~~a~~ ^a ~~particular~~ ^{particular} ~~manner~~ ^{manner}, but only for limited purposes, or purposes which leave him the valuable beneficial interest—in fact, only for the purpose of a rent-charge for life. Not having fulfilled the covenant, he then devises a portion of the estate, and leaves the rest to the settlement. My opinion is, that whether the covenant was or was not, or whether the devisee is or is not liable to an action upon this covenant, the whole estate was liable to the fulfilment of it; and that out of the whole estate a portion devoted to this particular purpose was to be selected by the devisee and the heir, who, together, represent the whole property. I am of opinion, therefore, supposing any other person than the wife had been devisee there must have been an apportionment of this rent-charge over the whole estate. The next question is, whether the circumstance of the wife being a devisee makes any difference. I am of opinion that the will exhibits an intention that the rent-charge of 800l. a year, and the whole settlement in fact, should continue in force as far as it could continue in force, consistently with the circumstance that the will gives to the wife for life the whole estate, out of the rents of which this future jointure was to come. There, therefore, was not at any moment any intention of satisfaction. I think the will left the jointure as it was. The jointure was left, therefore, as it was at the testator's death, and being left in its original state, it charged every portion of the property, and that brings the case round to one of apportionment; a decision which I consider entirely consistent with Grigby v. Powell; therefore let that be the declaration, that the 800l. a year to the wife equally charges every portion of the property, and that therefore the Berkshire estate is liable to contribute. With that declaration send it back to the Master, without either allowing or overruling the exceptions.

LAWTON v. RIBSDALE.

Practice—Vacation—15th Order of May, 1837.

Quere, whether the 15th Order of May, 1837, as to applications before another judge than the one, before whom the cause is, applies to the interval between Easter and Trinity Terms.

In this suit, which had been set down before the Vice-Chancellor of England, a motion for an injunction to stay trial was made in this Court, as the Vice-Chancellor of England was not sitting, it being the day after Easter Term.

A. H. Welch for the plaintiff, mentioned the 15th Order of 5th May, 1837, which provided that in the interval between the close of the sittings after any Term, and the commencement of the sittings before, or at the beginning of the next ensuing Term, applications for special orders may be made to any judge of the Court, &c.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that his impression was, that this vacation was not one to which this rule applied, but that he would grant the injunction, if it were thought desirable to take it, subject to the risk of having it discharged on the ground of his not having jurisdiction.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

BELCHAM v. HARRISON.

Practice—Form of exceptions.

Rogers moved for leave to amend the form of exceptions to an answer. In framing the exceptions, he did not state verbatim the answer excepted to in the usual manner; he merely referred to it by excepting to the answer put in to the interrogatory No. 20 in the bill. The defendant had submitted to the exception in this form, and put in a further answer, which not being sufficient, it was referred to the Master, who declared the form of the exception improper, and refused to proceed upon it without an order of the Court; whereupon the present motion was made.

Romilly, for the defendant, opposed the motion.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I shall not give any opinion upon the point, or make any order whatever in the matter.

May 29 and June 4.

SHARLAND v. MILDON.

Parties—Executor of son tort.

An agent of an executor of son tort is liable to be sued as executor of son tort, when he acts in collecting the assets of the testator with a knowledge that his principal has not had probate or administration granted.

This was a suit for the administration of the estate of George Sharland, and, amongst other matters, sought to make one of the defendants, named John Hewish, liable for some of the assets which had passed through his hands and was subsequently lost. George Sharland, by his will, dated in August 1835, devised all his real estates to trustees upon trust for his wife for life, remainder to his daughter, the plaintiff, in fee, and appointed his daughter sole executrix of his will; and afterwards died without revoking. The will was afterwards contested in the Ecclesiastical Court, and the widow intended to take out administration, and in the meantime she collected some of the assets of the testator, and was assisted in doing so by the defendant, John Hewish, who resided in the house with her. Administration, however, was not ultimately granted to the widow of Geo. Sharland, but was granted to other parties, whereupon the present suit was instituted by the plaintiff, Georgiana Sharland, an infant and daughter of the testator, by Thos. Maunder, as her next friend, against the defendants, the trustees of the will, the heirs-at-law of the testator, and John Hewish, as executor of son tort, and the administrators, to have the estate of Geo. Sharland administered under the decree of the Court.

The widow had died before the filing of the bill, and it was known that some of the assets which Hewish had received and paid to the widow, had been lost; the object of the suit, as against him, was to fix him as an executor of son tort. The heirs-at-law disclaimed all interest in the lands, and the bill was dismissed, with costs, as against them.

Hewish, by his answer, admitted having received some of the assets of the testator, but said he merely acted by the direction of the widow, and as her agent, and that he had immediately paid whatever assets he received to the widow, and that he had not at the time of filing the bill any assets belonging to the testator in his possession.

Wm. M. James applied, on the hearing, on behalf of defendant Hewish, to have the bill dismissed as against him, with costs, on the allegations stated in his answer, and contended that he had merely acted as the friend of the family in assisting the widow, on the death of her husband, to collect his assets, and that all he did was under her direction, and that he could not be looked upon otherwise than as a mere agent or servant, for he resided in the house with the widow; and if he was to be charged for those acts, so might a common carrier or messenger be charged as executor of son tort for property which had passed through their hands.

Greene, for the plaintiff, contended that it was groundless in the defendant to set up a defence as mere agent; no doubt he did act as agent, but it was with the full knowledge that the widow had not got administration granted to her, and had no legal authority to protect him for meddling with the estate. The character of agent, servant, or carrier, did not apply in such a case, for persons acting in such characters are not expected to know the authority of the party for whom they act; consequently, in this case, if any of the assets received by Hewish have been lost, he must be held responsible, as executor de son tort, and therefore the bill cannot be dismissed as against him.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In this case the widow of the deceased party intended to take out administration, but before doing so she employed Hewish, who knew the debts belonged to the testator; he received them and paid them over to the widow, who did not afterwards take out administration, but another party did; thus the widow at all events might be sued as executor de son tort. The question is as to Hewish. The case of Padget v. Priest (2 Term Rep. 97) appears to have decided that if Hewish had not paid over what he had received, he, having the money in his hands, might have been sued as executor de son tort. It is not clear from that case what was the exact ground upon which the case was decided; according to the marginal note, that was the point decided. Buller, Justice, doubts if the party had been a mere servant, whether he would have been liable. The case is one of great hardship to Hewish, and I wished to see if I could not treat him as executor de son tort. It seems to be established, that if he had received and not paid over, he would be liable; if so, it seems to follow he cannot discharge himself except by paying over the money as received to the executor. It is hard to find a ground for it, for he might have done the act in a merely ministerial character, as in the case of a servant by the direction of his master. The result of my search amongst the cases is, that the receipt of an agent is the receipt of a principal does not apply in the case of a wrongdoer; this appears from the cases of Stevens v. Elwall (4 Maule & Sel. 259), Snowden v. Davis (1 Taunt. 359), Padget v. Priest, which I have already mentioned. Hewish must, therefore, remain a party to the suit. It is the hardest case I ever knew, but he is a wrong doer, and knew he was so.

Tuesday, June 2.

MAUSER C. JENNER.

Practice—Examination of witnesses—Commission—New interrogatories.

Lloyd moved, as of course, for leave to exhibit new interrogatories before commissioners, and to re-examine old witnesses upon new interrogatories not referring to the old matter; he stated the order might have been got as of course at the Rolls, but the form of the order would have prevented him examining the old witnesses on the new interrogatories. In support of the application, he cited Turner v. Trelawney (9 Sim. 463).

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In that case the terms of the order gave him leave. When you first mentioned it, I thought I could not make the order without notice; I have since consulted another judge of the court, who gives great attention to the practice, and he agreed with me that there was nothing to prevent the commissioners receiving the new interrogatories; but when you make such an application to the Court, you must give notice.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

January 26, and May 4.

BODMER v. BUTTERWORTH.

Patent.

This case turned wholly upon the wording of the patent and specification, and the construction of the machines of the plaintiff and defendant. Models were produced in court, and indeed without them the argument would hardly be intelligible. No point of law was involved in the points at issue.

Byles, Serjt., and Cowling (Jan. 26), showed cause, and Watson, Q.C. and Fosbrooke, were heard in support of the rule. Cur. adv. vult.

On May 4, the Court gave judgment as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—This was an action for the infringement of a patent for improvements in machinery for carding, drawing, roving, and spinning cotton and wool; and upon the trial a verdict was found for the defendant on a plea of not guilty, and also that the plaintiff did not give a true and adequate specification of his invention, as required by the statute; but liberty was reserved to the plaintiff to move to enter the verdict for him upon one or both of those pleas. That motion having been made accordingly, and the case argued before us, we are of opinion that there are no sufficient grounds for disturbing the verdict that has been entered. The plaintiff claimed the application of surface motion, in combination with certain other processes. It was proved that the use of surface motion was old, and formed no part of the plaintiff's invention. Whatever there was of novelty in the plaintiff's invention consisted in the application of that, in combination with other processes, to certain machines called stretchers and drawing machines, used in the manufacture of cotton, but were applicable also to the manufacture of wool. The machine of the defendant was said not to be an infringement of the plaintiff's. It was for the carding of wool only; and though surface motion was used, it was not used in combination with the other processes claimed by the plaintiff. The novel parts of the manufacture, which are the most important and useful parts of the plaintiff's invention, appear to be, collecting the proceeds of several machines into one receiver; and this was no part of the defendant's machine, which is said to shew no further resemblance to the plaintiff's than in coiling and uncoiling by surface motion the proceeds of cards divided into several strips or bands upon one roller. Such a coiling and uncoiling by surface motion is said, on the part of the plaintiff, to be an infringement of his invention; but the specification does not support the claim in that respect—it describes a very different combination of processes. The question depends on the plaintiff's claim and specification, and that which had been done by the defendant, as stated in the evidence; and the result of our opinion is, that whatever there is of novelty in the plaintiff's invention, as described in the specification, has not been infringed by the defendant, and that the verdict for him should stand upon the first count. With respect to the verdict on the issue, denying the specification, we think it should be entered for the plaintiff, as he has specified his invention, though the defendant has not infringed it.

Verdict enlarged accordingly.

WHITAKER v. RICHARDS.

Assumpsit by sub-lessor against sub-lessee—Breach of agreement to repair—Demurrer.

A declaration in assumpsit by sub-lessor against sub-lessee made prout of the original lease for twenty-one years, as being executed by the plaintiff and the original landlord; it set out also a covenant to repair contained in the lease; and alleged that the defendant had agreed to take the premises for two years, and to perform the covenants of the lease in like manner as the plaintiff was bound to perform them.

Breach: That the defendant had not performed the covenants in like manner as the plaintiff was bound to perform them, in this, that he had not, during the continuance of the several terms of two years and twenty-one years, sufficiently repaired, &c. but on the contrary had suffered them to become ruinous, &c. On special demurrer to that breach.

Held, that whether the defendant's liability under the agreement was confined to keeping the premises in the same state of repair in which they were taken his term commenced or not, the breach was sufficient, because it was so limited.

Per Lord Denman, C.J.—The defendant's liability under the agreement was as extensive as the plaintiff's under the lease.

The lease, being set out on oyer, appeared not to be executed by the plaintiff.

Held, that the special demurrer being confined to the breach, it was not open to the defendant to take any objection on that ground.

Held also, that no allegation of the defendant's entry on the premises was necessary; but that if it had been necessary, the want of it could not have been objected to upon this demurrer.

Assumpsit.—The declaration stated that the plaintiff agreed to let, and the defendant agreed to take, for two years wanting one day, the residue of a term of twenty-one years, wanting one day, certain premises, then in the occupation of the plaintiff, under a lease from one Jones, and to observe and keep all the covenants of that lease (except certain painting, which was to be done by the plaintiff), in like manner as the plaintiff was bound to keep them. The declaration made prout of the lease from Jones to the plaintiff (describing it as executed by both parties; and set out inter alia covenants to repair, and not to underlet: one of the breaches was, that the defendant did not, nor would, perform all the covenants of the said lease, in like manner as the plaintiff was bound to perform them, except as above excepted, in this, that the defendant would not sufficiently repair, &c. but on the contrary, during the continuance of the several terms of two years and twenty-one years, wanting one day, that is, from the 29th day of September, 1843, to the 28th day of September, 1845, suffered and permitted the premises to become, and they were, ruinous and out of repair.

Demurrer to that breach.

The defendant craved oyer of the deed, which appeared not to have been executed by the plaintiff.

Bernie, in support of the demurrer.—1st. This breach is ambiguous, in alleging that the defendant did not keep the covenants in like manner as the plaintiff was bound to keep them. 2ndly. Upon oyer it appears that the lease was not executed by the plaintiff, and therefore he was not bound to keep any of the covenants as covenants. This also raises the ground of variance; for the deed set out on oyer differs from the deed pleaded. (Smith v. Yeomans, 1 Saund. 316 a). 3rdly. The breach is more extensive than the promise; for under this breach the defendant would not be at liberty to shew in what state the premises were when he entered; and the liability of the defendant depends upon the state of the premises when he entered in 1843, as the liability of the plaintiff to Jones depends upon the state of the premises when he entered. It is also too large, because it does not contain the exception of painting, which is contained in the promise. 4thly. The declaration is bad for want of an allegation of entry by the defendant, and of permission to underlet.

Peacock, contra.—1. The breach is free from ambiguity; the material part of it being that which says that the defendant, "on the contrary, suffered and permitted the premises to fall into decay." 2. The non-execution of the deed by the plaintiff is quite immaterial; because it is alleged that he held under a lease from Jones upon those terms; and was, therefore, bound to observe them. (Burnett v. Lynch, 5 B. & C. 589.) [PATTERSON, J.—But you make prout of a lease sealed by both the plaintiff and Jones, and on oyer you produce one sealed only by Jones.] It would perhaps have been more correct to say, "one part of which indenture, sealed with the seal of the said J. J. the plaintiff now brings into court;" but it is immaterial; the prout may be rejected as surplusage; and this is not one of the grounds of special demurrer. 3. The breach is sufficient. The defendant has agreed to perform the original covenant to repair; and it would be no answer to say that the premises were out of repair when he entered. He should have looked to that before he made the promise. At all events, if it would be an answer to say that the plaintiff had broken the covenant before the defendant took the lease; here there is a general averment of performance, which, upon general demurrer, is tantamount to an averment of the performance of every condition precedent (Kemble v. Mills, 1 M. & G. 757; Practor v. Sargent, 2 M. & G. 20); and this is not made a point of special demurrer. If the plaintiff's observance of the covenant during his time be a condition subsequent, then his non-performance of it ought to be pleaded. So with regard to the exception of painting; if the defendant means to rely upon that, he ought to plead that the premises are out of repair, because the plaintiff has not painted according to his agreement. 4. No entry is necessary in order to render the defendant liable upon his express covenants. (Williams v. Bosanquet, 1 Brod. & B. 236.)

Bernie, in reply.—This breach does not give the legal effect of the instrument. (Moore v. The Earl of Plymouth, 3 B. & Ald. 66.) The defendant's covenant to repair must be construed with reference to the state of the premises at the time of the lease to him. (Walker v. Hallon, 10 Mees. & W. 249, 256, 258; Piney v. Watts, 2 M. & W. 601; Burdett v. Wilkes, 7 Ad. & Ell. 136; Anon. Slip T. Jones, 1845.)

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—This declaration is framed upon a somewhat peculiar agreement; and my opinion, if it were necessary to give it, would be, that the under-lessee did mean to make himself liable for all breaches of covenant, existing in his time, whether originally committed by him or by the first lessee, and to become in all respects the representative of the first lessee; but here I think that the breach is sufficiently limited to the most narrow construction, and therefore no harm can be done. It is true that there are the general words that the defendant did not perform the covenants "in like manner as the plaintiff was bound to perform them;" but they are explained afterwards by the more precise allegation, that during the continuance of the term of two years, as well as of the term of twenty-one years, the defendant suffered the premises to become ruinous. As to the other points, they arise upon other parts of the declaration which are not demurred to, and not upon the breach which is. The first is, that the deed, when set out on oyer, appears not to be executed by the plaintiff; but I don't apprehend that the defendant can take advantage of that objection in the present state of the paper books. When, however, it is said that this shews that the plaintiff is not bound by any covenants of the lease, I cannot accede to that proposition; my view of it is, that the expression contained in the prout of the instrument is only a description of it; and that the covenants which the defendant would be bound to perform are those which would have been broken by the plaintiff's non-performance, if he had executed the instrument. As to the entry, it is quite clear that the defendant need not enter at all; he has, for a good consideration, entered into an express contract, and by that he is bound. If any thing turned upon the exception as to painting, that matter ought unquestionably to come from the defendant.

PATTERSON, J.—The demurrer being expressly confined to one breach, I do not think it is competent to the defendant to take those other objections, as to the non-execution of the deed and the non-entry; but if it were, the latter is disposed of by Williams v. Bosanquet. As to the other, it would, I think, have been more correct to have made profert of "one part of the indenture, sealed with the seal of the said John Jones." The more important question is, as to the breach demurred to. Now the covenant is, to perform the covenants of the lease in like manner as the plaintiff is bound to perform them, save and except painting; and it is said that this is capable of two meanings. First, it may mean that as soon as the term of two years, for which the premises are taken, commences, the defendant is bound to do every thing which the plaintiff would have been bound to do, if he had not underlet; so that he might be obliged to put them in better repair than when he received them, and in that case the breach would not be too large. But, secondly, if the true construction is that he is only bound to keep the premises in repair and to perform the covenants of the lease, so far as the state of the premises, when he received them, would permit, it is said then the breach is too large; but supposing that were the true construction, and that the defendant had suffered the premises to go further out of repair, I do not see how the breach could be laid otherwise than it is here. It seems to me, that if that breach were put in issue, the question would then properly arise on the facts, what was the true construction of the agreement?

WILLIAMS, J.—If the extent of the defendant's liability were now in question, I should have required further time to consider whether it was not limited to acts of omission during the time he held the premises; but I agree with the rest of the Court, that this breach is clear of doubt on that subject.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

FRASER v. LOYD.

Obstruction of officers appointed by court-leet to examine weights and measures—Statement of presentment.

In reply, the avowry justified under a presentment in a court-leet against the plaintiff for obstructing the officers of the court appointed to examine weights and measures, in the execution of their duty: Held, that the presentment, and therefore the avowry, was bad, for not specifying more particularly the obstruction complained of.

Reply.—The avowry justified under a presentment made at a court-leet for the manor of Clerkenwell, &c. whereby it was presented that the plaintiff had obstructed certain persons, being officers of the court appointed to examine weights and measures, in the execution of their office. Demurrer thereto.

Cleasby (being called upon by the Court), in support of the avowry.—This is the usual form of presentment, and is founded on a precedent in the appendix to Scriven on Copyhold, 423. It is not necessary or proper to set out evidence; but you must allege the fact done for which the fine is imposed, and the obstruction is the fact. He referred to Moore v. Wickers (Andr. 47, 191), and Witcock v. Windsor (3 B. & Adol. 43). [LORD DENMAN, C.J.—What do you say, Mr. Peacock, to Moore v. Wickers?

Peacock, in support of the demurrer.—Moore v. Wickers is an authority for the plaintiff. The presentment in that case did state that the defendant obstructed the officers from entering his shop. [He was then stopped.]

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—It is satisfactory to find that there is authority, though none was needed. It is clearly necessary to state some particulars of the obstruction, which may be effected by force or by various other means.

PATTESON, J.—Enough certainly ought to be stated to let the Court see whether the fact committed was an obstruction.

Cleasby applied for leave to amend.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—Before we grant that, we had better look to the other objections.

WILKINSON v. GUSTON.

Declaration for improperly discharging a servant—Commencement of the service—Effect of the word "from"—Allegation of "readiness and offer."

A declaration for improperly discharging a servant alleged the contract to be to serve "from" a certain day under a videlicet, and the discharge to have taken place on the day above mentioned, also under a videlicet: Held, on demurrer, that although the word "from" may be construed to exclude the first day, it does not necessarily exclude it; and that upon the face of this declaration it appeared to be the intention of the parties to the contract that it should be included; consequently, that there was no inconsistency in the above dates.

The declaration averred that the plaintiff had always been ready and willing, and had offered to continue in the defendant's service.

Held, that this averment was not double.

The declaration alleged that the defendant had discharged the plaintiff "without any notice" in that behalf.

Held sufficient, on special demurrer.

Assumpsit.—The declaration stated, that heretofore, to wit, on the 15th day of October, A.D. 1844, in consideration that the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, would serve the defendant in the capacity of secretary from a certain day, to wit, the day and year aforesaid, the plaintiff promised to retain and employ him in that capacity, &c. And although the plaintiff afterwards, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, did enter into the service of the defendant in the capacity and on the terms aforesaid; and although the plaintiff had always been ready and willing, and tendered and offered to continue in the said service of the said defendant, yet the defendant, not regarding his promise, would not continue the plaintiff in his said service, &c. but, on the contrary thereof, refused to suffer him to continue, and then, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, discharged him from his said service, without any notice in that behalf, &c.

Special demurrer thereto.

Pashley, in support of the demurrer.—First. The declaration does not shew that the discharge took place after the commencement of the service. The service is alleged to commence from the 15th of Oct. and the discharge is laid on the same day. Those are inconsistent dates, because the word "from" is exclusive of the first day; for which he cited Clayton's case (5 Co. Rep. 1; Hob. 139); Thomas v. Popham (Dyer, 218 b.; Sir F. Moore, 40); Dowling v. Foxhall (1 Bell & Beattie, Ir. R.); Halson's case (Latch. 183); Viner's Ab. Time, pl. 16; Lester v. Garland (15 Ves. 248); Pugh v. The Duke of Leeds (Cowp. 714); Webb v. Fairmaner (3 Mes. & W. 473); Gorst v. Lowndes (11 Sim. 434); 4 Kent's Com. 95. [WILLIAMS, J. mentioned R. v. Goringay (3 T. R. 513), and Hardy v. Ryle (9 B. & C. 603).] And these allegations of date, though under videlicet, are material, and must be taken to be true. (Ring v. Rosborough, 2 Cr. & J. 418; 2 Tyr. 468; Harris v. Manille, 3 T. R. 307; Edge v. Pemberton, 12 M. & W. 187.) Secondly, the averment that the plaintiff was ready and willing, and that he also offered to continue in the service, is bad for duplicity, according to the judgment of Maule, J. in Jackson v. Alloway (7 Seott N.R. 875). Thirdly, the allegation that the defendant was discharged without notice is insufficient; it ought to have been without notice from either of the parties.

Peacock, contra.—The authorities cited only shew that the word "from" may be exclusive of the day of the date of the document, if there is nothing in it to lead to a contrary inference; but on the face of this declaration, it appears clearly that the plaintiff had entered into the service on the terms of the contract; there is an express allegation of that fact, which dispenses of the objection first taken; but even if that did not appear, the objection could only apply to the first day of the refusal to employ, not to any subsequent days; and the declaration is, "from thence hitherto has refused to retain and employ the plaintiff."

[PATTESON, J.—Would the declaration be good, if the discharge were laid on a day previous to the commencement of the service?]
Yes, for the continuance of the contract to employ after the service had commenced.

[PATTESON, J.—Should it not then have been that the defendant refused to take the plaintiff into his service,—not that he refused to continue him in his service?]
The words used are sufficient,—that the defendant wrongfully discharged him, and hath wholly neglected and refused any longer to retain and employ him. 2nd. The mere readiness to continue in the service would not be enough; the plaintiff must offer so to do; and the allegation of both therefore is not double. In Jackson v. Alloway (6 M. & G. 492) no tender was necessary; because the contract was to deliver goods at a particular place. 3rd. If the plaintiff had given notice to put an end to the contract, the defendant ought to plead it; but the supposition is rebutted by the averment of readiness and willingness. (Kingsbury v. Collins, 4 Blag.)

*Pashley, in reply, as to the averment of readiness and willingness, cited Boyd v. Lett (1 C. B. 222), and Lord Huntingtower v. Gardiner (1 B. & C. 297, 301); Hilton v. Swann (5 Blag. N.C. 413, 7 Scott, 398), to shew that before verdict an ambiguity is not to be taken in favour of the party pleading.*

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—First, the objection as to the allegation of notice is quite unfounded; it is inconsistent with the averment of readiness and willingness to suppose that the plaintiff could have given notice to determine the contract. Secondly, the question, whether the word "from" is exclusive, depends upon all the circumstances of each case; that is the doctrine of the American, as it is of all the best English authorities; and here, taking the plaintiff's statement as entire, we find a contract under which he could enter the service on the day named; and we may at least presume that he means to state that, which would be a cause of action. Thirdly, as to the averment of readiness and offering to continue making the declaration double, it is certain that an offer was necessary; and that the issue would be upon that.

PATTESON, J.—This demurrer is founded upon the notion that "from" must be exclusive; but that is not so; and if not, I do not see why we are to infer that the meaning of the parties was to make it exclusive, when there are averments of facts leading to the contrary inference. The parties have acted upon it as an agreement, which did not exclude the first day; and if the facts are proved as stated, the evidence would shew that intention beyond all doubt. I therefore think that, in this case, "from" is not to be construed as excluding the day of the date of the agreement, though I agree that prima facie it would be so. I entirely agree as to the other objections.

WILLIAMS, J. concurring.

REG. v. ST. ANNE'S, WESTMINSTER.

Hiring and service—Statement of settlement.

Where the examination set up a settlement by hiring and service, by an employment for several continuous years, it must be shewn that at the commencement of the year during which residence is alleged, the pauper was unmarried, and without child or children, just as when service for one year only is relied upon.

In or about the year 1832, is an insufficient statement for a settlement by hiring and service.

The Sessions had on appeal confirmed an order for the removal of a pauper from the parish of St. Pancras, Middlesex, to the parish of St. Anne's, Westminster, subject to the opinion of this Court on the question, along with others, whether the evidence sufficiently disclosed a settlement. The pauper stated, that in or about the year 1832, she had been hired as a yearly servant by a Mr. Walker, and all other circumstances that could have made out a complete settlement if the statement "in or about the year 1832," was good. She also stated a service with a Mr. Stroud, in St. Anne's, for five years commencing in 1827, as a yearly servant; that at the time when she was hired, she was an unmarried woman, without child or children, and that she resided in the house of her master for the last forty days of such service.

Franderghast and Howarth, in support of the order of Sessions.

Pashley, contra.—As the 66th section of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, enacts that "no person under any contract of hiring and service, not completed at the time of the passing of this Act (the 14th of August, 1834), shall acquire, or be deemed or adjudged to have acquired, any settlement by reason of such hiring and service, or of any residence under the same," this statement of a settlement is within the decision in R. v. St. Paul's, Covent Garden (1 N. S. C. 617), and bad for not being shewn to be complete before the 14th of August, 1834. As to the second settlement, no residence is stated under the contract for the first year of the service; the condition prescribed by the statute must be fulfilled to give a settlement on the contract implied from protracted service (R. v. Barton-upon-Irwell (2 M. & S. 129); and as there is no statement of the pauper being unmarried and without child or children at the time of the commencement of the last year for which only inhabiting is stated, there is no settlement made out.

By the COURT.—That is our view. A new contract is implied from each year of service, and therefore the same ingredients of a settlement must appear as at the commencement of the service. The point in the other settlement is not to be distinguished from that in R. v. St. Paul's, Covent Garden.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. GRIFFIN.

Conviction—3 Geo. 4, c. 23—52 Geo. 3, c. 93.

The 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, does not apply to cases where the prior statute prescribes preliminary proceedings; as, for instance, to 52 Geo. 3, c. 93, as to the taking game with dogs, or without a certificate.

The Sessions, on appeal against a conviction for taking game with gun and dog, confirmed the conviction, subject to a case in which the two questions were, whether the conviction which, under 52 Geo. 3, c. 93, s. 15, was good, there being no real information and complaint; and also whether, as the information had been laid before a single commissioner, not a justice by whom only the summons was issued, though the conviction was signed by five commissioners, of whom two were justices, was good.

Greenwood shewed cause.—The conviction is verbatim the form in the schedule of the Act. The defect secondly objected to is cured by 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, s. 2. Commissioners under the 52 Geo. 3, being "other persons," within the meaning of that Act.

Merivale and Cornish.—As to the first point, it is submitted there must be a statement of complaint and summons, to render the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, applicable. (R. v. Hale, 13 East, 139; R. v. Neale, 5 East, 417.) As to the second point, the words of 52 Geo. 3, c. 13, s. 15, are, "it shall be lawful for any two commissioners, &c." but a single justice is to have the same power as two commissioners. It could not have been the intention that the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, should affect any preliminary proceedings, expressly prescribed by statute. Commissioners of taxes are not officers ejusdem generis with justices, deputy lieutenants, and those expressly named in the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, and were therefore not contemplated by other persons. (Kitchen v. Shaw, 6 A. & E. 729; James v. Gurdon, 2 Q. B. 600.)

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—I think the 3 Geo. 4. does not apply to the 52 Geo. 3.

PATTERSON, J.—Mr Merivale is quite right. There is an express provision in the 52 Geo. 3, c. 93, by which the preliminary proceedings are prescribed. The 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, was only intended to apply to cases in which the statute had not made any such express provision. Rule absolute.

Thursday, June 4.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF RADNORSHIRE.

Maintenance of lunatic pauper—Liability of county. Two justices of Radnorshire having removed a lunatic pauper to an asylum in another county on one day, made another order on a subsequent day adjudging his settlement in parish H. in their own county, and requiring the overseers to pay a weekly sum for his future, and a certain sum for his past, maintenance. That order having been quashed by this Court, an application was made for a mandamus to compel the county treasurer to repay to the parish the money which had been paid by them under that order: Held, that this Court had no power to grant the application.

Pashley, in last Easter Term, obtained a rule calling on the county treasurer and justices of the county of Radnor to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue, commanding them to pay to the overseers of the parish of Heyop, in that county, a sum of money expended by them for the maintenance, medicine, clothing, and care of an insane pauper, in a licensed house at Shrewsbury, in the county of Salop, in obedience to an order of justices. It appeared, upon the affidavits, that that order was made on the 30th Nov. 1844, by two justices of the county of Radnor, and that it recited a previous order made by the same two justices on the 13th of the same month, for the removal of the pauper to the licensed house at Shrewsbury. The order of the 30th November was appealed against, and confirmed by the Sessions, but quashed by this Court in last Hilary Vacation (Feb. 3), upon a case reserved. (R. v. Heyop, 12 New Sess. C. 270; 1 Bitt. & Sym. 497.)

E. V. Williams now shewed cause.—This application rests entirely upon the supposition that the county is primarily liable to bear these expenses; but that is not so. It is true that the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, s. 41, provides that, where the settlement cannot be ascertained, the justices who order the removal of the pauper to an asylum may also direct the payment of the necessary expenses of maintenance, &c. by the county treasurer; but that is from the necessity of the thing; and the justices have, in this case, made no such order.

Pashley.—No substantial answer has been given to this application. The legislature has at all events provided that the county is to be liable until the settlement is ascertained; and here the settlement has not been ascertained, for an order quashed in the 14th it had never been made. Then the money paid by the parish was, in effect, money paid for the county; and the real difficulty is, that if an action for money had and received would lie, the Court would not grant a mandamus, but as that is doubtful, the Court will interfere.

Cases referred to: R. v. Darton (12 Ad. & Ell. 78); R. v. The Justices of Kent (2 Q.B. 686); Lindon v. Hooper (Comp. 419); R. v. Pixley (4 Q.B. 711); Wing v. Mill (1 B. & Ald. 104); Tomlinson v. Benthill (5 B. & C. 738).

By the COURT.—We cannot find any authority for granting this application. The only power given by the statute to charge the county with these expenses is in the 41st section, which empowers justices to order the county treasurer to pay them, when they cannot ascertain the settlement of the pauper removed; but in this case the magistrates have omitted to make that order, and we have no power to supply that omission. Rule discharged with costs.

REG. v. THE RECORDER AND JUSTICES OF LONDON.

Appeal against order of removal—Entry and respite. Justices are bound to enter and respite an appeal against an order of removal at the sessions next after the order made, if no notice has been given to the respondents, and a notice given in time for the second sessions is sufficient.

A rule nisi had been obtained for a mandamus to compel the recorder and justices of London to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order of removal under the following circumstances:—On the 25th November, 1845, the order was made, and on the following day notice thereof given to the appellants. The removal took place on the 22nd December, and at the January sessions an appeal was entered and respited. On the 21st March notice of appeal was given, and at the April sessions the appeal came on to be heard. The objection was then taken that the notice ought to have been given for the January sessions, and the appeal then tried, and the Sessions being of that opinion, refused to hear the appeal.

Payne now shewed cause.—The question as to notice of appeal is one which the statute 9 Geo. 1, c. 7, leaves entirely to the discretion of the justices, and this Court, therefore, will not interfere. (R. v. The Justices of Cornwall, 6 Ad. & Ell. 894; R. v. The Justices of Lancashire, 4 Q.B. 910; R. v. Staffordshire, 7 East, 549.)

Pashley, contra, was not called upon.

By the COURT.—The case last cited has always been considered as having settled the practice under the stat. 9 Geo. 1, c. 7; and the Poor-Law Amendment Act has made no difference in this respect. If the appeal is made to the next sessions after the order, the justices are bound by that practice to receive and adjourn it, if no notice of the appeal has been given to the respondents; and then a notice given for the next sessions is in time. The justices, therefore, in this case ought to have heard the appeal, and the rule for a mandamus must be absolute. Rule absolute.

CHAMBERLAIN v. HAMMOND.

Consideration—Sale by private contract—Solicitor's liability.

The declaration stated that certain premises had been put up for sale upon certain conditions, and after setting them out, alleged that, in consideration, the plaintiff had then agreed to purchase the same, and to perform the conditions so far as the same related to sales by private contract, and pay the deposit into the hands of the defendant; the defendant then, by a memorandum, in writing, then signed by the defendant, agreed, on behalf of the vendors, that the vendors should perform the conditions of sale: Held, on general demurrer, that the consideration was not past, and that there was a sufficient consideration for the promise by the defendant, and that he was liable upon a breach for non-delivery of an abstract.

Special assumpsit.—The declaration was framed as above, and upon the demurrers to one of the pleas, and to one of the replications, upon technical points, the question was, whether the declaration was good, it being objected that it shewed no consideration for the defendant's promise; that the promise stated was not a personal liability of the defendant, but a promise as agent for the vendors.

Bovill, in support of the declaration, was proceeding to argue, upon the authority of Thornton v. Jenyns (1 M. & G. 166), that the transaction was shewn to be a continuing one, and not a past and executed consideration; but Willes, for the defendant, admitted that this was so. As to the other points, it was then argued that there was a consideration, for the deposit was paid into the defendant's hands; and, according to one of the conditions, the purchaser was to pay him one guinea for the agreement. It was not a contract signed by him as agent; and it is quite competent for a person to agree that another shall do something. (Appleton v. Binks, 5 East, 148; Kennedy v. Gougeon, 3 D. & R. 503; Norton v. Heron, 1 C. & P. 648.)

Willes, contra.—The declaration is framed in a very unusual manner, and the following points are laid: and although it is alleged the plaintiff had agreed to purchase, it is not stated that he agreed with the defendant. It is clear that the defendant was only the solicitor in the transaction, and received no benefit, nor is there any consideration for the promise. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is not clear that the defendant was not himself the vendor.] It is not stated that he was. The omission to allege the promise to the defendant to pay the deposit to him would be cured, if there was any promise implied by law, but not otherwise. (Price v. Easton, 4 B. & Ad. 435.) Then it is a contract by him as agent. (Spittle v. Lavender, 2 B. & B. 450; Wilson v. Barthrop, 2 M. & W. 868; Downman v. Jones, 14 L. J.)

Bovill, in reply, distinguished Spittle v. Lavender by the circumstance that there the principal immediately ratified the act of the agent. He was then stopped.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—There are certainly some words in the declaration that appear to limit the promise as the act of an agent, but no very clear rule can be laid down from the cases, and we must be guided by the whole of the allegations taken together. The defendant here expressly promises that the vendors shall perform the conditions, and there is nothing repugnant in supposing that this was his express intention.

PATTERSON, J.—It does not appear here who was the vendor, or whether the defendant himself was not. It is said that he promised that the vendors should perform, &c. but the conditions only mention one vendor.

SCADDING v. EYLES.

Attorney's bill.

Stating an account does not bar a client from taxing his solicitor's bill.

A plea to the work and labour, &c. "claimed" in the declaration, is a sufficient confession of the cause of action.

Demurrer to pleas to an attorney's bill, that the work and labour, &c. "claimed" to be due in the declaration, were in respect of business done by the plaintiff as attorney, solicitor, &c. and no taxed bill had been delivered. To the account stated there was a similar plea: that the account was stated, of and concerning such work, &c.

Peacock, in support of the demurrer.—There is no sufficient evidence of the cause of action. Claimed to be due, is like "if any," which has been held bad. (Margetts v. Bays, 4 A. & E. 489; Gould v. Insbury, 1 C. M. & R. 254.) The stating the account itself a debt, and then this plea is bad. (Heoper v. Tull, 1 Doug.)

Lush, contra.—Such a construction would defeat the whole object of the statute; and as to the other objection, "claimed" is the same as "supposed," and that has been held a sufficient confession.

By the COURT.—There must be judgment for the defendant. Judgment for the defendant.

v.

Lush moved for a rule nisi to set aside a plea and sign judgment. It was an action upon a judgment of the Queen's Bench, and therefore the venue was Middlesex, and the plea was that the judgment-rolls were not in Middlesex, but in the city of London. Rule nisi.

Saturday, June 6.

R. v. THE CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF AYLESBURY.

Rating—County Rate—Grand Junction Canal Act, Construction of.

By 34 Geo. 3, c. 24, s. 19 (the Grand Junction Canal Act), it was directed that the company should be rated for their lands and buildings in the same proportion as adjacent lands, "to all parliamentary and parochial taxes and assessments."

Held, 1. That county rates, being paid out of the Poor Rates, were parochial taxes within the meaning of that section, and to be rated accordingly; 2. That that section was not repealed either by the 54 Geo. 3, c. 103 (an Act confined to the county of Bucks), or by the 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, the general County Rates Act.

The company of proprietors of the Grand Junction Canal were assessed to a county rate upon the improved value given to their land by its being used as a canal; against that rate they appealed; and the Quarter Sessions for the county of Bucks confirmed the rate, subject to a case; which referred to the 34 Geo. 3, c. 24, s. 19: By that clause it is enacted that the company shall from time to time be rated to all parliamentary and parochial taxes and assessments, for their lands, &c. in the proportion as other lands, &c. lying near the canal are or shall be rated. The case also referred to other Acts of Parliament, which are sufficiently noticed in the argument.

M. Chambers, Q.C. and T. Scadding, in support of the order of Sessions.—This rate is perfectly valid for several reasons. First, the nineteenth clause of the Canal Act, exempting the canal from liability on its improved value, is repealed by 54 Geo. 3, c. 103, and 55 Geo. 3, c. 51. The former is a local Act, applying only to the county of Bucks, but the latter section of it expressly requires the company to make the county rate upon the full and fair annual value; and so by the 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, a general Act for the more easy assessing, collecting, and levying of county rates, justices in general are empowered to order a fair and equal county rate to be made, and for that purpose to assess every parochial, separately and equally, according to a certain general rate, &c. of the full and fair annual value of the messuages, &c. rateable to the relief of the poor. (Sec. 1.) They are also authorised to require churchwardens and overseers to make returns of the total amount of the full and fair annual value of the rateable property within the parish, "without regard, nevertheless, to the actual amounts assessed on the property therein, except in such parishes, &c. only where such property is assessed to the full and fair estimated annual productive value." (Sec. 2.) These provisions are so completely inconsistent with the 19th section of the Canal Act, that they must be held to repeal it. Secondly, assuming that the 19th clause is still in force, a county rate is not within it. It is not a parliamentary tax. For Alderson, B. in Palmer v. Barlt (14 M. & W. 439), where all the cases are cited and commented upon in Mr. Peacock's argument. R. v. The Grand Junction Canal Company (1 B. & Ald. 286) was decided upon this very clause; but the question there arose upon a poor rate, which is clearly a parochial tax. (The Solicitor-General.—So is security rate.) No; a parochial tax is one imposed by a parish for parish purposes alone; but this is a rate for county purposes. In order to relieve the company from contributing their share to the county rates, the exemption must be clear and express; for the rule is, that if the words are doubtful, they are to be construed in favour of the public, and against the private right. (Barrett v. The Great Eastern and Dartington Railway Company, 2 M. & G. 134.) They also cited R. v. Town of Don (4 M. & G. 134); Chaffield v. Ruston (3 B. & C. 865); R. v. Wislow (5 Ad. & Ell. 260).

The Solicitor-General (Gordon with him).—R. v. The Grand Junction Canal Company (1 B. & Ald. 286) is precisely in point, because the county rate is a "parochial tax" as much as the poor rate. The county rate is always paid out of the poor rate; and, indeed, there is no other mode of collecting it. Both the Real Act and the general Act relating to the county rates incorporate the provisions of 12 Geo. 3, c. 29; and that statute provides no machinery for collecting the county rate separately from the poor rate. [Chambers, Q.C. referred to the 13th section of 55 Geo. 3, c. 61, which recites that it would be inconvenient and oppressive to many townships that the sum assessed on them for a county rate should be paid out of the poor rate.] [PATTERSON, J.—That is, where there is no poor rate applying separately to the particular place.] Exactly, if there be no poor rate, then a different machinery is provided. The legislature has throughout contemplated a complete identity between the two rates; as also appears from the subsequent statutes, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 83, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 111. [PATTERSON, J.—Those words in the 2nd section of 55 Geo. 3, c. 61, "without regard to the actual amounts assessed," &c. refer to the proportion as between different parishes, not to the amount of individual assessments.] He was then stopped.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—The poor rate is the fund out of which the county rate is paid; and when a Canal Act prescribes a particular mode of rating, it must be taken that that is a fair mode; Parliament has found that it is so. The words of the two Acts referred to may be general enough to impose a different mode of rating; and if they had been followed by the phrase "any thing in any former Act to the contrary notwithstanding," the question would have been different; but that is not so. The object of those Acts was to facilitate the collection of county rates, and to make them more equal as between different parishes; but not to affect the rating of individual occupiers as between each other in the same parish. Then the county rate being substantially the same as the poor rate, the decision of this Court soon after the Canal Act passed is quite applicable; and the rate upon the larger amount is bad.

PATTERSON and WILLIAMS, JJ. concurred.

Rate to be amended accordingly.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF ST. MARTIN.

Union of two parishes—Settlement gained in one before the union.

Where two parishes have been united into one for all but ecclesiastical purposes, a settlement gained in either, before the union, continues after it as a settlement in the united parish.

On appeal against an order of removal, the Sessions quashed the order, subject to a case, from which the following facts appeared:—

The parishes of St. John the Baptist and St. Benet, Shrotonbury, were, by a local Act, united into one parish, except for ecclesiastical purposes.

The pauper was born in the parish of St. John the Baptist, before the union, and, subsequently thereto, was removed from the parish of St. Martin to the parish of St. John.

It was agreed between the parties, for the purpose of saving the question intended to be submitted to the Court, that in case the pauper might legally be removed to the parish in which he was born, or to the united parishes, the present order of removal was to be quashed, otherwise to be quashed.

JUNE 3.—KINGSLAKE, SERJ. and V. LEE, in support of the order of Sessions.—It is to be contended, on part of the appellants, that, the two parishes being now united into one, the effect was that the settlements previously gained in either of them were lost and destroyed. By the Act 4 Wm. 4, c. 23 (local and personal), the parishes were united into one, except for ecclesiastical matters; and by sec. 6, that nothing in that Act should prevent or hinder officers of parishes from collecting and levying rates due before passing of Act, for such purposes, but for such purposes only parishes were to remain distinct. Therefore the parish in which the settlement was gained is extinguished; it is now part of a district in which the pauper did not gain a settlement. In support of this were cited Rea v. Layton on the Hill (5 B. & Al. 775); Reg. v. Oakmore, lb.; Reg. v. Tipton (3 Q. B. 215). These cases are the converse of the present case. There the townships forming parts of a parish were separated from each other for the purpose of maintaining their poor. Here two parishes were united into one; but the effect is the same in both cases, viz. to destroy the parish or district in which the settlement was gained. These cases were again before the Court in Reg. v. Hummington (5 Q. B. 273) and Reg. v. Acton (1 New Mag. Cas. 420; 2 New S. C. 183, and 15 L. J. N. S. M. C. 21); and the decision of the former case was recognized and acted upon.

JUNE 6.—CROWDER, Q.C. contra, was stopped by the Court.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—We are of opinion that the settlement gained in St. John the Baptist was not extinguished by the operation of the Act. We felt great regret in being obliged to decide Reg. v. Tipton as we did; but we felt we could decide in no other way. There the settlement had been gained in a district divided into several independent districts, no one of which could be held liable to maintain the paupers who had gained their settlements in the whole parish. Here there is no difficulty in holding that persons who had gained settlements in either of the united parishes are entitled to be supported by the united parish.

ARTHUR ROWAN HAMILTON v. THE QUEEN.

Indictment for obtaining by false pretences a valuable security—Sufficiency of.

An indictment charged that the defendant did, on a certain day, falsely pretend to one A B that he was then a captain in the 5th dragoon guards, with intent to cheat and defraud the said A B; and that by means of the said false pretence he obtained from the said A B a valuable security, to wit, a certain cheque for 500l. and of the value of 500l.: Held, upon error brought, that the indictment was good.

Error upon an indictment which charged that, on a day named, the defendant did falsely pretend to Capt. James Wood that he, the defendant, was then a captain in the 5th dragoon guards, with intent to cheat and defraud the said Capt. James Wood; negating that the defendant was a captain in the 5th dragoon guards at the time when he so falsely pretended, and alleging that by means of the said false pretence the defendant obtained a certain valuable security, to wit, a cheque, &c. for the sum of 500l. and of the value of 500l., &c.

Ballantine, for the plaintiff in error, submitted, 1st, That the indictment did not sufficiently connect the false pretence and the obtaining of the security as cause and effect; that the pretence itself was not one in any way calculated to produce the result stated; and that therefore an express allegation ought to be inserted of the mode in which the false pretence operated, and that the false pretence was made for the purpose of procuring the thing actually obtained; citing R. v. Young (3 T. R. 98); R. v. Wakeling (Russ. & Ry. 504); R. v. Wackell (2 East's P. C. 830); R. v. Airey (1b. 30); R. v. Perrot 2 M. & S. 379; R. v. Tully (9 Car. & P. 227); R. v. Wickham (10 Ad. & Ell. 35); R. v. Reed (7 Car. & P. 848). [PATTERSON, J.—That last case is not to be found amongst the Crown cases reserved.] 2ndly, That the pretence was not shewn to be false by a sufficient allegation. (R. v. Perrot.) The pretence laid is, that he was then a captain, &c.; that is, on the day on which the pretence was made, and if he were a captain on any part of the day, the representation would be true; but the indictment, in negating that statement, confines the negation to a particular part of the day, viz. the moment when the statement was made. (Stead v. Poyer, 14 L. J. N. S. C. P. 241.) Lastly, The indictment does not shew that any money remained due and unsatisfied on the cheque.

C. Clark (with whom was Bodkin) for the Crown, was requested to direct his attention to the last point. R. v. Blake and Tye, 13 L. J., N. S. Q. B. 255, was an indictment for conspiring to cause certain goods imported, to be carried away, without payment of duties; and the Court held, that the gist of the indictment being the conspiracy, it was necessary to shew what the goods were, or what duties were payable in respect of them; and so in the present case, the false pretence is the gist of the indictment, and the value of the thing obtained is not material; but if it be, then it is here expressly alleged that the cheque was a valuable security, and the value of it is stated. He also cited R. v. Crossley (2 Moo. & R. 17). He was then stopped.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—None of the objections can be sustained. 1st. It is not necessary to allege that the false pretence was made for the purpose of obtaining the security which was obtained; the indictment under this statute is proved by evidence that the defendant did, in fact, make a false pretence, and did thereby gain any chattel, money, or valuable security. As to the means by which the thing is obtained, although we cannot see directly how the pretence made would operate to induce the prosecutor to part with his money, still it is easy to suppose that there might be circumstances which would give that effect to the statement. One of the errors assigned is, that the pretence is not sufficient in law; but it is difficult to say that any false pretence, whereby chattel, money, or valuable security was obtained, would not be sufficient. The next objection is, that the pretence is not shewn to be false by sufficient allegations; but I don't know why the mere statement that it was false would not be sufficient. At all events, here it is directly negated; and as to the word "then" introduced into the indictment, it is clear that it refers to the point of time at which the false pretence was made. Lastly, it is alleged that the thing obtained was a valuable security; in this respect the words of the statute are followed, and that is enough. We do not overrule R. v. Read, because that is no decision. That case certainly was not brought before the judges as stated in the report.

AMELET v. BRUCK.

Stamp—Bill of exchange—Material alteration. This was an action on a bill of exchange drawn in Paris upon, and afterwards accepted by, the defendant in London. The bill declared on was a bill for 122l. 2s. At the trial of the cause which took place a few days ago before Mr. Justice Wightman, the bill was put in evidence. It was unstamped. "It was in the French language, and the sum was stated thus:—"Cent vingt quatre livres sterling, deux pence" (124l. 0s. 2d.); but a line had been drawn through the word quatre, and the acceptance made in London was written in English thus:—"Accepted for one hundred and twenty-two pounds two shillings." It was submitted that this alteration vitiated the bill by making it a fresh bill, which must be considered an English bill, and therefore required a stamp; and that if it did not, then that the variance between the bill as declared on and that which was proved in evidence was fatal to the maintenance of the action. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, subject to those objections.

Humphrey, Q.C. now moved for a rule to set aside the verdict, and enter a nonsuit, and he particularly pressed the point, that the alteration made in England amounted to the drawing of a fresh bill, and therefore something which required a stamp.

REG. v. THE BISHOP OF CHESTER.

Right to pews.

The Attorney-General and Phipson shewed cause against a rule obtained by the Solicitor-General for a mandamus to the Bishop of Chester to assign Mr. Trairs two pews in the church of Blackley, in Manchester, lately rebuilt. It appears that this is a chapel not supported nor built at the expense of the inhabitants. The pews are claimed by prescription, and the new church is stated to be "nearly" upon the site of the old one. This is too vague; and the affidavits on the other side state that no part of the new church is upon the old site.

The Solicitor-General, contra.

By the COURT.—The affidavits are too vague. "Nearly" fixes nothing.

Rule discharged with costs.

REG. v. THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD.

Church-rates—Polling.

The vicar presiding at a poll for church-rates may, if he pleases, call in an assessor to assist him in deciding upon the objections taken to the votes.

Where, however, he decided them himself, believing that he could afterwards have their legality examined by persons called scrutators, and this mistake was also made by the opposite parties, the Court refused a mandamus to adjourn the poll and reconsider the votes so given.

M. D. Hill, Q.C. and Atherton, shewed cause against a rule for a mandamus to the Vicar of Wakefield to enter adjournments and hold a poll for a church-rate. It appeared that a poll had been demanded upon a church-rate, and taken. The vicar presided, and it lasted from August 18 to September 2. Attorneys were employed on both sides, and numerous objections taken. The vicar took a note of these, but admitted or refused the votes according to his own views, thinking, as did also both parties, that there were some officers or scrutators who could subsequently examine the votes. At the close of the poll, he declared the majority in favour of the rate to be 150, and sealed up the books for the future scrutiny. However it was then discovered that there was no legal power to review the decision, and this mandamus was applied for. It was now opposed, on the ground that all parties had concurred in the mistake; and if the rate were bad, it could be contested in other ways.

Baines, Q.C. and Hall, in support of the rule. By the COURT.—We hope we shall not be understood as entertaining any doubt of our right to revise all common-law proceedings in the nature of an election, and to see that they are fairly conducted, and the conclusion properly arrived at. We feel no doubt but that we have such power. The question, therefore, is, whether this is a case for exercising it. Now, it is impossible not to see that the vicar believed that there was some power, which he called a scrutator, to which the questions of law raised at the poll might be referred; and he was not singular in that opinion, because the parties with adverse interests, who appeared before him, thought the same thing. The mistake, therefore, has been one of all parties. Then it appears that the vicar was quite faithful to his purpose, for, after declaring the result, he sealed up the poll-books, and reserved them for the inspection of the scrutator. Now it is very true that, in the first instance, he might have called in an assessor, some person more learned in the law than himself, and have been guided by that person; but that is not what he did. He decided upon every vote as presented, subject indeed to the future opinion of a supposed authority which did not exist. Now he is called upon to decide the same votes over again. He is fully entitled to answer, "I have decided;" and there is no reason to suppose that he would decide differ-ently. The reason is, because he thought a scrutator might be appointed. The objection must apply to certain votes, the number of which is limited; and in each case the fact of the objection being taken must be made out from minutes or parol evidence, which will be subjected to comment and to controversy. The inconvenience, therefore, would be very great, because the delay where there are 150 such votes, at the least, would seem to be almost interminable. Taking all things together, and bearing in mind that other opportunities will arise for impeaching the rate if it be bad, as suggested, we are of opinion that we ought not to call on the vicar to institute the scrutiny which is now prayed for, and this rule, therefore, must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

Gray shewed cause.—This is, in fact, a second application, and will not be allowed. (R. v. Barton, 9 D. P. C. 1021; R. v. Great Western Railway, 1 D. & L. 874.)

Archbold, contra.—If this amendment is not allowed, there is no remedy. The several causes of damage were mentioned, and it was intended that the rule should have been so drawn up. [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—Was the brief so indorsed handed to the Master?] That is not positively stated; but if not, it was the mistake of counsel.

BEARD v. EGERTON.

1. A person who has learnt an invention abroad, and imported it into this country, where it was not understood or known before, is the first and true inventor within the statute; and that, even though the person be not a meritorious importer, but a mere clerk, servant, or agent to whom the communication is made.

2. There is nothing to prevent an alien from receiving a grant of patent if the Crown thinks proper, either in his own name or that of another.

3. The previous assignment, publication, or exercise of a new invention in a foreign country does not affect the validity of an English patent.

Case by the plaintiff, as assignee of one Miles Berry, against the defendant, for the infringement of a patent.

Plea 5. That before the making of the letters patent, &c. to wit, &c. one L. Daguerre had invented the said new or improved method of, &c. in the declaration mentioned, and the said L. D. and one J. N. before the making of the said letters patent, and at the time of their employing the said M. B. as their agent to procure such letters patent as in the declaration mentioned to be granted by our lady the Queen, to him the said M. B. in his own name, but upon trust for the use and benefit of the said L. D. and J. N. and not of the said M. B. and the said M. B. then accepted of such retainer and employment, and in order to enable him to obtain the said letters patent for the purpose aforesaid, they, the said L. D. and J. N. before the making of the said letters patent, to wit, &c. communicated to the said M. B. the nature and particulars of the said invention, and in what manner, &c.; and he then and thereby, and by no other means, first became and was possessed of the knowledge thereof, and thereupon, to wit, &c. the said M. B. brought and introduced the knowledge of the said invention, and of the manner, &c. into the United Kingdom, &c. and was the first person who had or received or brought in or into the said United Kingdom the knowledge of the said invention, and of the manner, &c.; and that the said M. B. was not otherwise the true and first inventor of the said invention in the declaration mentioned, than by having such communication made to him as aforesaid, and by so becoming possessed of the knowledge of the said invention as aforesaid, and by his being the first person in the United Kingdom, &c. who acquired or brought in or into the same the knowledge of the said invention, and of the manner, &c.; and that the said invention having been so communicated to him as aforesaid, he, the said M. B. being a subject of our lady the Queen, afterwards, to wit, &c. in pursuance of his said retainer and employment, and, as such agent of the said L. D. and J. N. as aforesaid, obtained the said letters patent upon trust for the use and benefit of the said L. D. and J. N. so then being such aliens and resident and domiciled as aforesaid, and not for the use or benefit of him, the said M. B.; and until the making of the said assignment, he, the said M. B. always held the said letters patent for the benefit of the said L. D. and J. N. so being such aliens and domiciled as aforesaid, and no otherwise. Wherefore the said letters patent were and are void.—Verification.

The 6th plea, after referring to the facts contained in the 5th plea, as to the invention and the retainer of M. B. by L. D. and J. N. and the procurement of the letters patent by him, went on to aver that before M. B. applied for or obtained the said letters patent, a certain agreement was duly made between the Secretary of State for the Home Department in the kingdom of France of the one part, and L. D. and J. N. of the other part. The said agreement was then set forth, and was in effect an assignment to the Secretary of State on behalf of the French Government of a certain process of one Mons. N. sea. with its improvements by the said L. D. and also the last process of the said L. D. for fixing the images of the camera obscura, including therein the said invention in the said letters patent mentioned; the plea then shewed performance of all the terms of the said agreement. It concluded "that by reason of the premises, the King of the French became, and was, and thence hitherto hath been, and still is entitled, by the laws of his said kingdom, by himself and his agents, and his subjects, of the said kingdom, to use, exercise, vend, and publish, the said invention, as well in the said kingdom of France, as in the United Kingdom, &c. and in any other country or place where the said King should think proper to permit or authorize the same, without the hindrance, or molestation by, or licence from, the said L. D. and J. N. or either of them, or any of their agents, or the assigns of them and their agents, wherefore the said letters patent were, and are void, and of no effect.—Verification.

The 7th plea, after referring to the matters in the 6th plea, until that part of it which shewed the performance of the agreement, concluded, "That by reason of the premises, the King of the French, by the laws of the said kingdom, became, and was entitled, in right of his crown, to publish, bestow, and dedicate the said invention, and the right of using, practising, vend, vinding the same, and to grant such licence, permission, and authority, as hereinafter mentioned to have been done by him, and so remained and continued until, and at the several times hereinafter mentioned, that the said King of the French being so possessed, after the making of the said agreement and assignment, and long before the making of the said assignment from the said M. B. to the plaintiff, or the committing, &c. to wit, &c. in the said kingdom of France, openly published and made known the said invention, and the manner of performing the same to the people of France, for the use and benefit of that people, and of all other nations and people in the world; and openly and publicly bestowed and dedicated the said invention, and the right of using, practising, and vending the same, as a free gift and benefaction upon, to, and for the use of all mankind, without limitation or restriction, and gave, published, and granted, his full, free, and royal licence, permission, and authority, to all persons whatsoever in every nation, to use, practise, and vend the said invention at their free will and pleasure, whereby, according to the laws of the said kingdom of France, the defendants then became, and were, and ever since have been, entitled to use, exercise, and vend the said invention, in any country or places, at their free will and pleasure, without the leave or licence of the said L. D. and J. N. or either of them, or of any of their agents. Wherefore the defendants at the said times when, &c. committed the said supposed grievances, &c.—Verification.

Plea 10. That the title and description of the said invention in the declaration mentioned, was and is expressed in the said letters patent in the words following, and in no other manner, that is to say:—"A new or improved method of obtaining the spontaneous reproduction of all the images resolved in the focus of the camera obscura." Wherefore the said letters patent were and are void in law.—Verification.

All these pleas were specially demurred to, but it is unnecessary to set out the grounds of demurrer.

Sir Thos. Wilde, Serjt. (with him Webster and Ogilby), for the plaintiff, referred to the following authorities:—Bloxam v. Blee (6 B. & C. 149); 7 & 8 Vict. c. 40, s. 4; Edgeberry v. Stephens (3 Salk. 447); 5 Geo. 2, c. 8; 21 Jac. 1, c. 3, ss. 5, 6.

Channell, Serjt. (with him Groves and J. Brown), for the defendant, cited, in addition, Boulton v. Bull (9 M. & B. 482); Chappell v. Purday (14 M. & B. 348); The Clockworkers of Spanish-Quarter, 252; 6 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 62; 3 Inst. 186; Morris v. Porter (1 D. & L. 737); Stocker v. Warner (1 C. B. 186).

The arguments will fully appear by the judgment of the Court, which was delivered by TINDAL, C. J. May 22.

JUDGMENT.

(After stating the pleadings.) The plaintiff demurred specially to the 6th plea, but we think it unnecessary to advert to the causes assigned by him on demurrer, as we think the plea is bad in substance. The defendants contended that upon the facts disclosed in this plea the letters patent are void, and upon one of two grounds; namely, either that Berry was not the true and first inventor within the meaning of the statute of James, or that a patent taken out in England, by an Englishman, in his own name in trust for an employer residing abroad, is void in law. As to the first objection on the part of the defendant, we think that a person who has learned an invention abroad and imported it into this country, where it was not understood or known before, is the first and true inventor within the statute. The cases decided before the statute prove that grants by the Crown to persons who had brought any new trade or patent into the country were good at common law. See the case of Monopolies, and that of the Clockworkers of Spanish-Quarter; and the exception contained in the sixth section of the statute in favour of grants and privileges, for the sole working of any new manufacture within the realm, was made in affirmance of the common law, introducing no other alteration than the restriction in point of time for which such patent might extend. Edgeberry v. Stephens (3 Salk. 447), decided long after the statute was passed, was an express authority that the statute was intended to encourage new devices useful to the kingdom; and whether learned by travel or by study is the same thing. The argument on the part of the defendant has been, that Berry was not the person who imported this invention into England within the meaning of the statute; and it was argued that, to come within the statute, the person who claims the use of the patent should be the meritorious importer, and not a mere clerk, or servant, or agent, to whom the communication was made for any special purpose, as for the purpose of enabling him to take out a patent for the benefit of a foreigner. No authority was cited for such a distinction. So far as the public are concerned or interested, no such distinction is necessary. Berry is an Englishman, to whom the knowledge is communicated by a foreigner residing abroad; and Berry first brings the invention into England, and makes it public; and so far as relates to the interest of Berry, he has all the merit of being the first inventor. If he was guilty of any breach of faith in his mode of obtaining the communication, or in the mode of using it in England, he may or may not be made responsible to his employers abroad for such misconduct. This seems to have no bearing at all on the question as between him and a stranger, or upon the question whether the patent is void or valid. Indeed it implies on the plea itself that no fraud was committed on his employers, for it is expressly stated that he was directed to take out the patent in his own name, in trust for them, and that in fact he has so done, and has held it for a certain time for their benefit. The invalidity of the patent must, therefore, depend if at all on the second ground of objection, namely, that it was taken out by Berry in his own name, but in trust for aliens residing abroad. Now, in support of this objection also, no authority whatever was cited. In the case of Blazam v. Elsee (6 B. & C. 169) the point was raised at Nisi Prius, whether a patent could be taken out in trust for an alien enemy, but it became unnecessary to decide that question when the case came before the Court. The case before us does not state that Daguerre and J. N. are alien enemies; indeed we may take judicial notice that there is no war between France and England. We see no rule or principle which should prevent an alien, if the Crown thought proper, from receiving such a grant, either in his own name, or in the name of another. In the case of Chappell v. Purday (14 M. & W.), the Court, in their judgment (at page 318), assume it to be clear in point of law that a foreigner may hold a patent if the Crown chooses to grant it to him. We think, for these reasons, the fifth plea cannot be supported. To the sixth plea there is also a special demurrer; without advertent to the causes assigned, it is sufficient to state that we think this plea also is bad in substance. The only additional fact besides those stated in the former plea is, that before the granting of the letters patent, the inventors in France had assigned the invention to the King of the French, who became entitled to make it public in France. The plea contained no statement that he had actually published it in France; but even supposing the plea to have stated it had been published and succeeded in France, we cannot think it would have made any difference as to the validity of a patent taken out in England; but the plea contains no answer to the allegation in the declaration, that Berry was the first and true inventor, within this realm, of an invention which others, at the time of the making of the letters patent, did not use, and this allegation contains all that is necessary to support the validity of the letters patent in respect of the grant to Berry. One argument advanced by the defendant was, that the original inventors in France, having, for a valuable consideration, parted with their discovery to a person in France, could not come to England and take out a patent here. No authority was cited in support of this argument, and it is contrary to common experience; for it is well known that some persons have patents for the same invention at the same time in both countries. There is nothing in the agreement under which the invention was sold in France to restrain the original inventors from applying for a patent in England. Such a condition might, and probably would have been inserted, if such had been the intention of the parties; and at all events, whatever may have been the case as between the parties to the agreement, it is not in the power of the defendants, who are perfect strangers to it, to set up such an objection under this plea, which rests upon the ground of the letters patent being absolutely void. We think, for these reasons, that the sixth plea must be overruled. We have come to the same conclusion as to the seventh plea, which differs from the others only in this respect, that it alleges that the King of the French did openly publish and make known the said invention to the people of France, for the use and benefit of that nation, and of all other nations and people in the world, as a free gift and benefaction for the use of all mankind; and the plea then proceeds to allege, not that the letters patent are void as in the former pleas, but that the defendants thereby became entitled to use the invention in any country without the leave or license of the plaintiff; but we think it a sufficient answer to say the letters patent were not void, but, on the contrary, were valid, for the reasons given in our judgment on the two former pleas; whence it follows, as a necessary consequence in law, that the invention cannot be used in this country in direct violation of a valid grant of the Crown, without license of the grantees. As to the tenth plea, it is sufficient to remark, that we think the objection, as to the title of the patent, is answered by reference to the decided case of Nichols v. Hapman (7 M. & G. 337), and Neilson v. Harford (8 M. & W. 804). We think, therefore, the judgment of the Court must be given on the several pleas above-mentioned for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Wednesday, June 3.

TINNISWOOD v. PARRISON.

Jurisdiction of the County Court.

The County Court cannot hold pleas in matters where the freehold may come in question; and, therefore, where in replevin there is an assuery or cognizance upon which the freehold may come in question, the Court is immediately ousted of its jurisdiction, and does not recover it by the plaintiff taking issue upon a mere collateral matter.

This was a writ of false judgment from the County Court of York. The action was replevin for taking certain cattle, goods, and chattels, to wit, one heifer and two cows, in a certain place called Bootham Stray, within the jurisdiction of the County Court. The defendant in the original suit (the plaintiff in error) made cognizance, as bailiff of the mayor, aldermen, and citizens of the City of York; he averred that the said place in which, &c. now is, and at the said time when, &c. was the close, soil, and freehold of the mayor, aldermen, and citizens of York, and justified the taking as a distress for cattle damage feasant.

The plaintiff below (the defendant in error), pleaded in bar, that the defendant was not the bailiff of the mayor, aldermen, and citizens of the City of York, and that he did not, as bailiff of the said mayor, aldermen, and citizens, &c. and by their command in that behalf, take the said cattle, goods, and chattels, modo ac formâ. Upon that plea, issue was joined, and a verdict found for the plaintiff below (the defendant in error), damages 5*l*. Upon that judgment the present writ of false judgment was brought, and it was assigned as error that the freehold of the said place in which, &c. having been brought in question by the said plea, and the said cognizance of the said Thomas Tinniswood (the plaintiff in error), the County Court of Yorkshire ceased to have jurisdiction to entertain the same in the same court, and ought not further to have proceeded therein; and the point marked for argument by the plaintiff in error was, that the jurisdiction of the County Court was taken away by the cognizance which involved the question of title to land, and consequently that the plea in bar, and all subsequent proceedings, were erroneous, and without authority.

Allen, Serjt. (with him Reu) for the plaintiff in error.—From all the books of practice no modification is to be found of the doctrine that the County Court has no jurisdiction in questions of freehold. (Comyn's Digest, County Court, C. 8.) There the case of Cannon v. Smallwood (3 Levinz, 224) is quoted, where it is said, "Questions of freehold cannot be tried in the County Court without a writ;" and "the County Court has no power after freehold pleaded to proceed in the action either directly or collaterally."

Channell, Serjt. for the defendant in error (the plaintiff below).—In this case the freehold does not come in question. The plaintiff below never disputed that the freehold belonged to the corporation of York, but he denied that the defendant below was the bailiff of the corporation. [MAULE, J.—The cognizance offers an issue upon the freehold, although that issue is not accepted.] In Cannon v. Smallwood the issue was, whether the fences were in repair; and upon the effect of the pleadings the question rose, whether the freehold was not charged with their repair. The words quoted were an obiter dictum unnecessary to the decision of the case. It must be contended on the other side, that the moment a plea mentioning the freehold is pleaded, the jurisdiction of the County Court is at an end, whereas it is only so really if the freehold actually comes in question. Upon this record the defendant is a mere wrongdoer, without any authority to distrain at all. [TINDAL, C. J.—The case quoted says, that if the pleadings are such that the freehold may afterwards come in question, the jurisdiction of the County Court at once ceases. MAULE, J.—In the Ecclesiastical Courts, if a matter is pleaded upon which there may be an issue which those Courts cannot try, a prohibition at once issues. If the judge of the County Court is incompetent to deal with questions of freehold, it may be quite unnecessary to wait to see what the issue will be. COLTMAN, J.—In Cannon v. Smallwood, as between the parties the freehold could not afterwards be disputed. It might, as regarded other parties than those who were privy to the judgment. Would not that be the case here also?]

Allen, Serjt. in reply.

TINDAL, C. J.—In this case the authority of Cannon v. Smallwood has been brought before us; and that case seems to me to be as nearly in point with the present as possible. There the freehold was not brought in issue by a direct traverse, but only collaterally. So here there is no issue upon the point whether the freehold belongs to the mayor and citizens, but only the collateral issue, whether the defendant below was their bailiff, and whether he took the cattle as their bailiff and by their command. It appears by the record, without going further than the plea, that the Court had lost its jurisdiction. The defendant below should then have issued a recordari facias loquelam, and brought the action into one of the superior courts. There is a strong confirmation to the authority from 3 Levinz, in Coke's Second Institute, 310, 311, in the comment upon the Statute of Gloucester. The statute says, that sheriffs shall hold pleas in their counties as they have been accustomed to be pleaded. Coke says, "Now what are the pleas they may hold?" and then he states that writs of trespasses before justices are within this law; "but if the trespass be vi et armis, where the King upon conviction should have a fine, the sheriff in his county cannot hold plea of it, for no Court can assess a fine but a Court of Record, because a capias to take the body is incident to it." And then afterwards there is a further limitation which bears upon the present question: "Neither shall he hold plea of trespass for taking away of charters concerning the inheritance or freehold, for it is a maxim in law, 'quod placita concernent chartas seu scripta liberum tenementum tangunt in aliquibus curiis quæ recordum non habent secundum legem et consuetudinem Regni Angliæ sine brevi regis placitari non debent.'" That seems to me to corroborate the case cited.

COLTMAN, J.—This case has not been successfully distinguished from Cannon v. Smallwood. It seems to me to be analogous to proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court. There, if a modus is pleaded in a question of tithe, the Court is ousted of its jurisdiction.

MAULE, J.—If the freehold had been traversed by the plea, and the plea had been demurred to, it is difficult to say that the Court would not have been ousted as having no jurisdiction.

CRESSWELL, J.—The case from Levinz is rather startling in the first instance, but the passage from the Second Institute shows the principle of the rule there laid down.

Judgment for the plaintiff in error (the defendant below).

LORD v. WARDELL.

Practice—New trial—Change of attorney.

The objection that the attorney, from whom a notice has been received, is not the attorney who commenced an action, and that there has been no order for a change of attorney, is of the strictest nature, and must be clearly made out. Upon a trial, a verdict had been found for the defendant. The plaintiff obtained a rule for a new trial, upon payment of costs. The costs were not paid for ten years. In the interim the plaintiff's attorney died, and a new attorney took his place. A Term's notice was given of an application to the Court to discharge the rule for a new trial; the notice being given by an attorney, not named in the record, who described himself as agent for the above-named defendant: Held, that the plaintiff could not object to the sufficiency of the notice, unless he could prove distinctly that no change in the defendant's attorney had been duly made, either in the lifetime of the plaintiff's original attorney, or since his decease.

This was an action of trover for a title-deed. The action was commenced in June, 1836, and tried at the Spring Assizes, 1837. A verdict was found for the defendant; but in the following Term a rule was made absolute for a new trial upon payment of costs by the plaintiff. The costs were taxed in June, 1837. The costs were not paid, and no further steps were taken by either side until the commencement of the present year. In the meanwhile William Bertram Bishop, the plaintiff's attorney in the action, died, and was succeeded in his business by John Beck, who also became the attorney of the plaintiff. A Term ago, notice was served upon the plaintiff and John Beck, of an intended application to the Court to discharge the rule for a new trial. The notice was given by Nicholas Henry Rowsell, who described himself as of the firm of Hall, Moorliyan, and Rowsell, and as "agent for the above-named defendant." The affidavit of the above facts, and of the service of the notice, was also made by N. H. Rowsell, similarly describing himself.

Early in the present Term Channell, Serjt. for the defendant, had obtained a rule for discharging the rule obtained for a new trial upon the payment of costs, against which Byles, Serjt. now shewed cause. He produced an affidavit, made jointly by John Beck and Lord, the plaintiff, the former of whom deposed that he had succeeded to the business of the plaintiff's late attorney, William B. Bishop, and both of whom swore "that they had not, nor had either of them, received any notice of the change of the defendant's attorney; neither did they, nor either of them, know who was the attorney of the defendant except by the notice and affidavit in the said cause (describing them) signed by Nicholas Henry Rowsell, of the firm of Hall, Moorliyan, and Rowsell, agents of the above-named defendant."

Byles, Serjt. for the plaintiff.—There is a fatal objection to the application. The attorney upon the record is a different person from the attorney who takes the present step. There has been no application to change the attorney, and therefore no good Term's notice has been given. After this lapse of time, no proceedings can be taken without proof of a Term's notice given by the proper person. Where it appears that there is one attorney at one time and another at a different time, it must be shown how the change has been made; if the original attorney be dead, that there has been a notice of the change; if alive, that there has been an order to change.

MAULE, J.—Where is the defect apparent upon the face of the proceedings? It would be vastly inconvenient to hold that upon every interlocutory proceeding there must be an affidavit to show all the changes of the attorney.

Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule.—The notice was given, and the affidavit is made by the London agent, who is the same as has been throughout the proceedings, and who describes himself as having that character. The case of Muy v. Wooding (3 M. and S. 500) makes it doubtful whether the necessity of a Term's notice is not confined to proceedings before verdict. [MAULE, J.—That case does not apply. There no step had been taken to call the verdict in question, and it had become too late to disturb it. Lord Ellenborough gives the reason of the rule, "that while the matter is still in controversy, the party should, after so long a lapse as four Terms without any proceedings, have notice that he may prepare himself; but when the matter has passed in rem judicatum by the verdict, the same reason does not apply." Those remarks have no force in a case in which the Court has granted a new trial.] It is quite consistent with the plaintiff's affidavit, that a notice to change the attorney may have been served upon W. B. Bishop in his lifetime, or upon some intermediate attorney of the plaintiff since the decease of Bishop. An objection of this kind ought to be conclusively made out, and all the burden of proof lies on the opposite side.

TINDAL, C. J.—It is certainly an objection of a very strict nature, and I think you ought to make it appear to the Court very clearly.

The rest of the Court concurring,

Rule absoluté.

COLDHAM v. SHOWLER.

An agreement was made between A. S. and J. C. written out upon paper, and signed by the parties. At the same interview J. S. agreed with J. C. to guarantee the performance of the agreement by A. S. and signed upon the other side of the paper the following memorandum:—"I hereby undertake that J. S. shall perform all the covenants and conditions mentioned in the annexed agreement, and hold myself responsible for her." Held, that the two agreements were incorporated, and that the consideration for the latter agreement sufficiently appeared.

An agreement was entered into between A. S. and J. C. for the sale of a public-house from the former to the latter: possession was to be taken, and the contract completed, upon October 20th. A deposit was paid, which was to be returned if the consent of the landlord could not be obtained. Upon the 20th October, the parties met, and the money to be paid upon the completion of the contract not being ready, it was agreed that they should meet again on the following day. The landlord had not then been applied to. When they met again he was applied to, and refused his consent. In an action to recover back the deposit—Held, that these facts would not support a plea; that before breach of the said agreement, and before a reasonable time had elapsed for procuring the landlord's consent, the plaintiff refused to purchase, &c.

This was an action of assumpsit on a special agreement. The declaration stated an agreement by one Amelia Showler to sell to the plaintiff a certain public-house for 150l. and that a deposit of 30l. was paid upon condition that, if the plaintiff was not accepted as tenant by the landlord, the deposit-money should be returned, and the agreement cancelled. It then stated, that, in consideration of this agreement having been made at defendant's request, the defendant, being the father of Amelia Showler, undertook that his daughter should perform all the covenants and conditions in the agreement mentioned, and held himself responsible for her. Mutual promises. Averment—That the plaintiff was not accepted as tenant by the landlord; that Amelia Showler was required to pay the 30l. deposit; that she had failed to do so. Breach—That the defendant, disregarding his said promise, had not held himself responsible, &c. nor been responsible, and had not re-paid to the plaintiff the said deposit-money, &c.

Pleas: 1. That there was no such agreement. 2. That after the making of the agreement, and before breach, and before a reasonable time for obtaining the consent of the landlord had elapsed, plaintiff refused to purchase the public-house, &c. or to pay for the same, &c. The replication took issue upon the first, and traversed the second plea.

At the trial before Erle, J. at the sittings in Mid-lanx after last Easter Term, it appeared that the public-house in question was in the occupation of Amelia Showler; that a negotiation took place between the plaintiff and defendant for a sale of the stock, goodwill, &c. and that on the 20th of October, 1845, a meeting took place on the premises, when two agreements were written and signed. They were on different sides of the same paper, but the former was executed before the latter was drawn. The former was made between Amelia Showler and the plaintiff, and thereby "Amelia Showler agreed, in consideration of the sum of 30l. a deposit in part payment of 150l. &c. to sell the good-will and fixtures, &c. and her interest in the public-house and premises, &c. at and for the sum of 150l. and also all the stock, &c. at trade prices in the usual manner;" and the plaintiff agreed "to purchase the same, &c. and to pay for the same on taking possession, which should be on or prior to the 20th October, 1845." Then followed a condition that "if the plaintiff should not be accepted as tenant by the landlord upon the same terms as A. S. the deposit-money should be returned." The latter was as follows: "I hereby undertake that my daughter, Amelia Showler, shall perform all the covenants and conditions mentioned in the annexed agreement, and hold and consider myself responsible for her." This was signed by the defendant only. It appeared that the parties met upon the 20th October, at which time the landlord had not been consulted on the subject, but that a brewer's clerk who was to have advanced the money for the plaintiff not being present an appointment was made for the following day for the completion of the purchase, but at that time the parties saw the landlord, who refused his consent to the change of tenant. It was objected, first, that the defendant's undertaking was a collateral one within sect. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and that it disclosed no consideration; that it was an independent contract, and the other agreement could not be taken in to assist it: secondly, that the second plea was proved: that the 20th October was the day fixed for the completion of the contract, and that it could not be varied by parol; that on that day the plaintiff was not ready, and the deposit money was forfeited. Erle, J. overruled the objections, and directed a verdict for the plaintiff; damages, 30l. A verdict having been found accordingly, and Byles, Serjt. having obtained a rule for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, Talfourd, Serjt. (with him Bovill) shewed cause.—As to the first point, this was really and substantially one entire transaction: the father negotiated the whole matter, and the two parts of the agreement have reference to each other, and were intended to make but one contract. (Spittell v. Lavender, 5 B. Moore, 270.) As to the second point, it is only the possession that is to be given upon the 20th October. The consent of the landlord is a collateral thing, which the defendant was bound to procure. The plea does not rest upon the defence that on the particular day the plaintiff was not ready to complete, but that he was not ready within a reasonable time. This objection is therefore not open to the defendant. There is no evidence at all in support of the plea; for to refuse to do an act, not a mere non-feasance, and there is no pretence that there was any thing like an actual refusal upon the part of the plaintiff.

Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule.—In Spittell v. Lavender, the agent, when he signed, shewed that he merely signed as agent; then came the signature of his principal to confirm it. Here there are two distinct agreements, and in the second the consideration does not appear. Then, there is no difference between neglected and refused. The condition precedent to the defendant's liability is the plaintiff's consent to perform his part of the contract.

TINDAL, C. J.—You are quite answered. The parties were all of them together at the time the agreements were written, and it can make no difference that they are on different sides of the paper. Probably there was not room for both on one side.

MAULE, J.—The signature of the father applies to all that precedes it. It is impossible to say that the money was forfeited, or that there was a breach of the contract on the part of the plaintiff, when the landlord's consent had not been obtained.

COLTMAN and CRESSWELL, JJ. concurred.

Rule discharged.

June 5 and 9.

TOOMER v. GINGELL.

Since the passing of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, the final order only protects the person of the insolvent from process, and therefore such final order is no bar to an action brought against the insolvent.

This was an action of assumpsit. The defendant pleaded, that after the making of the said promises, and before the commencement of the suit, he had presented his petition for protection from process to the Court of Bankruptcy, and that the commissioner had granted him his final order. The whole of the proceedings were fully stated in the plea, which disclosed every thing requisite to give the commissioner jurisdiction. The final order itself was in the form given in Schedule A, No. 3, of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, and directed to be employed by sec. 22 of the statute.

To this plea there was a general demurrer. Channell, Serjt. in support of the demurrer, referred to Coak v. Henson (14 Law J. N. S. C. P. 295), and to the several clauses of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116, & 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96; and contended that, although the former statute had contained a clause making the final order granted under that Act pleadable in bar, yet that by the latter statute the form of the final order was changed, and the plea in bar taken away, the final order now operating merely as a protection to the person of the insolvent.

Talfourd, Serjt. for the defendant, when the case first came before the Court, argued that since the new statute the final order for protection of the person had the same effect as formerly the final order for protection and distribution, but afterwards he said that he had looked at the case of Nichols v. Payne (2 D. & L. 629), and that he could not support the plea.

MAULE, J.—I have read the statute through very carefully, and it seems to me to have been the intention of the legislature that the final order should no longer operate any further than as a protection for the person.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Wednesday, June 10.

FRANCIS v. DODSWORTH.

To a plea of set-off the plaintiff replied, "as to the sum of 30l. parcel of the money in the plea stated to be due," a discharge under the Insolvent Debtors' Act, concluding with a verification: as to the residue, nil debet, concluding to the country. The defendant having demurred to the whole replication, and also taken issue upon the last part of it, the Court directed him to amend, either by striking out the demurrer or the rejoinder, or by restricting the demurrer to the first part of the replication.

The defendant not having applied to the Court until nearly two months after the pleading of the rejoinder, the Court gave leave to amend without costs.

Debt—For work and labour.

Plea (inter alia)—Set-off.

Replication as to the plea of the defendant, &c. that after the sum of 30l. parcel of the money in the plea stated to be due became due, the plaintiff was discharged under the Insolvent Debtors' Act, with a verification; and nil debet as to the residue, concluding to the country.

Rejoinder—"And the defendant saith that the said replication is not sufficient in law; and the defendant shews to the Court here the following causes," &c. (setting out the grounds of demurrer). And as to the replication of the plaintiff to the residue of the sum of money stated, &c. and whereof the plaintiff prays that it may be inquired by the country, similiter.

On a former day, Manning, Serjt. had obtained a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why either the rejoinder or the demurrer should not be set aside, or why the demurrer should not be restricted to the former part of the replication.

Byles, Serjt. now shewed cause.—The utmost to be said is, that we ought to have restrained our demurrer to the first part of the replication. But the replication itself is bad (Fairthorne v. Donald, 13 M. & W. 724). Although my demurrer may be too large, the Court will, after argument, restrict it to that part of the opposite pleading which is bad; and the first part of this replication is an argumentative nil debet. Besides, this application is too late. The defendant rejoined on March 16th, and this rule was not moved until the following 4th of June. (Reg. Gen. H. T. 2 Wm. 4, 33.)

TINDAL, C. J.—The justice of the case requires that you should amend without payment of costs. How are we to know whether to put the pleadings as they stand into the special paper, or to send them down for trial? You give the plaintiff neither in law nor in fact a complete issue, but keep him at arm's length with a weapon never before used in Westminster Hall. The defendant has lain by too long, or he would be entitled to costs.

MAULE, J.—I think the plaintiff would have been quite safe in replying nil debet to the whole plea. He might have shewn his discharge under the Insolvent Act as evidence in support of that replication.

The defendant to amend without payment of costs.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Friday, June 5.

SPECIAL PAPER.

PANNELL v. MILL.—Channell, Serjt. (with him Boreham) for the plaintiff. Sir Theo. Wills and Manning, Serjts. (with them Fitzherbert), for the defendant.

ROGERS v. RICHARDS.—Channell, Serjt. for the plaintiff, prayed the judgment of the Court.

STEVENS v. DESBOROUGH.—Talfourd, Serjt. for the plaintiff. Channell, Serjt. for the defendant, without argument, prayed leave to amend.

Leave to amend upon payment of costs; otherwise, judgment for the plaintiff.

TOOMER v. GINGELL.—Channell, Serjt. for the plaintiff. Talfourd, Serjt. for the defendant. Argument adjourned.

Saturday, June 6.

The Court gave judgment in the three following cases:—

DORRIS v. ATKINSON & FAWCETT.

Rule absolute, unless the plaintiff consents to limit the verdict.

COOPER v. SHEPHERD. Judgment for defendant.

BOWLEY v. BELL. Rule absolute.

FINDLEY v. FARQUHARSON.—Dowling, Serjt. moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation. The defendant had pleaded severance, and had succeeded upon her plea, but the Master had refused to allow her any costs.

Rule to shew cause.

JOHNSON v. POTTER.—Byles, Serjt. shewed cause. Dowling, Serjt. in support of the rule. The questions were merely of fact.

Rule discharged.

TOTAL v. JOHNSTONE.—Byles, Serjt. (with him Alderson), shewed cause. Channell, Serjt. (with him Granger), in support of the rule.

Rule discharged.

REG. v. HEWESWORTH.—Talfourd, Serjt. asked for a day to be appointed for the defendant to receive the sentence of the Court, and for leave to file affidavits. The Court appointed the first day of Michaelmas Term for giving sentences.

Application granted.

WILSON v. BARFORD.—Wilkins, Serjt. (with him Pearson) shewed cause. Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule.

Rule discharged.

HILL v. KITCHING.—Kinglake, Serjt. (with him M. Smith) shewed cause. Manning, Serjt. in support of the rule.

Argument adjourned.

OLLIVER, TODD, CHAPLIN AND OTHERS.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why proceedings should not be stayed. This was an action of trespass for the same cause of action as had already been disposed of by proceedings under the Interpleader Act.

Rule to shew cause.

Monday, June 8.

WINTER v. PLAYDEN.—Galea, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Allen, Serjt. for judgment as in case of a nonsuit.

Rule discharged on a peremptory undertaking.

LEVISON v. WILDS.—Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why proceedings should not be stayed until the plaintiff should pay the costs of a former action between the same parties, and give security for costs.

Rule to shew cause.

ROBINSON v. BROWN AND ANOTHER.—Byles, Serjt. moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit pursuant to leave reserved, or a verdict for the defendant, or for a new trial, upon the ground of the improper reception of evidence. This was an action against the executors of a surety, and it was essential to prove that a notice in writing had been served upon the principal. The principal was not called, nor was it proved that he had been served with a subpoena duces tecum to produce the notice. The evidence of a clerk to the plaintiff that he had sent the notice in a letter to the principal, was received and objected to. (Lensu v. Palmer, M. & M. 31.)

Rule to shew cause.

ROBINSON v. BROWN AND ANOTHER.—Talfourd, Serjt. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to increase the damages from 300l. to 400l. The point raised will be found in the report of a motion in the same case, Law T. Vol. VII. p. 183.

Rule to shew cause.

HINTON v. ACHAMAN.—Manning, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the defendant should not enter up final judgment for himself, or why the plaintiff should not enter up final judgment for the defendant upon the 2nd and 5th pleas, demurrers to which had been decided in favour of the defendant. The motion was made with a view to proceedings in a court of error. (King v. Johnson (N. & M. 279); Law v. King (3 Wms. Saunders, 80); Tolson v. Kaye (6 Man. & G. 436), were mentioned.)

Rule to shew cause.

RE HANNAH TATHAM.—Manning, Serjt. applied for leave for a married woman to dispose of her estate under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74, s. 91.

Application granted.

WRIGHT v. BURROUGHS.—C. Jones, Serjt. moved on behalf of the plaintiff's attorney for a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why the plea, paua darrein continuance herein should not be set aside with costs—first, upon an affidavit that it had been pleaded by collusion between the plaintiff and the defendant to deprive the attorney of his costs; secondly, on the ground that the plea paua darrein continuance cannot be pleaded after demurrer. (Staple v. Hayden, 6 Mod. 9; Parkes v. Crafts, 1 Lord Raym. 506; Stoner v. Gibson, Mob. 81.)

Rule to shew cause.

DON DEM. STRINGER v. STRINGER.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why proceedings should not be stayed until payment of costs of a prior judgment.

Rule to shew cause.

BAILEY v. BURROUGHS.—Byles, Serjt. moved to set aside the appearance entered for the defendant and all subsequent proceedings, upon the ground that the defendant had not been served with process.

Rule to shew cause.

Tuesday, June 9.

STORY v. SMALWOOD.—Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the notice of trial by proviso should not be set aside, and further proceedings stayed, until the defendant should give security for costs.

Rule to shew cause.

WARREN v. FRANCE AND OTHERS.—WARREN AND WIFE v. FRANCE AND OTHERS.—Talfourd, Serjt. moved, upon the part of Naah, one of the defendants, for a rule to shew cause why the examinations taken upon interrogatories in the first of these causes should not be used as evidence in the second, and why the exhibits in the possession of the Master should not be returned, or why the trial should not be postponed until the return of a commission to examine witnesses from Australia.

Rule to shew cause.

NIAS v. DAVIES.—Dowling, Serjt. (with him E. V. Wilkins) shewed cause.—Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule.

Cur. adv. vult.

DOYLE v. EDWARDS.—C. Jones, Serjt. moved to arrest the judgment, or to award a certiorari de novo, or for a new trial. The action was for a bill of exchange, alleged in the declaration to have been made on the 11th of December, 1846. The objection to the date in the declaration was not taken at the trial. The Court thought it to be the same case as an impossible date, and to be cured by verdict.

Rule refused.

Wednesday, June 10.

TUN v. SPANNA AND OTHERS.—Byles, Serjt. shewed cause. Sir Thos. Wilde, Serjt. in support of the rule.

Rule absolute to postpone the trial until the sittings after Hilary Term, 1847.

HULTON v. THOMPSON.—Manning, Serjt. moved for a rule for the Master to tax the plaintiff's costs in this action, which was brought on a judgment. The merits of the case appear in a report of the case in the LAW TIMES, Vol. VI. p. 39.

Rule to shew cause (returnable at chambers). (HULTON v. THOMPSON.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a commission to examine witnesses at Valparaiso.)

Rule to shew cause.

BIKY v. PRESTWICK.—Byles, Serjt. (with him Parry) shewed cause. Channell, Serjt. (with him Bonill) in support of the rule for a new trial.

Rule discharged.

WILKINSON v. CAMPION.—Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation on the ground that he had not allowed the defendant the costs of the 3rd issue, upon which the defendant had succeeded.

Rule to shew cause.

POOLEY v. TAYLOR.—Byles, Serjt. shewed cause. Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit.

Rule discharged upon a peremptory undertaking.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Thursday, June 4.

BRADLEY v. TONGE.
A, being in debt to B, agreed to convey a certain estate to him, and to deliver to him an abstract of title by a certain day: Held, in an action against A for the non-performance of this agreement, that B was only entitled to nominal damages.

This was an action brought against the defendant for the breach of an agreement to deliver to the plaintiff an abstract of title to a certain estate, and it appeared that the defendant, being in debt to the plaintiff to a considerable amount, had agreed to convey to the plaintiff the estate in question in payment of his debt. The defendant, however, being unable to make a good title to the property, no abstract was delivered, which the breach set out in the declaration. At the trial, the value of the estate was proved, and this it was contended should be the measure of damages. The learned judge, however, who tried the cause, directed a verdict to be entered for the plaintiff with nominal damages (40s.), giving him leave to move to increase the amount to any sum which the Court should think fit, if the Court should be of opinion that he was entitled to more than nominal damages.

Whately, Q.C. having obtained a rule nisi accordingly.

Talfourd, Serjt. and Whitmore now shewed cause, and contended that the ruling of the learned judge was right, and that if the plaintiff could recover damages in this action commensurate with the value of the estate, he might also recover his original debt in another action, and thus be paid twice over. [Stopped by the Court.]

Whately, Q.C. and Greaves, in support of the rule, contended that the proper question for the jury was, in how much worse a position was the plaintiff now than if he had received a conveyance of the property. Now, as the defendant had shewn no title, the plaintiff had a right to assume there was a good title, and also that he was in insolvent circumstances; if so, it was clear that the damages should be equal to the value of the estate.

Case cited, Hopkins v. Grazebrook (6 B. & C. 31).

By the COURT.—The plaintiff is only entitled to nominal damages. He is still entitled to sue for his whole debt; and it may be he is now in a better position than he would have been if he had got this estate, which was worth a less sum than the whole debt.

There was a count for money paid, on which it was agreed that the plaintiff had a right to recover 30l. 12s. 8d.

Damages increased on this count by 30l. 12s. 8d.; as to the other part of the declaration, rule refused.

DON DEM. STACE v. WHEELER.

A demise in ejectment by two out of three co-executors is good.

Fortescue, for the lessors of the plaintiff, now shewed cause against the rule obtained by Peacock to arrest the judgment in this case. The question is, whether a demise laid in the names of two out of three co-executors is good, those two alone having taken out probate of the will of the testator. It is submitted that a demise so laid is perfectly good. It is no doubt laid down as a general rule, that all the co-executors must join in an action, but there is no mode of compelling them to proceed therein, and if one should refuse to do so, the only practicable course is by summons and severance, a mode which is now, however, obsolete. (Bac. Abr. Executors and Administrators, D. 3.) The whole legal interest is in each executor, and he, consequently, may part with the whole estate. (Co. Litt. 186; 4 Bac. Abr. (last edit.) 494.) The difference between a joint tenant and a co-executor is this, that in a joint grant or lease each joint tenant only passes his own interest, but each co-executor, by such an instrument, passes the entirety. Each co-executor takes the whole estate, though all are in law but one person. (4 Bac. Abr. Executors and Administrators, D. 1; Com. Dig. Administration, B. 12.) Fortescue also referred to Godolphin's Orphan's Legacy, 134; Herbert v. Pigott (3 Cr. & M. 384); Wentworth on Executors, 211; Nation v. Foster (1 Cr. M. & R. 172); Roll. Abr. 924, O; Dyer 23, a. He was then stopped by the Court.

Peacock, contra.—The demise must be stated according to its legal effect; if two out of three co-executors demise, the estate does not pass out of them jointly, and each of several joint tenants passes only his separate interest. The distinction is this, that on the demise of one joint tenant, his portion only of the estate demised can be recovered, whereas, on the demise of a joint executor, the whole may be recovered, but no joint estate passes by a demise by two out of three executors; the rule is, in this case, the same as in an action on a joint and several bond. Either one or all of three co-obligees may sue, but two out of the three cannot. Doe v. Errington (1 A. & E. 750) is an authority against this demise.

By the COURT.—The right of action on a joint and several bond is regulated by the nature of the agreement into which the parties have entered. The legal effect of a demise by two out of three co-executors is, that each demises his own separate interest, but then each co-executor has the entire interest, so that the plaintiff gets the whole estate. The difficulty suggested by Mr. Peacock is really quite as great when the demise is by all the executors, as when it is by two out of three only.

Rule discharged.

SMITH v. JEFFRIES.

Under a written contract for "Ware" potatoes, evidence that "Regent's Wares" were intended by the parties is inadmissible.

This was an action (tried before Lord Denman, C. J.) on a contract for the purchase of sixty tons of Ware potatoes at 5l. per ton. At the trial the learned judge admitted evidence to shew that the contract was, in fact, for the purchase of Regent's Ware potatoes. The term Ware, it appeared, referred to the quality of the potato, and meant the best of any particular sort; Regent's Wares being, consequently, the best of one particular sort of potato, called Regent's. Shee, Serjt. had obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground that the above evidence ought not to have been admitted; and, against this rule,

M. Chambers, Q.C. and Dawson now shewed cause.—The ambiguity in this case arose from evidence dehors the contract, and might, therefore, be removed in the same way; it was a latent ambiguity. Evidence was indeed necessary to shew to what sort of potatoes the contract between the parties was intended to refer, there being many different kinds of best potatoes. [ALDERSON, B.—If I buy sixty tons of potatoes, may not the vendor deliver to me kidney potatoes?] Evidence would be admissible to explain the subject-matter of the contract. (Doe v. Osenden v. Chichester, 4 Dow. R. 93; Birch v. Depeyster, 1 Stark. N. P. C. 210.) [ALDERSON, B.—No doubt evidence is admissible to shew in what sense parties used a particular term, which in different trades has different significations, and thereby to shew to which trade the parties meant to apply it; but here there is no doubt about the meaning of the term. [POLLOCK, C.B.—This contract being in part unexecuted, and the action being brought in respect of that part, would it not be void for uncertainty?] At all events, if this evidence was improperly received, it did not in any way influence the jury, for they have calculated the damages as if the contract had been merely for Ware potatoes, and not for Regent's Wares, and the learned judge was not dissatisfied with the verdict. They also cited the 4th and 7th rules laid down in Sir James Wigram on Extrinsic Evidence, Clayton v. Gregson (6 Nev. & M. 694); Doe v. Need (2 M. & W. 129).]

By the COURT (without calling upon Shee, Serjt. to support his rule).—The evidence was, beyond all doubt, improperly received; there must, therefore, be a new trial.

Rule absolute.

JACKSON v. SMITHSON.

A declaration in case for an injury caused by an animal belonging to the defendant, need not contain an averment that the said animal was kept negligently by him.

This was an action against the defendant for an injury caused to the plaintiff's wife by a ferocious ram belonging to the defendant. A verdict having been found for the plaintiff, Shee, Serjt. subsequently obtained a rule for a new trial, on the ground of surprise, or to arrest the judgment on the ground that the declaration contained no averment that the defendant negligently kept the said ram. Against this rule

M. Chambers, Q.C. and Jos. Brown now shewed cause.—It is not necessary to allege negligence, if the declaration avers the mischievous propensity of the animal which caused the injury, and that the defendant was aware of such propensity. The law on this subject is laid down by Lord Holt, in Ren v. Huggins (2 Lord Raym. 1574); Smith v. Pelah (2 Stra. 1264). Besides, the declaration in this case avers that the defendant "wrongfully and injuriously" kept the ram, and this is sufficient. The identical point now raised was decided this very Term (June 3) by the Court of Queen's Bench, in May v. Burdett. The declaration there was in the same form as this, and the Court held it good after verdict. They also cited 2 Chitt. Pleading, 401, note; Register Brevium, fo. 110, b. 111; Cropper v. Matthews (2 Siderfin, 127); Liber Placitandi, fol. 40, pla. 86; 1 Wms. Saunders, 37, note (1); Jenkins v. Turner (1 Lord Raym. 109); Curtis v. Mills (5 C. & F. 490), and were then stopped by the Court.

Shee, Serjt. and Wordsworth, in support of their rule, attempted to distinguish the present case from that of May v. Burdett, and cited Jones v. Perry (2 Esp. 482); Hartley v. Harriman (1 B. & Ald. 620); Blackman v. Simmons (3 C. & P. 168); Sarch v. Blackburn (4 C. & P. 297). The Court, however, thought that the decision in May v. Burdett was a clear authority against the motion in arrest of judgment, and that the affidavits were insufficient to justify them in granting a new trial on the ground of surprise. They therefore discharged the rule.

Rule discharged.

Saturday, June 6.

THE MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF POOLE
v. WHITT.

In an action against a party for rent in arrear, he pleaded eviction, under a title paramount: Held, that to entitle the defendant to a verdict, the plea must disclose such a title in the party evicting, as would enable him to maintain ejectment. Held also, that where the party has this right, it is not absolutely necessary that the defendant should have been actually turned out of possession, but a demand of possession and an attornment would be sufficient to support the averment of an eviction.

This was an action on a covenant in a lease for rent. The defendant pleaded eviction by title paramount. Verdict for the plaintiff—damages, 412*l.* with leave reserved to move to enter a verdict for the defendant.

At the trial it appeared that the action was brought to recover certain rents of a market-house, and certain tolls, of which the defendant was lessee to the corporation. The facts set out in the plea, and relied on as a defence, were, that a gentleman of the name of Parr had been town clerk of Poole prior to the passing of the Municipal Corporations Act. After the passing of that Act, Mr. Parr was put out of his office by the new town council, but he was awarded 4,000*l.* as compensation for the loss of his office. This was secured to him by a bond for that amount, which was to be paid off by instalments; upon the instalments becoming due, they were not paid, whereupon Mr. Parr brought an action on his bond, obtained judgment, and issued a writ of elegit against the lands of the corporation. At this time the market and tolls, for the rent of which the present action was brought, were in the occupation of one Browne (as tenant to the corporation), who, upon notice from Parr that he had issued an elegit against the lands of the corporation, attorned to him, and paid him the rents up to the expiration of his lease in 1840. This was done with the full knowledge of the corporation. In 1840, a Mr. West became the lessee, and he also attorned and paid rent to Parr until 1843, when his lease expired, and the defendant Whitt became tenant. He also received notice from Parr, and attorned and paid the rent to him for some time, when he received notice from the corporation to pay his rent to them. This the defendant refused to do, whereupon the present action was brought. It further appeared, that the reason the corporation took this course was, that they had been advised that Mr. Parr had no right to attach the rents in question under his elegit, on the ground that, there having been two prior mortgages of the property made by the corporation for 500 and 1,000 years, they were only entitled to the reversion, and therefore, that Mr. Parr had no sufficient title under the elegit to enable him to evict Whitt.

A rule nisi to enter a verdict for the defendant having been obtained by Cockburn, Q.C.

Crowder, Q.C. Stock, and Maynard shewed cause.—First, Mr. Parr has no title to evict; and secondly, if he had, there is no legal eviction here. The plea shews, on the face of it, that Mr. Parr had no title; for it sets out the inquisition on the elegit, and the finding of the jury, and they find that the corporation held the property subject to two mortgages for years. This being so, the corporation had merely an equity of redemption and reversion expectant in fee in the property, which it is contended is not extendable under an elegit. The issue the other side has to make out is, that Parr forcibly put out and expelled the defendant. Now, the only evidence in this case was on attornment by Whitt to Parr, on a threat to turn him out; and if Parr had no title to turn him out, this attornment amounts to nothing. The way to test this is, whether or not Parr could have maintained his ejectment against Whitt. Now, it is clear that he could not; for at most he could only have the same title under the elegit as the corporation had, and although they had assumed to lease to Whitt, and he cannot dispute their title, yet they had no legal title, which was outstanding in the mortgages. [ROLF, B.—Do not assume that there is no power for a tenant in elegit to take the reversion of a freehold under an elegit, where there is a mortgage for years.] But here they have shewn no title in Parr which could have enabled him to maintain ejectment against Whitt; and if so, the plea is not proved, for there is no actual eviction. The other side may rely on 1 & 2 Vict. c. 119, but that statute, it is submitted, does not affect the question. Cases cited: Lister v. Deland (3 Brown's Chy. Cases, 477); Doe dem. Hall v. Greenhill (4 B. & A. 684); Harris v. Booker (12 B. Moore, 263, and 4 Bing. 96); Harris

v. Pugh (4 Bing. 335, 2 Sugden Ven. & Purc. 396); Jefferson v. Martin (2 Saun. Rep. 11, A. n. k); Hawkes v. Orton (5 A. & E. 367); Simons v. Farren (1 B. & C. 271); Wheeler v. Branstons (5 Q. B. 373).

Cockburn, Q.C. Barstow, and Poulton, contra, contended, that the facts shewed that there was not merely a naked reversion in the corporation, but a subsisting interest, for they were clothed with the possession, and that, therefore, this case might well come under the words of the statute which direct the sheriff to deliver "all lands," &c. over which the debtor has a disposing power. If it was to be held that this property is not extendable, any one might prevent his property from being extendable, by charging 10*l.* a year on lands worth 10,000*l.* a year. [ALDERSON, B.—But then the party having the elegit may take possession, on paying off the mortgage.] But why should he be put to that? The only question here is, was there an eviction, and had Parr a title sufficient to enable him to evict? It is submitted there was, and that it is clear that Parr had a paramount title to the corporation, and might keep Whitt as his tenant or evict him, as he thought fit; if so, then the demand and the attornment amount to an expulsion; then how can the corporation say, after granting a lease as tenants in fee, that they are only tenants in reversion? The principle of estoppel ought to apply. Parr became in the same position as a second mortgagee; he was tenant in elegit, had taken possession, and we and prior tenants to Whitt had paid rent to him; he therefore stood as high as a second mortgagee, and could even have maintained his ejectment against the corporation; and whatever the mortgagee might say, the mortgagor could not deny the right of Parr to the rents. Whatever the corporation had in the property, that Parr had a right to take. Cases cited: Beckett v. Benson (2 Atkins. Rep. 292); Pope v. Biggs (9 B. & C. 245); Evans v. Eliot (9 A. & E. 342); Johnson v. Jones (ib. 809); Rogers v. Pitcher (6 Taunt. 202); Lindsey v. Lindsey (Bull. N. P. 110, a); Doe dem. Whallon v. Penfold (3 Q. B. 757); Doe v. Clifton (4 A. & E. 813).

POLLOCK, C. B.—This is a motion to enter a verdict for the defendant. [The learned judge then went through the facts.] The only question on the pleadings is, whether Parr did "put out and expel the defendant or not." Now, if the person having the right to turn a party out, goes to him and demands possession, and the party says it is needless to turn me out, I will attorn, this attornment may, no doubt, be pleaded as an expulsion, for it is substantially an expulsion; if, therefore, Parr had a good right to turn Whitt out of possession, the defendant is entitled to a verdict. But then what is the right of Parr? It is said he had all the right of the corporation. That may be, and that some other plea would have been sufficient; but this plea is wholly insufficient as a defence to this action, for it states that Parr took all the estate which the corporation had, and that was a reversion merely, subject to two mortgages. He had, therefore, no right to maintain ejectment against the corporation, consequently no right against Whitt. Whatever, therefore, his claim to relief may be elsewhere, or on another state of pleadings, upon this plea the verdict must stand for the plaintiff.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion, and on this short point, that the title set up in Parr is shewn to be a title subject to the title of the mortgagee, and that Parr has no right to the immediate possession. If Parr had had this immediate right, there might have been a sufficient expusio.

ROLFE, B. and PLATT, B. concurred.

Rule discharged.

HENRY v. GOLDNEY.

Motion to consolidate actions brought against different members of a provisional committee for the same cause of action.

Jerris, Q.C. moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the proceedings herein, and in twenty-eight other actions by the same plaintiff, should not be stayed, on payment of costs, until the plaintiff consent to consolidate them. He moved on an affidavit which set forth that these twenty-nine actions were all by the same plaintiff, for the same cause of action, against different members of the provisional committee of a railway company; that the defendant's attorney was acting as attorney for all the defendants, and in that capacity had written to the plaintiff's attorney some time since, when the actions were first commenced, undertaking to appear for all or any number of the defendants that he might select, if he would consolidate the actions. To this and a second letter no reply was given, whereupon a plea in abatement for non-joinder was put in. To this the plaintiff demurred, and ruled the defendant to join in demurrer. The case came on to be argued on the 3rd of June (see 7 Law T. 211), when judgment was given for the plaintiff, that he answer over. The only way to stay the great costs which must ensue by these twenty-nine actions, for the same cause of action being tried, was, it was submitted, by the Court granting the present rule.

By the Court.—Take a rule nisi, and on payment of the costs only up to the time of the letter offering, to consolidate the actions. Rule nisi.

SPECIAL PAPER.

HIGGS v. BARHAYS.

In an action against a party for special damage incurred by the plaintiff, owing to the defendant having improperly constructed an article which he had to manufacture and put up for the plaintiff: Held on demurrer, that a plea pleaded by way of estoppel, that the now defendant had recovered the price of the article in an action against the now plaintiff, and that therefore he ought not now to maintain his action for the special damage, on the ground that he might have set it off in the former action, was a bad plea.

This was an action on the case, and the declaration set out an agreement by the defendant with the plaintiff to make him a kitchen range; it then went on to allege, that the defendant so badly constructed the said kitchen range, and so badly put up the same, that it would not work, by reason whereof the plaintiff was put to great expense of his moneys in endeavouring to make the said kitchen range work properly. To this the defendant pleaded, by way of estoppel, that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to maintain his action against the defendant, because, after the committing by him, the defendant, of the said grievances in the declaration mentioned, an action had been commenced by the now defendant against the now plaintiff for the price of the said kitchen range, and the then defendant then paid into Court in the said action a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of 42*l.* for the price of the said kitchen range, which the now defendant had taken out of Court in satisfaction of his claim; to this plea there was a demurrer.

Cleasby now appeared to support the demurrer, and contended that the plea was wholly inapplicable by way of estoppel; that it was clear the now plaintiff could not have pleaded in the former action the special damage which had occurred to him, some of which, indeed, had taken place since that action. Stopped by the Court.

Carrington, in support of the plea, contended that the now plaintiff could have set off the damage which had occurred to him, the improper construction of the kitchen range, in the former action, or have pleaded it in mitigation of damages or reduction of price. Cases cited:—Mondie v. Steel (8 M. & W. 688); Thornton v. Plaice (1 M. & R. 218); Fisher v. Samuda (1 Camp. 190). [ROLFE, B.—The same principle you contend for would apply to the case of a warranty, and if this argument be worth anything, it will go to shew that you can never bring an action for a false warranty, where you have paid the price of the article.] If this is not pleadable by way of estoppel, it is nothing.

POLLOCK, B.—I quite agree with you, it is either an estoppel, or nothing; I think it is not an estoppel. By the Court. Judgment for the plaintiff.

ASHBY v. BATES.

Action on a Policy of Insurance—Right to begin.

This was an action of assumpsit on a policy of insurance on the life of one Ashby. The plea averred that the assured had at the time of making the usual declaration been afflicted with rupture.

Replication, de injuriâ.—At the trial it was ruled by the learned judge (Coltman) that on these pleadings the defendant was entitled to begin, and a rule was subsequently obtained by Humphrey, Q.C. to shew cause why there should not be a new trial on the ground of misdirection as to the right to begin, and on affidavits.

Whitehurst, Q.C. (Waddington with him) now shewed cause.—There are two questions for the determination of the Court in this case. 1st. Was the learned judge right in ruling that on these pleadings the defendant was entitled to begin? 2ndly. If he was not right, will the Court on that account grant a new trial? In moving for the rule nisi, Gruch v. Ingall (14 M. & W. 95) was relied upon, but that case is different from the present; there the plaintiff in his declaration negatived the fact that he had been afflicted with any one of the various diseases from which he had declared himself to have been exempt; that is, there was a specific denial as to each disease; here the declaration merely avers that the statement made to the insurers was true in every particular. In the case referred to, there was a direct issue on the allegations in the declaration; here the defendant introduces new matter by his plea, viz. that the plaintiff had been afflicted with rupture, to which the plaintiff replies de injuriâ. It was argued in support of this rule, that the plaintiff must offer some proof in support of the general averment in the declaration, that the affirmative of the issue consequently lies upon him, and that he was entitled to begin at the trial; but in this mode of arguing the nature of the plea is overlooked; by that plea the defendant sets up new matter by way of defence, and this new matter he was bound to prove; he does not traverse the general allegation made by the plaintiff, and therefore he ought to have commenced by establishing his defence. In an action for the price of a horse sold with a warranty, alleging that the horse belonged to a particular person, the plaintiff need not make any averment of the truth of this allegation; that is analogous to the present case; and if the plaintiff were bound to prove that he had not been afflicted with any one of the diseases specified, or with any disease tending to shorten life, he would be much embarrassed, and would have to prove the non-existence of many different diseases. [POLLOCK, C. B.—Must not the plaintiff, under the plea of non-assumpsit, prior to the New Rules, have given some evidence in support of the averment in the declaration? And in an action for indicting without reasonable and probable cause, must not the plaintiff produce some evidence of the absence of such cause, although no doubt very slight would be sufficient? So, in proceedings under the Game Laws, some evidence must surely be given that the defendant was not duly qualified. PLATT, B.—The plea here should have been like that usual in an action for the price of a horse where the plaintiff avers in his declaration that the horse was sound, and the defendant pleads that the horse was not sound, in this, to wit, that he was lame.] Here the plea concludes with a verification, and the judge at Nisi Prius has no right to decide whether the plea should so conclude, or whether it should conclude to the country, which he would do, in fact, if he were to rule that the plaintiff should begin; he must be guided by the form of the plea, and is merely to try the issue joined between the parties. The effect of these pleadings is, that the plaintiff desires the jury to inquire whether the defendant can prove the plaintiff's declaration to be untrue, and accordingly the defendant having this onus cast upon him must begin. (Butley v. Catterall, 1 Mood. & Rob. 379.) [ALDERSON, B.—If you are right, would not this be an immaterial issue? because the jury, even if they had found that the plea was not established, would not necessarily have thereby affirmed the truth of the averment in the declaration.] At all events, even if the learned judge were mistaken, the Court will not, merely on that account, grant a new trial. This was a point of practice at Nisi Prius, and error does not lie on a point of practice. Besides, all the evidence was fully and fairly before the jury. He also referred to Pole v. Rogers (2 Mood. & R. 887); Rawlins v. Desborough (2 Mood. & R. 70); Huselman v. Fernie (3 M. & W. 686).

Humphrey, Q. C. and Meller, in support of his rule.—The plaintiff was entitled to begin; unless he did so, the real question could not be brought before the jury, for the basis of this contract is, that the statement made by the plaintiff was true. It does not matter on whom the proof is attempted to be thrown by the form of the plea. Neither can the defendant make that immaterial which is substantially a part of the plaintiff's case. The truth of the averment in the declaration was a condition precedent to the plaintiff's right to recover. Mercer v. Whall (5 Q. B. 447) shows that where the judge misdirects as to the right to begin, the Court will grant a new trial. [ALDERSON, B.—If it appears that the misdirection has caused a miscarriage.] They cited Ridgway v. Boulton (1 Mood. & R. 217); Cooper v. Wakley (1 Mood. & M. 248); Sonell v. Champion (6 A. & E. 407); 2 Marshall on Insurance, 773, 775; Com. Dig. Pleading (C. 54); Slavers v. Curling (8 B. N. C. 355). They also supported their rule on the ground of surprise.

POLLOCK, C. B.—This rule ought to be made absolute. Before the New Rules, the plaintiff must have given some evidence of the truth of the declaration made by him. The defendant cannot, by the particular form in which he chooses to frame his plea, affect the right to begin. Gosch v. Ingall is a direct authority as to this, and therefore a traverse with a verification does not give this right to the defendant. Whether the defendant simply traverses an averment in the declaration, or traverses with a verification, to which the plaintiff replies de injuria, or replies by re-asserting the truth of the averment traversed, it matters not; the issue will be substantially the same in each case, and the plaintiff will be entitled to begin. Then, as the learned judge decided erroneously as to this right, and as this misdirection must, in fact, make a material difference as to the probable result of the case, the Court will, in its discretion, grant a new trial.

ALDERSON, B.—Gosch v. Ingall would be a direct authority, if this plea had concluded to the country; and Rawlins v. Desborough shews that the mere form of the issue cannot affect the right to begin.

ROLYE, B.—I concur with extreme reluctance; it is a sort of scandal to the administration of justice that a new trial should be granted, where the erroneous ruling was merely as to the right to begin. The practice, however, prevails, that the Court will interfere in these cases; and that being so, I think the present is one of those cases in which a new trial should be had, and in which some injustice might have been occasioned by the misdirection.

PLATT, B.—It appears to me that the mode in which the discretion of the judge at Nisi Prius has been exercised ought to be subject to the superior wisdom of the Court, even with reference to his ruling as to the right to begin. On the main question, I concur with the rest of the Court in thinking that in this case that ruling of the learned judge was erroneous.

Rule absolute.

BRETT v. FARNELL.—Locke shewed cause against the rule Nisi, for a new trial obtained by Paterson in this case, on affidavits, and on the ground that the verdict was against evidence.

Rule absolute.

FABINA v. HOME.—This case was tried before the undersheriff of Middlesex, June 4, and a verdict found for the plaintiff.

Prentice now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against evidence; and likewise he moved for a nonsuit, on the ground of non-joinder. On each ground the Court granted a

Rule to shew cause.

Judgment for the plaintiff was yesterday (June 12) delivered by this Court in the important case of Walsh v. Spottiswoode, which will be reported very fully in the next number.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

ON ERROR FROM THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER. Argued, June 18, 1845. Determined, April 28, 1846. (Before TINDAL, C.J., COLERIDGE, WILLIAMS, COLTMAN, MAULE, and CRESSWELL, JJ.) DEAN v. THE QUEEN. (a)

1. A commission was issued on the 21st of February, to inquire whether John Dean was then indebted to her Majesty in any and what duties of customs, on goods imported from abroad, and it was made returnable on the 15th of April. An inquiry issued, tested on the 1st of March, stating that Dean was, on the day of taking the inquiry, indebted to her Majesty in a certain sum: Held, that the inquiry was good.

2. The writ of scire facias was tested on the 30th of March, and the commission was returnable on the 15th of April: Held, that the irregularity was no ground of error.

3. The counsel for the Crown is entitled to a general reply in the Court of Exchequer Chamber in revenue cases.

This case was one of the revenue cases; and the error alleged was an inconsistency between the finding of an inquiry, and the commission under which it was held. The record set out a writ of scire facias, reciting, that by an inquiry taken on the 1st day of March, in the 6th year of Victoria, it was found that John Dean, importer of foreign silks, was, on the day of taking the said inquiry, truly indebted to her Majesty in the sum of 262l. 10s. for the duty of customs on certain foreign silks, by him imported into the United Kingdom, from foreign parts, between the 8th day of February, 1841, and the 14th day of February, 1841; and that the said 262l. 10s. remained due and unpaid, as by the said commission and inquiry appeared. Wherefore the sheriff was commanded to give notice to the said John Dean to appear before the Barons of the Exchequer on the 15th of April next, to shew cause why there should not be execution against him. The writ bore teste the 30th day of March in the 6th Viet. The record then stated, that, on the 25th day of May, the said John Dean appeared in court, and craved oyer of the commission in the said writ of scire facias mentioned, and the writ was set out. The commission empowered the Commissioners to inquire whether the said John Dean be now indebted to her Majesty in any way, and what sums, for the duties aforesaid, and commanded them to have their inquiry at Westminster, on the 15th day of April next, to be delivered with the commission. The commission bore teste the 21st of February, 6 Viet. The record then set out the inquiry in oyer. It was dated the 1st of March, and stated, that the Commissioners say, that John Dean, importer of foreign silks, is the said commission named, is, on the day of taking this inquiry, justly and truly indebted to her Majesty in the sum of 262l. 10s. for the duty of customs on certain foreign silks by him, the said John Dean, imported into the United Kingdom from foreign parts, between the 8th day of February, 1841, and the 14th day of February, 1841, and that the said sum still remains due and unpaid. The record then set out the plea of the defendant, that he was not, on the day of taking the said inquiry under the said commission, justly and truly indebted to her Majesty in the said sum of 262l. 10s. for the duty, &c., nor did the said sum remain due on the day of taking the said inquiry. The jury found that the defendant was, on the day of taking the inquiry under the said commission, justly and truly indebted to her Majesty in the sum of 137l. 16s. for the duty of customs on certain foreign silks by him imported into the United Kingdom from foreign parts between the 8th day of February and the 14th day of July, 1841, and the said sum was due and unpaid on the said day of taking the said inquiry, in manner and form as in the writ of scire facias, and the said inquiry is alleged; and, thereupon, it was adjudged by the Barons of the Exchequer, that her Majesty should have execution against the said John Dean for the said sum of 137l. 16s. The record then set out the writ of error, in which manifest error was alleged in this, to wit:—that it appears in and by the record and proceedings aforesaid, that the finding of the commissioners under the said inquiry is not in conformity with the inquiry directed by the said commission, inasmuch as the inquiry directed by the said commission was, whether any, and what debt, was due from the said John Dean to her said Majesty at the date of the said commission, which was the 21st day of February, in the year of our Lord, 1843; but the finding of the jury upon such inquiry was merely that the said John Dean was on the day of the taking of the said inquiry under the said commission, which was the 1st day of March, in the year of our Lord 1843 aforesaid, justly and truly indebted to her said Majesty in the sum of 262l. 10s. for the duty of customs on certain foreign silks by him, the said John Dean, imported into the United Kingdom from foreign parts between the 8th day of February, 1841, and the 14th day of February, 1841; and the said sum of 262l. 10s. was due and unpaid on the said day of taking the said inquiry under the commission. Manifest error was also alleged in this, to wit, that it appears by the record and proceedings aforesaid, that the said writ of scire facias was issued before the said commission was returnable, and before there was any debt of record due from the said John Dean to her said Majesty.

Mr. Chambers, Q. C. appeared in support of the writ of error.

J. Wilde for the Crown.

Chambers contended, first, that the inquiry was faulty, for the reason assigned in the grounds of error; and the inquiry directed was, whether Dean was indebted at the date of the commission, viz. the 21st of February; and there was no allegation in the inquiry that the debt was ever due before the 1st of March. Dean might have become indebted in February, before the commission, and ceased to be a debtor, and then have become indebted at the time of the inquiry. The inquiry ought to have said that the debt accrued in February, and had continued ever since. It would then have included the 21st of February. Secondly, the proceedings are altogether invalid, because the scire facias issued before the inquiry was returnable. There is no actual debt of record till the return day of the commission. The commission here was returnable the 15th of April, the first day of Easter Term, and the scire facias was issued the 30th of March preceding, which, being in vacation, must be considered, in legal effect, as of the Term preceding. In West, on Exents, 816, 17, the law is thus distinctly laid down:—"The scire facias, though it may be sued out in vacation, must be tested in Term, and must be made returnable in Term. And therefore a scire facias cannot be sued out in vacation, or an inquiry taken under an extent which has been sued out, and is consequently tested in that vacation; because, as the scire facias, if sued out in vacation, must be tested as of the antecedent Term, and must recite the inquiry in such case as the foundation of it, it would appear in such case that the scire facias was sued out before the inquiry, on which it was founded, was taken. And the Court quashed such a scire facias on motion, and ruled that the objection could not be got rid of by a special memorandum upon the record, shewing the day on which the scire facias was really issued." The case referred to is Re v. Pearson (3 Price, 288); when Baron Wood said, "This is not a case in which we ought to depart from the ancient practice of the Court, which has always been never to issue a scire facias till after the return of the inquiry; and that practice is founded in good reason, for the debt is not of record till then, and it is therefore consistent both with the rule of law and the facts recited in the scire facias. It is very true that by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 86, s. 8, all commissions, writs, or other process may bear teste, and be made returnable on any day certain in term or vacation to be named in such commission, writ, or other process; but that is a privilege conceded to the Crown of naming a special day for the return, which may be waived, and if it is not availed of, the advantage conferred by the statute is lost. This variance, therefore, between the scire facias and the inquisition is a vital defect in the whole proceedings, for which a writ of error lies, as a debt of record is necessary to ground the proceedings, and there can be no such debt till the return of the inquisition.

(a) This case was reported by A. A. Fry, Esq.

Wilde, contra.—1st. The inquisition is in the usual and ordinary form. (Manning, Exch. Prac. 261-2.) Here it is clear that the debt was due at the time of the commission. It arose from the importation of goods, made prior to the issuing of the commission; and it is a necessary inference that the debt was due at that time. The 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 56, s. 2, imposes the duties on all goods, &c. imported, and from that time of importation the duties were payable. This was expressly laid down in The Attorney-General v. Austed (12 M. & W. 520). The finding of the inquisition is in effect that the debt existed all the time from importation to the return of the inquisition. 2nd. The objection is merely technical, and cannot arise on a writ of error. It is not a point of substance, but merely an irregularity in the issue. Reed v. Pearson was an application to set aside the writ for irregularity. The scire facias here is a proceeding merely of mesne process; it is the first step to bring in the party, as in an audita querela, where the party appeared upon the scire facias and demurred, for that the scire facias bore date the 23rd of October, and the audita querela the 3rd of November after; but the Court disallowed the demurrer, because here the scire facias is only to bring in the party, and in the nature of a mesne process. (Vaughan v. Lloyd, 1 Vent. 7.) And in Reed v. Wilmot (1 Vent. 220), where, in an action of false imprisonment, the plaintiff demurred to a justification by the defendant of a copias in an inferior court, because it was not shewn that a summons was issued first, Lord Hale, in allowing the demurrer, said that "on a writ of error this error is not assignable, because a fault in the process is aided by appearance." Robert v. Andrews (Cro. El. 83, Error); and B. Bacon, Ab. Error, K. 5, are to the same effect. It is not, in truth, necessary to cite authority to shew that when there is a mere irregularity, error does not lie. Here the commission is tested the 1st February, and it was returnable the 15th April. It was actually returned the 1st of March. The inquisition was on the 1st March, and the scire facias was dated on the same day. The defendant appeared on the 25th May. The scire facias was founded on the commission and the inquisition, which appeared of record. An extent might have issued on this inquisition previous to its return (West on Extents, p. 48); and if an extent might issue, a fortiori a scire facias.

Chambers, in reply.—1st. The commission gives no authority except for the particular purpose of the inquiry, which was to ascertain whether Dean was indebted at the date of the said commission. The commissioners had no authority to hear one word on the trial except under that specific authority. No practice can cure this evil. The Attorney-General v. Austed is in favour of the defendant. The duties are due on importation, and prima facie they are chargeable on the importer; but the goods may remain in the warehouse, or be taken out by some assignee of the bill of lading. "The Warehousing Act, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 57, was intended," says Baron Parke, "to give the merchant time for payment of the duties until the goods are either exported or taken out for home consumption." So in this case, an assignment might have taken place between the date of the commission and the inquisition; and, in that case, the assignee and not Dean would be liable. 2nd, as to the scire facias. There is no authority to issue a scire facias in the vacation: if issued in the vacation, it ought to be tested as of the preceding Term: a writ with a bad teste ought to be regarded as of the preceding Term. Although Reed v. Pearson was a case on motion, it does not follow that because you come early, you may not come afterwards.

Wilde claimed a general reply, on the part of the Crown, in revenue causes in this Court, which was allowed. He said that the scire facias, being tested in vacation, was cured by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 86, s. 8, and insisted that the objection, if any, being matter only of irregularity, could not be ground of error.

Cur. adv. vult.

Tuesday, April 28.
JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court. The first objection raised on this record is, that the finding of the commissioners under the inquisition is not in conformity with the inquiry directed by the commission. The commission, as it appears upon the record when set out on oyer, directs the commissioners to inquire whether John Dean is now indebted to her Majesty in any and what sums of money for the duties aforesaid, and the commission is tested on the 28th of February, in the sixth year of her Majesty's reign. It is argued that the commissioners are confined to the inquiry, whether John Dean was indebted on that day. The inquisition, which is also set out on the record, was taken on the 1st of March, in the same year, and the commissioners find, on the oath of good and lawful men, therein mentioned, that John Dean, on the day of taking this inquisition, is justly and truly indebted to her Majesty in the sum of 262l. 10s. for duty of customs on certain foreign silk by him the said John Dean imported into the United Kingdom from foreign parts, between the 1st day of February, 1841, and the 14th day of February, 1841, and the said 262l. 10s. and every part thereof still remains due and unpaid; and we are of opinion that there is no inconsistency whatever between the finding of the jury and the authority given to the commissioners; for the inquisition finds the duty to have become due on the 14th of January, 1841; and as the inquisition further proceeds to find that it still remained due and unpaid on the 1st of March, the day on which the inquisition is taken, it follows, necessarily, that the jury find the duty to be due on the 21st of February, the day on which the commission was issued; indeed it is manifest, from the special finding of the origin of the debt, that it must have been a debt from the 14th of February, 1841, for it has been decided that the importer of goods from a foreign country becomes liable, on importation, to the duties of customs payable thereon. See the Attorney-General v. Armistead and Others; and the latest day of the inquisition in this case is found to be the 14th of February; but even if the origin of the debt had not so distinctly appeared on the inquisition, it appears, from the inspection of a great number of commissions and inquisitions taken thereon, with which we have been furnished from the year 1777 downwards, that the commissions and inquisitions have always been framed in the same precise form as the present, so that the course and practice which is the law of the Courts would have been a sufficient sanction for the form in which the documents in question are issued, even without any other answer to the objection first taken. The second objection raised upon the record was, that the writ of scire facias issued before the commission was returnable, and, therefore, before any debt appeared upon the record, the commission being returnable on the 15th of April, and the scire facias bearing teste on the 30th March, and being made returnable on the same day as the commission, namely, the 15th of April; but we are of opinion that the objection amounts only to an irregularity, and not to error on the record. In the case of Reed v. Pearson, and others on which the plaintiff in error relies, the objection, which is precisely the same as the present, was treated by the defendant as matter of irregularity only, and so held by the Court. The scire facias in this case is only in the nature of process to bring the party into Court to answer; and if the teste of mesne process is too early, that does not make the process a nullity, but irregular only (1 Ventris, p. 7); we therefore think the judgment of the Court of Exchequer must be affirmed.

BAIL COURT.

Thursday, June 4.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)
Doe dem. HARRISON v. ROE.

Judgment against the casual ejector—Service of the declaration in ejectment.

Parry moved for judgment against the casual ejector.—The tenant in possession, John Frederick Franks, was called upon by the declaration to appear on the first day of this term, but they had been unable to serve him, as he was keeping out of the way on purpose to prevent service; it was hoped, however, that what had been done would be deemed sufficient to entitle the lessor to a rule nisi. It appeared by the affidavits that a clerk of the plaintiff's attorney went to the dwelling-house of the tenant in possession which it was sought to recover by this ejectment, and knocked several times on each occasion at the front door, but no one came to it, and it was discovered that the door was bolted and barred. He then went round to a back entrance through a field, which belonged to the tenant in possession, and which back entrance he managed to approach, notwithstanding the tenant kept himself well protected by the aid of a fierce dog. Here he saw some children, and also a young woman apparently about 15 or 16 years of age, who told him that she was the tenant's daughter, but that she did not reside with him upon the premises, and that her father was at home but would not be seen. He thereupon explained to her the purport of his visit, and begged her to inform her father, which she promised to do; he also made an appointment to call again the next day, but did not leave any copy. He again called next day accordingly, when he saw the same children whom he had seen before, and who ran away from him as soon as he got near them; he was unable to see any one else, and he went round to the front door and stuck up the notice there.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Why did you not leave a copy of the declaration with the daughter?

Parry.—We could not do that, as the daughter did not reside on the premises, but she said she would tell her father, and it is clear that she keeps out of the way on purpose.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I do not think you have done enough. If I were to grant you this judgment, any one who knocks at the door and can't see the tenant, might stick up the declaration on the door and then sign judgment. Rule refused.

DAY v. TUCKETT.

The Court will not grant a rule for the inspection of a document in the possession of another party merely to enable him the better to frame his plea.

Collier moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiff to produce an I O U for the inspection of the defendant. An action had been brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for slander in imputing to the plaintiff that he had been guilty of forging an I O U. The defendant stated in his affidavit circumstances from which he drew his conclusion that the defendant was guilty, but that he was unable to prepare his plea without an inspection of the document. (Browning and Another v. Ayloffe, 7 B. & C. 204.)

WIGHTMAN, J.—It is a most extraordinary application, and I cannot grant it. Rule refused.

LIPSCOMBE, Executor, v. TURNER.

When a defendant in a cause consents, by a judge's order, to a stay of proceedings on payment of debt and costs, the latter to be taxed as between attorney and client, such costs only should be allowed as necessarily arise out of the action above (unless specially provided for in the order). Where, therefore, the creditors of a deceased party file a creditors' bill and a receiver is appointed, but restrained from bringing any action without the assent of the Master to whom the suit is referred, and it becomes necessary to sue a debtor to the estate, and for that purpose steps are taken to procure the assent of the Master, and the action is afterwards stayed upon the undertaking of the defendant to pay the debt and costs, to be taxed as between attorney and client, the costs of obtaining the Master's consent to sue ought not to be allowed on taxation.

T. W. Saunders shewed cause against a rule to review the Master's taxation. The facts of the case were these:—One John Holland, being the assignee of a mortgage of some funded property in which the defendant, who was the mortgagor, had a life interest, died leaving the plaintiff and another (since dead) his executors. Subsequently, the creditors of Holland filed a bill in Chancery for the administration of his estate and effects. In this suit an order was made appointing a receiver, and restraining him from taking any proceedings at law or in equity for the purpose of getting in the estate with the assent of the Master to whom the cause stood referred. Many applications having been made to the defendant by the receiver, for the payment of the mortgage debt, and in which he was distinctly informed that, unless he made some settlement, the Master would be applied to for his authority to sue, and, no arrangement being made, the receiver took the necessary steps to obtain the sanction of the Master to the bringing of this action, which being obtained, the action was brought in the name of the surviving executor against the defendant accordingly. After the action had proceeded some time, the defendant consented to an order to stay proceedings, on payment, at a certain day, of debt and costs, to be taxed as between attorney and client. On the taxation the Master allowed the costs of the proceedings to obtain the consent of the Master in Chancery to the bringing of the action, amounting to about 5l., to which allowance the defendant objected, and in respect of which this rule was obtained. It was now insisted, that as the taxation was agreed to be upon the principle of attorney and client, and as the costs of obtaining the Master's assent were necessarily incurred, and without which assent this action could not have been commenced, and would, in the ordinary course, be payable by the client to his attorney, they were fairly chargeable upon the defendant, whose conduct it was which rendered the action necessary, and who, by agreeing to such a course of taxation, must be presumed to undertake to save the plaintiff harmless of all the costs necessarily incurred in bringing the action.

J. Browne, in support of the rule, argued that, notwithstanding these costs were necessarily incurred before bringing the action, yet they had become so in consequence of the Chancery suit, which, for their own security, the creditors had thought proper to institute, and which, therefore, should not be saddled on the defendant, who could only, in fairness, be called upon to pay the costs incurred (as between attorney and client) in the action itself; the preliminary proceedings in Chancery being no part of the action, but the steps rendered necessary (not by the defendant) in order to institute it, and that if it was intended to saddle the defendant with them, they should have been specially provided for in the order staying the proceedings. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

His Lordship to-day gave the following judgment:—In this case, which was a motion to review the Master's taxation, an action had been brought upon a mortgage-deed against the mortgagor, by the executor of the assignee of the mortgage. It appears, that on the death of the assignee of the mortgage, his creditors filed a bill for the administration of his estate and effects, and a receiver was appointed, who, however, was restrained by the order appointing him from bridging any action, unless by the permission of the Master, to whom the cause stood referred, and this obviously for the benefit of the estate, in order to prevent needless costs being incurred, and operated as a sort of injunction against the receiver himself. After the proceedings in the action had gone on for some time, there was an order by which it was agreed that they should be stayed upon certain terms, by which the defendant on a certain day was to pay the debt and costs, the latter to be taxed as between attorney and client. The costs were taxed accordingly; and on the part of the plaintiff it was insisted that, in addition to the ordinary costs of the action, he was entitled to certain costs incurred in Chancery in applying for leave to commence the action; and some instances were referred to of a somewhat similar nature, as in applying to the Court of Chancery for affidavits, or to the Court of Bankruptcy for the proceedings upon a fiat, or applying for an order to sue in forma pauperis, in all of which cases the costs are allowed on taxation as between attorney and client; but I think those cases are not applicable, as they arise necessarily out of the cause, and are incident to the cause itself; but in the present case the application by the receiver to the Master has no relation to the particular cause in question, but to relieve him of a sort of injunction in order to enable him to bring the action; it appears to be a sort of personal disability which disables him from suing, and the defendant has really nothing to do with it; it is an accident, which occurs in consequence of the creditors having thought proper to file a bill in Chancery, and not a matter which necessarily arises out of the action. It seems to me that these costs hardly come within the general view which has been adopted in a taxation as between attorney and client, the principle of which is rather that the ordinary costs as between party and party should be taxed upon such a scale as to include all the costs of the plaintiff in the action. I think, therefore, that the costs in Chancery in this matter ought not to be allowed. I felt some doubt upon the subject, certainly, and therefore was anxious to take time in considering it. Rule absolute.

NEWTON AND ANOTHER v. STEWART.

When, in an affidavit verifying a plea in abatement for non-joinder, the number of the house in the street at which the party is said to reside is stated, and it is proved on affidavit that such statement is untrue, the plea will be set aside.

Keane shewed cause against a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the plea in abatement, and the affidavit in support thereof, should not be set aside, &c. The plea in abatement was that of the nonjoinder of twenty-four other parties (defendants), and several objections were taken to the sufficiency of the plea and affidavit, amongst which was the following: the affidavit described one of the parties who ought to have been joined as "George Augustin Brown, of No. 22, Gower-street, Bedford-square, in the county of Middlesex;" and it was shewn by affidavit that no such person resided there. Upon this objection it was urged, in support of the plea, that the description was sufficiently certain, and that it would have been enough to have given the street without the number of the house, the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 8, merely requiring that the "place of residence of such person shall be stated with convenient certainty," &c.

WIGHTMAN, J.—This description, perhaps, might have been sufficient if you had stated "Gower-street" generally; but you point out the very house as the residence of the party, and why should the plaintiff seek elsewhere? You are bound by the description which you have given.

Rule absolute, the defendant to plead issuably in four days, taking notice of trial for the adjournment day.

Saturday, June 6.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

BUTTERWORTH v. WILLIAMS.

When a summons is heard at chambers, and the parties are referred to the Court, they are bound to apply promptly.

Martin, Q. C. and Bonill shewed cause against a rule to amend the judgment-roll by stating therein the true date of the issuing and return of the fiat facias in this cause into the county of Kent, and the writ of testatum fieri facias therein mentioned. It appeared that the venue in this case was Kent, and that final judgment was entered up on the 23rd February last, and a testatum fieri facias issued into the city of London on the same day, under which the defendant's goods were seized; that no original fi. fa. was issued into Kent until the 26th February; that on the previous 24th, the defendant signed a declaration of insolvency, which was duly filed on the 25th, upon which day a fiat duly issued against him, notice having been given to all parties of the act of bankruptcy on the previous 24th; that, on the 2nd of March, a summons was obtained, at the instance of the official assignee, to set aside the testatum fieri facias for irregularity, on the ground that no writ of execution into Kent had been returned and filed previously to the issuing and executing of the testatum fieri facias, which summons was dismissed in consequence of the production of the office copy judgment-roll, containing the return and filing of the original fi. fa. before the issuing of the testatum; that, on the 10th March, another summons was obtained to erase the entry on the judgment-roll of the return of the fi. fa. and of the award and issuing of the testatum fieri facias, on the ground before mentioned; and that, upon the hearing of such summons, it was agreed between the parties, with the assent of the judge, that the subject should be adjourned to be heard by the Court, which adjournment was indorsed "Adjourned to be heard by the Court." The present rule was moved on the 5th of May following. It was now contended that this application was made too late; that the question having been adjourned from the 10th of March, the parties should have come promptly to the Court early in the ensuing term, and not have delayed the application until the latter end of it. (Warner v. Haddon, 9 Dowl. 960; King v. Birch, 3 Q. B. 425; Bate v. Lawrence, 2 Dowl. & L. 83.)

Jervis and Jones, contra, argued that as this was a case in which third parties were interested, the usual rule as to promptness in applying does not apply.

WIGHTMAN, J.—You were aware of this on the 10th of March, and were then referred to the Court. You are not to be allowed to come at any time. If I permit this motion to proceed, it will be a precedent in future cases. The objection to the writ amounts, if to any thing, only to an irregularity, and you were, therefore, bound to have come promptly.

Rule discharged.

ROBERTS v. HAMMOND.

Upon a motion for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, for not proceeding to trial after issue joined, if the motion would be too early in a country cause, and in time in a town one, it is necessary to state in the affidavit whether the action be in fact a town or country one.

Udall shewed cause against a rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit for not proceeding to trial. Issue was joined on the 5th January last; but the affidavit upon which the rule was obtained did not state whether the cause was a town or a country one, which it was submitted, was a fatal omission, as the defendant would be too early with his motion if the cause were a country one.

Power, contra, argued that the affidavit was sufficient, as the fact of the cause being a town one must be well known to the other side.

WILLIAMS, J.—As under one state of circumstances you are in time, and under the other you are not, you should shew by your affidavit the actual state of the facts. It is the duty of the party who applies for a rule to shew to the Court all the facts which are necessary to entitle him to it.

Rule discharged with costs.

Tuesday, June 9.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

The Court will, under certain circumstances, permit the amendment of the name of the defendant in the entry of judgment.

Bramwell shewed cause against a rule for amending the judgment-roll by inserting the Christian name of the defendant therein. It appeared that the name of the defendant had been inserted in the writ and declaration as—Hume. The defendant, however, having taken out a summons and obtained an order for payment of the debt by instalments, signed his name as Robert Montague Hume; but the officer of the Court having refused to allow judgment to be signed, except as the defendant was described in the declaration, the judgment was signed accordingly. It now being intended to proceed to outlawry against the defendant, it was thought desirable to amend the entry by the insertion of the Christian names of the defendant; and against this application it was contended that the Court had no power to amend, and that, even if it permitted the amendment, the judgment would not tally with the other proceedings.

O'Brien, contra, argued that the Court had power to make the amendment, and that if it were necessary that the other proceedings should tally with the judgment, they also could be amended. (Moody v. —, 3 Dowl. 496.)

WIGHTMAN, J. thought that the amendment would be proper in this case, and that the declaration could be made conformable.

Rule absolute to amend the judgment and declaration, on payment of the costs of amendment and of this motion.

Wednesday, June 10.

COMPTON v. TAMLYN.

An affidavit sworn with a view to a proceeding which does not take place, cannot afterwards be used in support of a distinct matter.

J. Brown shewed cause against a rule for an attachment for not paying two sums of money pursuant to an award, and he proposed to read an affidavit made last Term, with a view to a motion which was not then made.

Barstow objected that the affidavit could not be received, inasmuch as it was a merely voluntary one, not made in any proceeding now before the Court, and upon which therefore perjury could not be as-signed.

Brown contended that the affidavit could be used, and that perjury could be assigned upon it as used in shewing cause against a rule, for that the merely swearing to the affidavit without its being used is sufficient to constitute perjury.

WIGHTMAN, J.—That may be in a case actually depending, but here, at the time it was sworn, it was intended for another purpose than that for which it is now used. The affidavit must be made in the course of some judicial proceeding; there was no proceeding in Court when this affidavit was made, and it is now intended to make use of it for a purpose for which it was not sworn. It cannot be used. (The case then proceeded.) Rule absolute.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.
 Guildhall, Friday, June 5.
 (Before PARKE, B.)

INGRAM V. FERGUSON.

Work and labour—Advertisements in newspapers—
Compliance with 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 76—Onus of proof of—Pleading—Illegality.

In an action of work and labour, for inserting advertisements in a newspaper, it is not incumbent on the plaintiff to shew compliance with the provisions of the statute 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 76, which requires that before a newspaper shall be printed or published, the proprietor shall lodge a declaration and certificate; for if the necessary steps have not been taken by the plaintiff, the publication and contract are illegal, and the defendant must plead the illegality of the contract.

Assumpsit—For work and labour, for the insertion of advertisements in the Railway Mail newspaper.

Plea—Non-assumpsit.

Knowles, Q.C. and Brown, for the plaintiff, proved that the defendant was a provisional committee-man of a railway, and that the advertisements in question had been inserted in the Railway Mail, of which paper the plaintiff was the proprietor.

At the close of the case,

Jervis, Q.C. (with him Hawkins) submitted, for the defendant, that the case for the plaintiff had failed, inasmuch as he had not offered any proof of compliance on his part with the provisions of the Act 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 76, the sixth section of which enacts that "no person shall print or publish, or cause to be printed or published, any newspaper, before there shall be delivered to the commissioners of stamps and taxes, or to the proper authorized officer at the head office for stamps in Westminster, Edinburgh, or Dublin respectively, or to the distributor of stamps or other proper officer appointed by the said commissioners for the purpose in or for the district within which such newspaper shall be intended to be printed and published, a declaration in writing, containing the several matters and things hereinafter for that purpose specified: that is to say, every such declaration shall set forth the correct title of the newspaper to which the same shall relate, and the true description of the house or building wherein such newspaper is intended to be printed, and also of the house or building wherein such newspaper is intended to be published, by, or for, or on behalf of the proprietor, and shall also set forth the true name, address, and place of abode of every person who is intended to be the printer, or to conduct the actual printing of such newspaper, and of every person who is intended to be the actual publisher thereof, and of every person who shall be a proprietor of such newspaper, who shall be resident out of the United Kingdom, and also of every person resident in the United Kingdom, who shall be a proprietor of the same, if the number of such last-mentioned persons, exclusive of the printer and publisher, shall not exceed two, &c." Now this is an action for work and labour on an implied contract of payment for the insertion of advertisements in the newspaper, of which the plaintiff claims to be the sole proprietor. It is, therefore, apprehended that he ought to prove a compliance with the section above-named, before he can sue in this action. [PARKE, B.]
—You have not proved the illegality of the contract.]

Jervis.—The plaintiff must make out that he sues on a legal contract; he has no right, by law, to print or publish his paper till he has proved that he made such a declaration as is required by the Act. [PARKE, B.—No. All that he says by his declaration is, that he, at your request, printed certain advertisements in the Railway Mail, and he has proved it, or, at least, given evidence to go to the jury to that effect; that is enough for him to do, in an action for work and labour. If the work and labour were illegal, you must plead the illegality specially.]

Jervis.—We may not have the means of pleading it;
 we may not know who the plaintiff is, or what the Railway Mail is? [PARKE, B.—Then you can have particulars of the plaintiff's demand, which will supply you with all that knowledge.]

Jervis.—But suppose, when the declaration is presented, it should be found not to correspond with the imprint required by the Act to be attached to the end of every newspaper.

PARKE, B.—Then that would be illegal, and you must plead it.

Jervis.—If your lordship looks at the imprint, you will see that the paper professes to have been printed and published, at the office of the Railway Mail, by Charles Ingram, and also published by F. Kennedy, of Fetter-lane and Royal Exchange. If the declaration did not correspond with this, the plaintiff could not recover; and it is contended that the plaintiff ought to shew such correspondence. The production of the declaration would also determine the question whether the plaintiff was the sole proprietor of this paper, which is disputed; and the plaintiff evades that issue by omitting to prove the declaration required by law to legalize his conduct. It is therefore submitted that the plaintiff's case has failed. This is not an action by a stranger, but by the proprietor himself, who must be taken to know all about it.

PARKE, B.—I think the plaintiff need not give any such evidence, whether he is a proprietor or a stranger. The declaration states that he has inserted certain advertisements, at your request, in the Railway Mail, and of that allegation there is proof to go to the jury. If there had been anything illegal in that act, by reason of the non-compliance with the Act of Parliament, the onus lies on the defendant of putting that on the record, who must plead the illegality of the contract on which the action is founded.
 I will, however, reserve the point if it should become necessary.

The case then went to the jury on the merits, and Verdict for defendant.

June 9 and 10.

(Before Mr. Baron PARKE.)

LAW V. WILSON.

Liability of provisional committee-men.

Where a projected company had both a managing committee and a provisional committee, a member of the provisional committee, who has never taken any part in the management, is not liable for the debts incurred by the managing committee.

Where a defendant had consented to become a "director," but was placed upon the provisional committee, held, that a consent to belong to the latter was not proved.

It must also be shewn that, when the defendant consented to become a member of the provisional committee, he intended to take upon himself all the responsibilities which the managing committee might think proper to incur.

Where a man merely allows his name to be inserted in the list of provisional committee-men, he does not thereby make himself responsible for every act or every liability of a managing committee, unless it be proved that he had acted in the conduct of the concern.

This was an action for goods sold and delivered to the defendant, as a member of the provisional committee of the Southampton, Petersfield, and London Direct Railway Company. The sum sought to be recovered was 55*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*

Jervis, Q.C. and Cole, for the plaintiff; Hoggins and Rawlinson, for the defendant.

It appeared that, in the month of September last, a scheme was got up by Mr. Duncan, the solicitor, to construct a railway from Southampton to Petersfield, and then on "direct" to London. On the 30th of that month, Mr. Duncan and the other solicitors made the following letter to the defendant:—

"72, Lombard-street, Sept. 30, 1848.

"Sir,—At the request of Mr. Bradley, we forward you a prospectus of the 'Southampton, Petersfield, and London Direct Railway,' and shall feel obliged by your informing us whether you desire to have your name inserted in the list of the provisional committee of the company. "We are, &c."

In reply to this letter the writers obtained no written answer; but in a few days after it had been sent, although the party to whom it had been addressed had removed from his former habitation, the defendant called at the office and stated that he should have no objection to become a director of the company. The clerk thereupon endorsed on the letter "Agreeable to be a director." The company went on, and presently an allotment of 50 shares was awarded to the defendant as one of the provisional committee. The defendant, however, not only never took up the shares, but never took any notice either of the numerous letters and official reports and papers which were constantly being forwarded to him from the company's office. By-and-by the railway-market became under the influence of the panic, and then the managing committee—for there was a managing committee, consisting of some 16 or 18 persons—thought it useless to proceed with the undertaking, and at once turned their minds to the consideration of the question as to which would be the best way of winding up the concern, and liquidating the debts which had been incurred. The result of this deliberation was a resolution to return 25*s.*
 per share, out of the 2*l.* 2*s.* deposit, to the shareholders, which was subsequently done, and that each provisional committeeman should be called upon to contribute the sum of 35*l.* as his fair proportion of the expenses incurred. Accordingly a letter, containing the resolution, and soliciting the payment of the 35*l.*, was sent to the defendant, but of that communication he took not the slightest notice. In the end, however, the present action was brought by the plaintiff, one of the creditors of the concern, against him, in his character of a member of the provisional committee of the company.

On behalf of the plaintiff's case, there was, under these circumstances, a failure in proving that the defendant had, upon any occasion, acted in the conduct or management of the affairs of the company.

Hoggins, for the defendant, said he should throw himself back upon the question which had been left to the jury in Barnett v. Lamert, namely, "did the defendant render himself liable for the goods supplied in consequence of his having given an express consent or an implied consent by personal communication or in writing" to become a provisional committeman, and to become, in common with others, responsible and liable for the debts of the company? or did he give such an authority to the secretary of the company as could bind him to the consequences of any acts of what now appeared to be a select managing committee? That was the simple question, he apprehended. It was quite clear that he had not given any consent to become a member of the provisional committee, and, therefore, that being so, it was beyond all doubt that he was in no way liable for the debts.

Mr. Baron PARKE, in summing up, said, it was in the first instance necessary for the plaintiff to make out that there had been an express contract entered into by the defendant in person, or by his agent, and that it was only upon such ground that he could recover. The question was, whether the person who entered into the contract with the plaintiff was the authorized agent of the party who was sought to be made liable? There was no doubt that in the first instance the claim was upon Brooks, the secretary, but if that party contracted the debt as the agent of another, then the question arose as to whether the defendant was that other. In the present instance the plaintiff, there was no doubt, could have brought his action against Brooks, or against the managing committee, but he had not chosen to sue either of these, against either of whom he could have had no difficulty in proving his claim, but rather chose to select a member of the provisional committee. The acting committee had abandoned the concern, and had then made a claim upon the provisional committee. But the managing committee had clearly made themselves liable for these debts, for they it was who had conducted the concern and had authorized the contraction of debts. But, so far as the jury was concerned in the present case, the question was, whether it had been made out to their satisfaction that the defendant had rendered himself liable by consenting to become a director. That consent was clearly not in the terms of the present form of action in so far as the description was concerned. The defendant consented to become a director, not a provisional committeeman, and the promoters of the company or the managing committee had thought proper to make him that which, as far as the evidence went, he had not consented to become. The jury, before they could make him liable to this claim, must be satisfied that he had given his consent, or had meant to become a member of the provisional committee; and, further, that in that capacity he had intended to take upon himself all the responsibilities which the managing committee might think proper to incur. Then there was another matter for them to take into consideration.
 The defendant, it was admitted on the part of the clerk of the company, had not only not taken up his shares, but had never acted as a committeeman, or taken the most remote participation in the business.
 He did not accept the settlement of 50 shares; he had in no way interfered in the concern, nor had he attended any meeting, and he had refused to answer or take any notice of the numerous letters which had been sent to him from the office of the company. It, moreover, appeared that the provisional committee had had no power to interfere with the managing committee. If the jury were of opinion that the defendant had not given his consent to become a provisional committeeman, there was then an end to the case. There had been no evidence offered to shew what the duties of the provisional committee were, but all had gone to establish the responsibility of the managing committee, and that those parties were responsible for all acts and debts they incurred, either by themselves or by their agent.

The jury returned a verdict for the defendant.

Mr. Baron PARKE then said, that it was not to be supposed that because a man allowed his name to be inserted in the list of provisional committeemen, he made himself responsible for every act or every liability of a managing committee, unless it could be proved that he had acted in the conduct of the concern.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

Friday, May 15.

(Before the Hon. C. E. LAW, Recorder.)

REG. V. JOHN HAYES AND ELLYN MATES.

A and B were indicted for jointly uttering counterfeit coins. The evidence was, that A went into a shop and uttered the same, B remaining outside at a distance of fifty yards. Held, that before B could be convicted it must be shewn that he was so near to A as to be able to assist her in such uttering as by a sign, &c. Sed quare.

In this case the prisoners were indicted for the joint uttering and putting off of a counterfeit half-crown under 2 Wm. 4, c. 34, s. 7.

Baldwin and F. J. Smith appeared for the prosecution.

The prisoners were undefended.

The facts proved were, that the two prisoners were in company together, and that Hayes had been seen to hand something to the woman Mayes, but what it was he so passed could not be distinctly shown. Immediately afterwards the woman went into a shop, and then gave the counterfeit half-crown in payment for some small articles. Hayes went to the door of the shop with Mayes, and then stayed in the street, but passed once while she was in the shop, and then remained three doors off, a distance of near fifty yards, until he was joined by the woman; they then walked away in company.

THE RECORDER.—Is there any case to go to the jury of a joint uttering against the male prisoner?

Baldwin.—It is submitted that there is. He was seen to pass the door once while the woman was in the shop, and then remained three doors off. It may be a question whether or not he was in such a position as to see what she was about, or what passed in the shop; but still, as the two prisoners were together before the female prisoner uttered the coin, and after, it is for the jury to say whether or not they think there was a concert between them.

THE RECORDER.—Can you cite any case where it has been held a joint uttering, where one was not so near as to contribute to aid the other in any way, by sign or otherwise? The learned Recorder referred to Rees v. Soares (Russ. & Ry. 25.)

Baldwin.—There is no case exactly in point: the one which is most near to it is Rees v. Skerritt (2 C. & P. 427.) He referred also to 1 Russ. Crimes & Mis. 83.

THE RECORDER.—I think, as this is a statutable offence, that they must both contribute to the uttering. If it were merely a misdemeanor it would be different. This may be a conspiracy to utter bad money, but that is not within the statute. If this had been the first case, and I had to decide whether this was an offence within the statute or not, I should say yes; and that all who were engaged in it were guilty. But it has not been so held in any of the cases I have been able to find, but rather the other way, and I do not like to be the first to throw any doubt upon the ruling.

THE RECORDER (in summing up).—Unless you are prepared to say, that the male prisoners contributed to the uttering, you cannot convict him. He may have been guilty of another offence, but not the one at present charged by the indictment which you have to try. To make him a joint utterer, he must have been so near to the woman at the time she uttered the coin, as to be able to aid her by a sign; or to assist her in the uttering, by encouraging her with his countenance or personal aid and assistance. If you think he was so near that also might yet under his countenance, as by his telegraphing, or otherwise, you may, under such circumstances, find him guilty; should you be satisfied that he did, in fact, deliver that bad coin to her, and which she afterwards delivered to the witness, you may then find her guilty of the "putting off."

Payne cited R. v. Page and Jones (9 Car. & Pay. 767.)

Verdict, Guilty.

In this case the learned Recorder has stated the law on this point according to former decisions, though, at the same time, he intimated that he did so contra his own opinion. The distinction here lies in the difference between accessories in felony, and accessories in misdemeanors. The former are principals in the second degree, but the latter are principals in the first degree. Whatever, therefore, would make a person an accessory in felony, would make him a principal in a misdemeanor. The cases of Rees v. Elise, 1 Russ. on Cr. and Mis. 81; Reg. v. Page and Jones, supra, were clearly decided on the same principle as if the charge had been that of felony. With all due deference, this seems to be incorrect. The right view would appear to be that taken by Mr. Greaves, in his edition of Russell on Crimes, that where, in cases of this nature, the evidence would satisfy the jury, if the case had been a felony, that the party absent was an accessory, he would, in a misdemeanor, be a principal. (See 1 Russ. Cr. 82, n. d, in which the principle, as here stated, is strongly supported; see also Reg. v. Moland and Others (2 Moody, C. C. R. 276). There is no distinction between a statutable and common law misdemeanor; when an offence is made a misdemeanor by statute, it is made so for all purposes. (R. v. Roderick, 7 C. & P. 796.)

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Thursday, April 30.

(SITTINGS IN BANC.)

Criminal information.—Privilege of counsel.

Reg. at the prosecution of ISAAC BUTT, esq. Q.C. v. FREDERICK JACKSON, gent. one of the Attorneys.

This was an application on behalf of Isaac Butt, esq. one of her Majesty's counsel, for liberty to file a criminal information against Mr. Frederick Jackson, one of the attorneys of the Court, for having, by writing certain letters to the prosecutor, and by other means, sought to induce him to commit a breach of the peace by fighting a duel with the defendant.

Bennett, Q.C. in support of the motion.—The transaction arose out of some observations made by Mr. Butt in an address to the jury at the Commission Court, on behalf of a Mrs. Scott, who was tried on an indictment for bigamy, Mr. Jackson being the attorney for the prosecution. The affidavits of Mr. Butt stated that he had been retained by Messrs. M'Gusty and Snagg to defend Mrs. Scott at the last commission at Green-street, on two separate charges of bigamy, one for intermarrying with a person named Galway, her husband, James Carter, being then alive; the second, for intermarrying with John Bindon Scott, in the year 1833, James Carter being then living; and that, upon the 8th of April, he received his instructions from those gentlemen as Mrs. Scott's attorneys, and was informed by them that the case was one of great hardship against his client, and that criminal proceedings were instituted against her for the purpose of thereby terminating in a summary manner certain suits pending in the Court of Chancery and in the Ecclesiastical Court, and that the criminal proceedings were instituted by the attorney in the Chancery cause, for Mr. John Bindon Scott, the lady's husband, under circumstances of hardship and oppression, after a long interval of time, and not until after Mrs. Scott had refused to accede to a compromise proposed between her and Mr. Scott, and that deponent had been informed that the prosecution would be sustained by testimony of a discreditable nature, and that every effort would be made by the prosecutors to blacken the character of Mrs. Scott, who from the length of time which had elapsed would be placed at a disadvantage in meeting such charges. The trial took place on the 13th of April, before Mr. Baron Richards and Mr. Justice Ball, and a jury of the city of Dublin, and upon that occasion deponent was the prisoner's leading counsel, Mr. Peebles and Mr. O'Hagan being with him. The case for the prosecution occupied two days; and on the 15th, deponent addressed the jury for the prisoner, and in his address strongly reflected on the object of the prosecution and the conduct of the persons engaged in its management. Deponent stated also, that he was merely actuated by the desire honestly and faithfully to discharge his duty to his client; and that he did not at the time, or now, believe that he exceeded his duty, and that he was not influenced by any feeling of hostility to Mr. Jackson, or the other persons engaged in the prosecution; and that he then and still believed that it was necessary for the effectual and valid defence of his client to strongly reflect on the character of the prosecution; and that, ~~that he suggested to make the observations in question, the defence of his client would not have been as effectual as it ought to have been, in conformity with his instructions.~~ On the 17th of April Mrs. Scott was acquitted; but a second indictment having been found against her for marrying Mr. Scott, her first husband, Carter, being still alive, counsel for the prosecution sought that this trial should be postponed; but at deponent's suggestion the question of postponement stood over till the following Monday, when the parties were to be ready to proceed, if the postponement should not be granted by the Court. The affidavit then proceeds to state that on the same evening deponent was waited on by Captain R. Blackwood, who stated that he came from his friend Mr. Jackson, and handed deponent the following letter, which is in the handwriting of Mr. Jackson:—

"9, Harcourt-street,

"Friday evening, April 17th.

"SIR,—An impression was made by a sentence contained in your speech on Wednesday, that you used language, direct or implied, to the import that 'you knew Mr. Jackson, and that although you did know him, you did not shrink from saying that his conduct in bringing forward this case was unmanly and disgraceful.'

"Making all due allowance for the liberties conceded to counsel, and the privileges claimed by advocates, it is absolutely necessary that I should know whether, in the observations made by you, it was your intention to convey any thing offensive to myself in my capacity as a gentleman, or derogatory to my character as a professional man?

"Not wishing to interfere in the slightest degree with your duties to your client, I have forbore from making this application until the termination of the trial; and I send my friend Captain Blackwood with this letter, who will be the bearer of any communication you wish to make.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your very obedient servant,

"FREDERICK JACKSON.

"Isaac Butt, esq. Q.C. &c. Leeson-street." The prosecutor states, that having read over the letter, he stated that he could not give an answer to it until the proceedings pending against Mrs. Scott were disposed of, and that in the mean time he should feel at liberty to consult some members of his own profession upon the subject, which appeared to him to involve the privileges of the Bar in some degree. Deponent further states that he was taken by surprise by the communication, and that his postponement of a reply to it was not with the intention of noticing it in the manner the defendant intended, and that several members of the Bar, to whom he had disclosed all the facts which had occurred, advised him that he was imperatively bound not to give any explanation relative to what he had stated in court in defence of his client. On the following Monday, the Court having refused to postpone the trial, and no evidence being produced to sustain the second charge, Mrs. Scott was a second time acquitted. Immediately after her acquittal, Mr. Butt, seeing Captain Blackwood apparently waiting for him, and he being then engaged in defending a libel case, he went out and appointed to see him at eight o'clock that evening, and Captain Blackwood having accordingly called, he wrote the following letter, and gave it to him for Mr. Jackson:—

"72, Leeson-street,

"Tuesday, April 21st, 1846.

"SIR—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your note of Saturday, which was on that day handed me by Captain Blackwood.

"Whatever observations I made on the occasion to which your note refers I made in the discharge of my professional duty. I am bound to say, that in making those observations I meant nothing more than to discharge that duty, and I had no other motive.

"Farther than this I do not feel myself at liberty to reply to the questions in your note. I cannot recognize your right to call me to account for what I have done in the discharge of my professional duty; and anxious as I am to give the fullest explanation to any gentleman who might feel himself aggrieved by any thing I may have said, I feel that I owe it as a duty to my profession to say, in reply to your note, that I do not feel myself called on to answer the questions which it puts to me.—I have the honour to be your very obedient servant,

"ISAAC BUTT.

"Frederick Jackson, esq. Harcourt-street."

The affidavits then proceed to state that Captain B. not considering this letter satisfactory, asked whether deponent would refer him to a friend for the purpose of a hostile meeting? or did he refuse to do so? which deponent most unequivocally did. The affidavit then states the receipt of the following letter from Mr. Jackson on the 22nd inst. :—

"9, Harcourt-street, Wednesday morning,

"April 26th, 1846.

"SIR,—Your letter of Tuesday evening's date, in reply to mine of Friday last, has been handed to me by my friend Captain Blackwood. In it I find you shelter yourself from the personal responsibility which one gentleman necessarily incurs, and to which every person in society who has the pretensions of being a gentleman is liable, when he gratuitously and wantonly insults another under the subterfuge of 'professional privilege,' and the allegation of acting 'in the discharge of a duty.' Both pleas—the one for not making a generous reparation where an injury had been inflicted, and the other for not affording that satisfaction which the laws of honour demand when an insult had been offered—are untenable and untrue. The solicitor by whom you were employed gave to me personally, and through my counsel, his unqualified denial, and that denial was voluntary, of having instructed you to use any observation of an offensive nature towards me, and his total dissent from their application as regarded my conduct in the case. With respect to the real cause of your shrinking from a responsibility which you deliberately incurred, without perhaps fully calculating upon the ulterior consequences in which your conduct would involve you (for of this I fully acquit you), I shall not venture to designate it or you by the term or epithet which naturally suggest themselves; but I confidently expect that the members of both professions, as well as the public, will draw their own conclusions as to the course you have taken, and be much more likely to come to the conviction that in adopting it you have been influenced much more by the consideration of your personal safety than actuated by a regard for the assertion of 'professional privilege.'—I have the honour to be, Sir, your very humble servant,

"FREDERICK JACKSON.

"To Isaac Butt, esq., Q.C. 72, Leeson-street."

Deponent further stated, that on the 23rd April he read in Saunders's News-letter, three other letters, which he believed were inserted by direction of Mr. Jackson; one to the editor, requesting him to insert the correspondence; one from Capt. Blackwood to Mr. Jackson, and one from Mr. Murdock, a mutual friend; and that deponent had been advised by counsel, that in consequence of certain observations, in Jackson's last letter, inserted in Saunders's News-letter, it would be necessary for him to disclose to the Court the nature of the instructions which he received for the defence of Mrs. Scott, and the facts relative to the origin of the prosecution, and the conduct of Mr. Jackson, in relation to certain propositions made to Mrs. Scott; and that deponent, prior to the trial, in a consultation at which Mrs. Scott's solicitor attended, took particular pains to ascertain whether he could rely upon the facts of which he had been instructed, and the circumstances which in his opinion reflected upon Mr. Jackson, when he was informed by Mrs. Scott's attorney that he could, and that Mr. Jackson must admit the truth of the facts on oath, if examined; and deponent states that his reason for making such particular inquiries was, that Mr. Jackson had always been considered a very respectable man. Deponent further states, that the other counsel engaged with him in the case concurred in the general tone of observation adopted by him in the conduct of the case, and that part of his instructions consisted of the sworn answer of Mrs. Scott in the Chancery cause, in which she stated the making of certain propositions to her relative to the abandonment of criminal proceedings. These propositions are of such a nature, that unless the Court require it, I should wish to avoid detailing them.

BLACKBURN, C. J.—There is no necessity, Mr. Bennett, for your detailing them.

Bennett.—Mr. Butt, in his comments upon Mr. Jackson's conduct, acted upon his instructions, part of which consisted of facts which had been sworn to, and also upon what appeared at the trial of Mrs. Scott.

BLACKBURN, C. J.—The Court are of opinion that you have stated most abundantly sufficient grounds for the granting of a conditional order.

Rule nisi accordingly.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE proceedings of the Parliament have been of small professional interest, however important to the public. It may now be considered as certain that no one of the projected Law Reforms will be carried during the present session, which will necessarily be hurried to an early close, with the passing only of such measures as are absolutely essential to state emergencies. With this assurance, all interest in them ceases.

Bills in Progress.

Draft of a Bill, intitled "An Act for Consolidating and Amending so much of the Criminal Law as relates to incapacity to commit crimes, duress, the essentials of a criminal injury, criminal agency and participation, and homicide and other offences against the person."

Be it enacted, &c.

1. That the schedule to this Act annexed shall be deemed and taken to be parcel of this Act, and that the four chapters of the same, and the ten sections of the said chapters, and the 148 articles of the said sections, and the headings thereof and the numbers thereof, respectively, shall be deemed and taken to be enacted by this present Act, as if each and every of the said chapters, sections, articles, headings, and numbers had been expressly and in terms herein recited, with the usual words and in the usual forms of enactment, or declaration, or proviso, as the case may be; and that from the passing of this Act every one guilty of any offence described in, or defined by, the said schedule, shall be liable to such punishment as is therein appointed in respect of such offence.

2. That after the passing of this Act, the rule of law whereby a married woman charged with the commission of any crime is, in case her husband be present at the time, presumed to have acted under his coercion, unless it appear that she did not so act; and all rules of law contrary to the provisions of chap. I. of the said schedule shall be, and the same are hereby repealed and annulled. (a)

3. That no person shall, after the passing of this Act, be liable to prosecution by an indictment or information in respect of any offence against the person not included in the said schedule.

4. Provided that nothing hereinbefore contained shall exempt any person from prosecution by indictment or information in respect of any offence against the person not included in the said schedule in any case where, by any Act or Acts of Parliament, persons committing such offence are made specially punishable on account of the party against whom or the place wherein such offence is committed. (b)

5. Provided also that nothing herein contained shall exempt any offender from any proceeding in respect of any offence against the person in which any magistrate or commissioner is or shall be empowered to exercise any summary jurisdiction without trial by jury.

6. Provided also that as regards any offence against the person perpetrated before the — day of — 1846, and also as regards any offence against the person in part perpetrated by any act done before that day, and which offence shall be completed or commenced on or after that day, the offender shall be punishable as if this Act had not been passed.

7. That after the passing of this Act every offence in respect of which it is declared by the said schedule that the offender shall incur the penalties of the 6th or any higher class, shall be tried in the same manner, and be subject to all the same rules of procedure as if such offence were by the said schedule declared to be a felony; and every offence in respect of which it is declared by the said schedule that the offender shall incur the penalties of any lower class, shall be tried in the same manner, and be subject to all the same rules of procedure, as if such last-mentioned offence were by the said schedule declared to be a misdemeanour. (c)

HOUSE OF LORDS.

NEW LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

THURSDAY, June 13.—The Earl of WINCHELSEA expressed his hope that this measure would not receive the assent of Parliament. It was a highly objectionable one.—The Earl of RADNOR thought any discussion on the measure at present premature. He did not agree with his noble friend; on the contrary, he thought that the present law of settlement was a great grievance to the poor, and that the ministerial measure was a step in the right direction for its improvement. After a few words from Lord ABERNETHY, the Earl of WICKLOW expressed his disapproval of the government measure. If introduced into Parliament, it would destroy the whole benefit of the poor-law system there. The measure, that government had not been called upon, and was wrong in introducing it at all.—Lord REDENBALLE was of opinion that a more mischievous plan than that of a union settlement could not be adopted.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

POOR REMOVAL BILL.

FRIDAY, June 5.—Sir J. GRAHAM moved that the House go into committee on the Poor Law Removal Bill. After some discussion on a point of order, Mr. E. DENISON moved as an instruction to the committee the following resolutions:—

"After a day to be fixed for each union, all paupers of the parishes comprising the union shall be settled in the union, and not in any such parish of such union.

"That such paupers be maintained, and all expenses defrayed from a fund levied from each parish in the proportion of the expenditure for the relief of the poor incurred by such parish for the last seven years.

"Debts already charged on the rates, and interest due in respect of such debts, shall not be affected by the change."

Col. WOOD was of opinion that the poor-law settlement question would ultimately compel the legislature to pay that attention which its importance required, and he hoped that a general assessment for the poor rate on the plan of the property tax would soon be adopted. With respect to the bill, he hoped that it would be so framed as to secure to persons the benefit of a proper residence in any locality. At the present moment he could not support the resolutions as they then stood.—After a few remarks from Mr. Banks, Mr. Rice, and Mr. Christopher, Mr. STURTT advocated the principle of a union settlement, which he thought would have the effect of equalizing the burden of the poor-rates. He thought the question ought to be discussed with that attention which its importance required.—Mr. PAKINGTON also advocated a change in the law of settlement, but expressed his conviction that if the proposition then before the House was adopted, it would prevent the bill passing that session.

(a) Upon the subject of marital coercion, see the note to article 9 of section 1, of chap. I. of the schedule.

(b) The necessity for this provision as an exception to section 3, is occasioned by the limited nature of the digest now submitted to your Majesty, should it be proposed to pass it into a law before the completion of the whole digest of crimes and punishments. No such clause would be necessary if the whole digest were completed. The following are examples of the offences to which the above provision is intended to apply, viz. treason in shooting at the Queen, the offence of striking a judge whilst in the execution of his office, &c.

(c) The object of the above clause is to make the system of procedure at present applicable to felonies and misdemeanours, applicable to the offences contained in the schedule, notwithstanding to the provisions of the above clause, until your committee shall have considered the whole subject of the degrees of crimes and trial of offenders.

—Sir J. GRAHAM entered into a lengthened explanation of the merits of the bill, and concluded by saying that it was his intention to support the proposition of Mr. E. DENISON; but if the House refused to adopt that proposition, he was ready to accept any other which would be an improvement, as he was of opinion it was of great importance this measure should be passed, to prevent the evil of operatives in manufacturing districts being removed, against their will, to rural ones. After a few observations from Mr. BROTHWICK, Sir R. INGLIS considered the measure as another of those blows levelled against the parochial system of England.—Mr. C. WOOD advocated the principle of a union settlement.—Mr. HANLEY censured the government for the extraordinary invasion they had made on the parochial institutions of the country.—Mr. V. SMITH said that he wished to see union settlements established, but thought there ought to be a union rate established with them. After a few words from Mr. B. ESCOTT and Mr. GRAINGER, Lord MORPETH adverted to the evils which labourers endured in the Wolds of Yorkshire from the working of the parochial system. Three-fourths of the removals were persons who had lived more than five years away from their respective parishes. He had no doubt the present measure would greatly diminish those removals, and he should therefore give the bill his hearty support.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE said that to do any good at all they ought to abolish the law of settlement altogether. He was perfectly sure that the whole of the labouring population were in favour of such a measure, and he thought that if any alteration was to be made, now was the time to do it. He, therefore, had a proposition, in the shape of an amendment, to make, to the effect that an instruction be given to the committee to make provision for the repeal of the laws of settlement; that relief should be given in the union when the necessity should occur, and also that Government should provide a fund instead of an assessment.—General JOHNSON seconded the amendment.

—Mr. BRIGHT vindicated the manufacturers from the aspersions thrown out respecting their turning their men adrift during the late period of depression.—Lord G. BENTINCK opposed the motion of Mr. E. DENISON, but in some measure approved of Mr. T. DUNCOMBE'S. He, however, hoped that such an important measure would not be disposed of in a house comparatively empty, but that they would adjourn the debate for a full one, when due attention would be given to the various provisions of the bill. If such a course was pursued, he was sure it would conciliate a great portion of the operative classes in the country.—Sir T. D. ACLAND supported the bill.—Mr. BANKES contended that the bill ought to give to the industrious classes in manufacturing towns an absolute settlement after a residence of five years in the locality.—Mr. SPOONER said he should oppose the motion of the hon. member for Malton (Mr. Evelyn Denison).—After a few words of explanation from Sir JAMES GRAHAM, Lord J. RUSSELL considered the question before them a most difficult one, and that the difficulties surrounding it had not been decreased by the course pursued by the hon. gentleman opposite (Sir James Graham), who lectured the Whig Government for bringing in a Poor Law Amendment Bill in an imperfect state. The right hon. baronet had now brought forward a bill which he was willing to alter. He should give his vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Malton, provided it was understood that if it should be hereafter considered necessary to adopt a union settlement, he should be at perfect liberty to vote against it.—Lord J. MANNERS thought the conduct of Sir J. Graham most extraordinary in so readily adopting the amendment of an opponent.—Mr. P. BORTHWICK moved that the debate be adjourned.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE defended himself from some remarks made on his conduct respecting the corn-laws, by Mr. Bright.—Mr. P. BORTHWICK withdrew his motion, and the House divided on Mr. Dunccombe's amendment, when it was lost by a majority of 105 to 89.—Mr. E. DENISON'S motion was then put, and carried by a majority of 92 to 70.—Mr. E. DENISON moved that the House go into committee pro forma.—After some remarks from Sir H. Inglis, Mr. T. DUNCOMBE, and Mr. Hanley, Sir J. GRAHAM hoped the House would consent to a proposition—namely, that further progress of the bill be postponed until Monday, and in the mean time he would be able to confer with the hon. gentleman opposite respecting the clauses which he proposed to introduce in order to carry out the instructions sanctioned by the House. In that case he would be answerable for any alterations that it might be found necessary to make in the bill.—Col. SIBTHORP then addressed the House, and the committee on the bill was appointed for Monday next.—The other orders of the day were then read, and the House adjourned.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE Poor Removal Bill has been treated after a very extraordinary fashion. Sir JAMES GRAHAM, its parent, was in favour of the substitution of union settlements for parochial settlements, and proposed the former to the House of Commons; but the design was so ill-received that he did not venture to renew it in another session, and the Poor Removal Bill was brought in shorn of that provision, and limiting its cares to the regulation of removals instead of the reconstruction of settlements. But it was thought that an independent member might do what the Government dared not attempt, so Mr. DENISON moved a series of instructions to the committee for providing union settlements, which motion was met by Sir JAMES with an aspect of charming candour, and a professed willingness to submit to the wishes of the House, and it was carried accordingly by a considerable majority, the Government undertaking to withdraw the Bill and introduce the settlement thus forced upon them. So the Removal Bill has been converted into a Settlement Bill, and nobody is responsible for the measure. It belongs to the collective House, and if it fail, the Anti-Poor-Law people will be able to affix the blame to no man, or men, or party. This may be convenient enough, but it is certainly contrary to the usual manner of passing important laws, and looks much like an abdication of its powers on the part of the Government. To the proposed Union Settlement we have nothing to object. On the contrary, we think it will be beneficial to those who are the principal parties whose interests are to be consulted in such a matter—the paupers. Whatever will prevent removals we look upon as a boon to the poor, and therefore it is that we would abolish the law of settlement altogether, and maintain the pauper wherever he happens to become chargeable, the state providing the funds out of a general rate, and the local authorities administering them. But as such a reform is much too complete to be adopted in an age of compromise and tinkering, we are glad to see even an approach to it, in the shape of Union Settlements as substitutes for Parochial Settlements.

THE grand jury of the county of Middlesex have made a presentment which deserves perusal for the boldness with which it declares the utter uselessness of grand juries, and calls upon the Legislature to abolish an institution which other improvements in the administration of justice have made not merely a worthless waste of the public time, but an actual mischief. This is the statement alluded to:—

The grand jury for the county of Middlesex, assembled at Clerkenwell, the 3rd day of June, 1846, having endeavoured to fulfil, to the best of their abilities, the purpose for which they have been summoned, feel it a duty they owe, not only to themselves but to the Court, to offer a respectful representation of their utter uselessness. Not only have they felt their services to be useless, but in some instances they have been a positive impediment to the administration of justice. Summoned from their various avocations for what they have been led to consider a great public duty, and invested, as they have always considered, with a serious responsibility; quite willing, however, to take upon themselves such responsibility, and to devote their time to the public service, they have found themselves utterly helpless for any purpose of good. Unacquainted with facts which have already been sifted, and are exhibited on the depositions before the Court, and unable from their very constitution to arrive at any knowledge of facts by cross-examination or otherwise; confined to the evidence of only such witnesses as are endorsed on the indictment, and unable to seek other information, although in some cases it has been shewn to be at hand, they have felt the performance of their duties to be little better than a waste of time and an idle mockery. Though perfectly aware that this Court has no power to afford them any relief, they take this method to place their sentiments on record, as it is only by similar reiterated representations that any amelioration can be expected from the Legislature.

We subjoin some remarks of the Morning Chronicle, which will have the entire concurrence of those of our readers who have watched the practical working of Grand Juries.

Every person possessing the slightest acquaintance with the practical working of the grand jury system will immediately recognize, in the language which we have quoted, a faithful estimate of the general nature and utility of this absurd institution; which, in the nature of things, must be utterly useless wherever it happens to be harmless; which, at the very best, is only a clumsy clog upon the working of the machinery of justice; but which, upon many occasions, becomes the medium through which delinquents of the worst character and most unquestionable guilt are enabled to escape; or by which prosecutors, equally infamous, obtain the power to commit the grossest oppression, under the pretence of putting the law in motion for the punishment of guilt. Everybody is aware that, except in a few cases, no person can be put upon trial in the criminal courts of this country, unless upon an indictment which has been found to be a "true bill" by the grand jury in whose jurisdiction the crime has been committed. The indictment comes before the grand jury, having upon the back of it the names of such witnesses as the prosecutor thinks proper to produce upon that occasion. To listen to what these witnesses, or such of them as are actually produced, may think proper to say, is the whole amount of authority which the grand jury possess over the case; and even a grand juror who may know that the evidence of a particular witness is absolutely untrue, has no power to make his knowledge available in that place for the protection of the party accused; whilst, if he disclose the testimony which he so knows to be false, he is liable to be punished by fine and imprisonment. But before the case comes before the grand jury it has in general been brought before the magistrate, where the investigation has been conducted in the most public manner; where all parties are entitled to have professional assistance, and where, through the medium of the press, the utmost possible publicity is given to all the material circumstances of every case which is of any importance to the public, or capable of interesting it in any degree, however small. After such an inquiry, and generally speaking, after one or more adjournments of the case, the prisoner is committed for trial; upon which an indictment is laid before the grand jury, who, acting without professional assistance, without the power of hearing more than one side, and in a secrecy which they swear not to violate, are called upon to decide, upon a part of the evidence laid before the magistrate, whether he was justified in the conclusion of guilt which he drew from the whole. The suppression before the grand jury of any material part of the evidence adduced before the justice, must, of course, in general produce the ignoring of the indictment. And when the bill has been thrown out, the accused party must be discharged, even though he may have confessed his guilt before the magistrate in the previous investigation!

The stupid and mischievous character of such a system is evident at a glance. After the complete and public investigation which takes place before the justice, it seems a wanton waste of time, trouble, and expense, to put the prosecutor to the necessity of renewing the inquiry before the grand jury in circumstances which render the inquiry itself absolutely ridiculous.

POOR REMOVAL BILL.—NORWICH, JUNE 10.—A very large and influential meeting of the rate-payers of this city was held to-day at the Guildhall, for the purpose of taking into consideration the Poor Removal Bill now before Parliament. The meeting was convened by the mayor, who presided, at the request of the corporation of guardians of the poor, and was attended by a great number of the magistrates and leading men of the city. Several resolutions were passed, condemnatory of the 8th clause of the bill, which decided that five years' residence in a place would give a person a settlement there, the meeting being of opinion that this clause would entail disastrous consequences on all large towns, by increasing their pauper population at least one-third. In one town (Barwell, in Cambridgeshire) the population would be increased five-sixths. Petitions to Parliament, founded on these resolutions, were unanimously agreed to. On the motion of A. A. H. Beckwith, esq. the governor of the court of guardians, it was agreed to present a petition to Parliament, praying that a temporal law might be made, empowering all guardians of unions or parishes to relieve paupers resident there, but not settled, at those places without causing their removal, charging the guardians of their place of settlement with the expense—the court of guardians here having tried that plan and found it very successful. NATIONAL RATE.—A petition, founded on the following resolution, was also unanimously agreed to:—"That this meeting is decidedly of opinion that the only effectual alteration in the law of settlement, and by which free scope could be given to the labour of the people, would be to abolish the present law of settlement, and rating, and to substitute a general national tax on real and personal property."

The following building is certified as a place duly registered for solemnizing marriages, pursuant to an Act of the 6th and 7th Wm. 4, c. 85:—

"Wesleyan Chapel, Stockton, Durham. William Best, superintendent registrar."

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE events of the week requiring special notice are more numerous than usual. The most important of the contents of this double number are the Term reports, which continue to be very heavy, and of course of the foremost interest with professional readers, to whom the earliest intelligence of points decided is often a matter of serious moment. To these, therefore, it is our rule that all other news shall give place. So many judgments are promised at the sittings after Term, that we fear two or three more double numbers will be required in order to keep pace with them.

The Court of Queen's Bench has pronounced its formal sanction of the decision of the Quarter Sessions in Denbighshire giving exclusive audience to the Bar. Lord DENMAN observed, that the privilege of the Bar had been sustained in practice, and approved upon the ground that it ensured competent legal assistance, and that it was expedient to maintain the distinction between the two branches of the legal Profession.

A curious question as to the limitation of the right of advocates "to abuse the other side," has been raised in Ireland, and the formal decision of the judges, if that can be called such which decides nothing, will be found among the legal intelligence. The Times has some stringent, but not altogether undeserved, comments on the abuses of this privilege by persons who would be angry if denied the title of gentlemen. We shall return to the subject next week. These are the remarks of our lawyer-hating contemporary:—

Our Irish intelligence to-day includes the report of a case involving a point of much importance to the Bar, and of considerable interest to society at large. We allude to the criminal information filed by Mr. Butt, the barrister, against Mr. Jackson, an attorney, for sending him a challenge, to answer for language spoken in the course of professional advocacy. The language complained of involved a direct charge against the attorney of subornation of perjury, and the use of it was not denied by the barrister. The latter, however, justified himself on the ground of professional privilege, refused to give satisfaction, and brought the case before the Queen's Bench. In a technical point of view, the Court had no alternative but to let the information go, for the challenge had undoubtedly been given, and an offence committed against the law. It must be understood that an application for an information is strictly a preliminary proceeding, upon which the general merits of the case—such as the amount of provocation, and the conduct of the parties towards each other—need not be inquired into. The decision here is, therefore, by no means conclusive of the general question—whether or not Mr. Butt exceeded the bounds of professional license in imputing to Mr. Jackson an indictable offence; and the judgment of the chief justice does, in fact, expressly leave this question undecided. It would, we think, have been well if some opinion had been given on a point of so much general interest—the only point, indeed, which it was important to have an opinion upon. We admit that the Court must have gone a little out of its way to express such an opinion, and that the expression would therefore not have had all the force of a judicial sentence. But the moral effect might and must have been extremely beneficial. The gentlemen of the bar do sometimes forget themselves strangely, and say things which, after every allowance is made for the heat of the moment, and for the license necessary for the client's benefit, are still quite unjustifiable. We cannot, in this place, enter fully into the merits of the question of an advocate's freedom of speech, but it will hardly be denied that his remarks ought to be confined to the matter at issue. Mr. Butt appears to have acted on the instructions which many non-professional persons have, with some reason, imagined to be a general formula for a barrister's brief—"No defence; abuse the plaintiff's attorney." Doubtless it is very expedient for a counsel to act up to his instructions, but surely he does not put away all discretion when he assumes the wig and gown. All the world must respect a fearless advocate, but none but pettifogging attorneys and knavish clients admire an unscrupulous one.

We take the first opportunity of informing the Profession that a very important decision has been given by the Court of Queen's Bench, upon the true construction of the 8 Anne, c. 14. The case we refer to is Cocker v. Musgrove (supra, 5 Law T. 72), which was argued the first day of Hilary Term last, and judgment therein was given last Tuesday. The facts and the arguments will be reported next week. It will suffice for the present to mention that it decided that where a sheriff in possession under a f. fa. has notice of rent due, and of which notice is given to the execution creditor, he is not bound, nor is it his duty, to proceed with the sale, until the execution creditor has paid the rent, and this, too, irrespective of the value of the goods, or the amount of rent. The Court admitted that this was not followed in practice, but that it was the true construction of the statute.

The Court of Exchequer has this day (Friday) given judgment for the plaintiff in the important case of Wallstab v. Spottiswoode; thus affirming the right of allottees to recover back deposits paid upon projected joint-stock companies. It is presumed that the question will be taken before a Court of Error, the Exchequer judges having shewn an unusual animus against provisional committees, from the commencement of the present flood of litigation. The case and judgment will, we hope, be fully reported next week.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

[Clerks of the Peace for Counties, Cities, and Boroughs will oblige by regularly forwarding the names and addresses of all new Magistrates who may qualify.]

The Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint George Crowe, esq. now her Majesty's Consul at Patras, to be her Majesty's Consul-General at Tripoli.

The Queen has also been graciously pleased to appoint Thomas Wood, esq. now British Vice-Consul at Bengasi, to be her Majesty's Consul at Patras.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed John Richard Wood, of Woodbridge, in the county of Suffolk, gent. Henry Peake of Sleaford, in the county of Lincoln, gent. and Alexander Blucher Smith, of Melksham, in the county of Wilts, gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS LIEUTENANT. DEVONSHIRE.—C. B. Calmady, esq. Colonel H. R. F. Davie, and H. Porter, esq. to be Deputy Lieutenants.

NEW SOLICITOR OF EXCISE.—We hear that Mr. Douglas, the barrister, has received the appointment of Solicitor of Excise, vacant by the promotion of Sir Francis Doyle to the office of Receiver General of Customs, in the room of Sir William Boothby, deceased. The salary of the latter office is 1,500*l.* per annum, but in addition to it Sir William held the nearly sinecure office of Paymaster of the Band of Gentlemen Pensioners, producing the sum of 2,29*l.* It has not transpired on whom the paymastership will be bestowed.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

SHERIFFS' COURT—GUILDHALL.—SINGULAR STATUTE.—BRADSHAW V. LAVENDER.—The plaintiff in this case, Watson Bradshaw, a tailor, sought to recover of the defendant, Thomas Johnson Lavender, a clerk in a railway office, the sum of 6l. 4s. for work and labour done.

Prendergast said that the whole of the plaintiff's case being admitted, it rested with him to open the case on the part of the defendant, and he must say that in all his experience he had never been engaged in such an extraordinary action before. The question for them to try would be, whether the clothes the plaintiff had made were made in such a manner that he could legally recover the value of them. In order more clearly for the jury to understand the case, he would read the plea which the defendant had put upon the record. The learned gentleman here read the plea, which set forth "that the goods and each and every of them, were clothes (to wit on the 5th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1846) made by the plaintiff, he then being a tailor, as such tailor, for the defendant, which the defendant on the day and year aforesaid requested plaintiff to make for him, with buttons and button-holes therein and thereon respectively, and which were respectively wholly useless to the defendant without buttons and button-holes, and the plaintiff so then being, and as such tailor, unlawfully made, set on, and bound on the said clothes, and on each and every of them, buttons and button-holes made of and bound with cloth, serge, druggat, frieze, camel, and any other stuffs that clothes are usually made of, velvet excepted, contrary to the form of the statute in such case, and then illegally sold and delivered the said clothes with the said buttons and button-holes therein and thereon, and forming and being part and parcel thereof, to the defendant, and with no other button or button-hole therein or thereon, contrary to the form of the statute, &c. &c." The plaintiff, in his replication, denied that he made the button-holes as stated in the plea, or delivered them to the defendant as alleged in the second count. In continuation, the learned counsel said the jury would not be troubled with the law of the case, for that was very clear upon the subject. By the statute of Geo. 1, cap. 7, it was enacted that no one should make, use, or sell any clothes on which were buttons made of or bound with cloth, serge, druggat, frieze, camel, or any other stuff or stuffs that clothes are usually made of, under a penalty of 40s. A penalty was inflicted, not only against the maker, but also against the wearer of such clothes, for he found that by the 7th of George I. it was enacted, that no person should use or wear such buttons or button-holes under a similar penalty. This Act was called the Birmingham Act, and was made for the purpose of supporting and encouraging the trade of Birmingham; and although it might be said that the buttons worn in the present day were more fashionable than formerly, still it was quite right that fashion should conform to the law. After some further remarks in allusion to the replication of the defendant, the learned gentleman concluded by stating that the clothes would be produced, and it would be for the jury to say whether the buttons upon them were made or covered by such stuff as was mentioned in the Act. If they were such, the defendant would be entitled to the verdict. Mr. Charles Fisher, a grocer, identified the clothes (consisting of a white Chesterfield, a plush waistcoat, and a blue body-coat) produced as these supplied to the defendant by plaintiff.—Cross-examined by Mr. Ryland.—The inside of the buttons appears to be composed of tin or iron, and the outside covering silk. This was the defendant's case.

Ryland contended that all the witness had proved was, that the buttons were covered with silk; and as nothing was mentioned in the Act of George I. of silk, the plaintiff was entitled to the verdict.

The COMMISSIONER.—Would it not come within the meaning of that portion of the Act, "of stuff that clothes are usually made of?"

Ryland submitted that it was not within the meaning of any of the words of the Act of Parliament. The learned gentleman, at some length, contended that the Act of Parliament could not be made use of as an answer to an action of debt, when power was given to sue for a penalty of forty shillings for every dozen of buttons, which was recoverable before a justice of the peace, who had the power, if the party had not goods to levy upon, to commit him to the common gaol of the county for three months, with hard labour.

The judge was of opinion that the power given for enforcing the penalty did not do away with the right of a defendant to plead the statute which made it an illegal act to make such clothes. He thought the case must go to the jury, and he would ask them to look at the buttons, and say if they were made of "stuff," and secondly, if they were made of "stuff that clothes are usually made of."

Prendergast, in answer to Mr. Ryland, wished to impress upon the jury that serge was made from silk, and being so, the latter commodity came within the meaning of that part of the Act which said, "or stuff of which clothes are usually made."

Ryland.—You don't pretend to say that coats are usually made of silk?

After some further discussion, the learned judge decided on the case going to the jury.

Ryland then addressed the jury, and said that it was a disgrace to the country, and an insult to a court of justice, that in these days of civilization and refinement, a statute like the one they had heard of should be continued on the statute-book. The legislature would be doing its duty if, once every fifteen or twenty years, it would go through the statute-book and repeal those laws which were really a great disgrace to see now and then put in force. He would put it to the jury, whether it was not monstrous that they were liable to a penalty of 40s. for wearing buttons of a peculiar make.

The learned judge left it to the jury to say whether the buttons were made of the various stuffs named in the Act of Parliament, or of stuff that clothes were usually made of. The witness had stated that the buttons were made of silk and tin, or iron; now clothes were not usually made of either the one or the other of those articles, but they would examine the clothes, and state what their opinions were with regard to the buttons.

After examining the clothes for about five minutes, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, thus establishing the "legality" of the buttons now in common use.

WESTMINSTER COURT OF REQUESTS.—At the Marylebone vestry, on Saturday last, the report of the committee appointed to investigate the charges of corruption and extravagance against the Westminster Court of Requests was brought up and read. It stated that the charges were fully sustained, that the abuses complained of were attributable to the constitution and irresponsible authority of the commissioners, and recommended that a petition be presented to the House of Commons, praying that the present Court of Commissioners be abolished, and another body, formed upon the elective and representative principle, appointed to succeed the present commissioners. Mr. Nelson moved, and Mr. Soden seconded, the adoption of the report. Mr. Elliott, a commissioner of the court, said that he had been so disgusted at beholding builders, architects, and surveyors voting away sums of money, in the expenditure of which they were deeply interested, that he had not attended the court for the last ten years. Mr. Hope, a commissioner for the last forty years, expressed his full concurrence in any measure calculated to effect a reform in the court. Mr. St. John urged the vestry to exert every endeavour to introduce the representative system into that body, but on no account to allow the subordination of the commission or centralization scheme. Messrs. Daniel, Morley, Selomons, Joseph, Glaxier, and other gentlemen, having supported the adoption of the report, it was unanimously carried, and the committee were directed to draw up the petition recommended in that report.

DINNER TO PRINCE ALBERT AT LINCOLN'S-INN.—His Royal Highness Prince Albert honoured the Benchers of Lincoln's-inn with his company at dinner on Wednesday evening—the first grand day since the election of his Royal Highness to be one of their body. The new hall was crowded by members of the inn, of whom there were nearly 300 present.

His Royal Highness arrived shortly before eight o'clock, attended by several noblemen and gentlemen of his household, and was received with the usual ceremonies. The Prince wore the silk gown of a bencher, and the star of the Order of the Garter. Amongst those present were Lords Brougham and Denman, and the great majority of the Benchers, the Bishop of Durham, &c. Lord Brougham sat next his Royal Highness at table. The only toast given during the evening, "The Queen," was proposed by Mr. Tancred, Q.C. the treasurer of the inn. His Royal Highness was warmly received on his entrance into the hall, and was loudly cheered as he departed. An admirable dinner and a profusion of rich and rare wines were provided by the Benchers for the entertainment of the members of the inn. The band of the Coldstream Guards performed several pieces in the gallery in the course of the evening.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT, OXFORD.—During term, a court is occasionally held here, which is presided over by the assessor, Dr. Kenyon, in which he is assisted by the registrar, Rev. Dr. Bliss, and the two proctors of the court, the Rev. H. Carey and the Rev. J. Hughes. It is in this that tradesmen sue the members of the university for the recovery of their debts; and livery stable-keepers are mulcted for letting out tandems and vehicles which are not considered orthodox. The judge, as well as the proctors who officiate as counsel, are clothed in academics, but do not display wigs, which deprivation in the eyes of some persons, abridges them a little of the dignity and gravity they would otherwise possess. The court is small and but thinly attended, although it is open to the public, who rarely avail themselves of the privilege, unless the cases about to be brought forward possess some peculiar interest; but, generally speaking, there is no lack of amusement, and a tolerable insight into university life may be obtained: the generality of cases are simple ones of debt, which there is an unwillingness on the part of the debtor to pay so early as his creditor requires. The case is simply stated to the Court, and the debtor, through his proctor, pleads his reasons for not paying the debt, and sometimes sets up as a plea that the articles were unnecessary, or that he was a minor when he gave such liberal patronage to his wine-merchant, tailor, or shoemaker. Although such pleas when substantiated are fatal to the claims of the tradesman, still the proceeding is looked on both in the university and town as so discreditable and dishonest that it is rarely resorted to now. A great many cases are brought before this Court in every term, which is the best proof that the tradesmen have confidence in the integrity and justice of the learned civilian who presides over it. On Friday last the Court was occupied with two or three simple cases, and with one that excited considerable interest. It was between two rival book-sellers, Graham versus Vincent, and Vincent versus Graham. Although these were cross actions, they were resolved into one, as they rested entirely on the question whether a borrowed book had been returned. Evidence was submitted on both sides, and the Court decided that there was sufficient proof that the book was returned, and under any circumstances Mr. Vincent was not justified in keeping back money which had been sent for a totally different purpose.

INFORMATION FOR INSOLVENTS.—In the Leeds District Court of Bankruptcy, on Thursday, Mr. Commissioner Burge gave judgment in a case of a bankrupt sharebroker, which involved a question of some importance to persons who are made bankrupts on their own petition. Objection was made to the bankrupt passing his last examination on the ground that the fiat had been issued upon his own petition, and that there were no assets available for distribution amongst the creditors, as the amount likely to be realized was scarcely sufficient to work the fiat. The evidence adduced shewed that there was a considerable amount of debts that ought to be realized; and, therefore, his Honour allowed the bankrupt to pass his examination; but he intimated a strong opinion that if the allegation of want of devisable assets had been sustained, he should have felt it his duty to adjourn the examination sine die, as he thought that the Act of Parliament was not framed to meet such cases, and that a party so circumstanced ought to resort to the Insolvent Debtor Acts, and not to the Bankrupt laws.

PALACE COURT.—PRIVILEGES OF COUNSEL.—During the hearing this morning of several cases under the new Small Debts Act, an application was made by an attorney named Shepherd on the part of a person who had refused to obey an order of the Court. Mr. Benn and Mr. Locke resisted the right of Mr. Shepherd to do so, on the ground that the counsel of the court alone were entitled to appear before or to address the Court. Mr. Shepherd contended that under the 6th clause of the Small Debts Act, he was entitled to address the Court. The clause alluded to enacts that no plaintiff is bound to appear by counsel, attorneys, or agents, but that he might, but was not compelled, to attend in person. If, then, a plaintiff was not bound to employ either counsel, attorney, or agent, and they were named in the clause, it was clear that the Act contemplated that they might or might not be employed. Therefore, it was not necessary to employ either in particular. In fact, the parties could not always afford to pay the fees. The judge (Mr. Brett) said, that, from his own experience, he knew the liberality of the counsel. When parties could not afford to pay, they had held briefs gratuitously. There could be no doubt that, as a matter of privilege, the counsel only were entitled to address the Court and jury. The learned counsel said they did not wish to press their right in trifling cases; but must in this present one, where a contempt of Court had been made, and which only could be removed by motion of counsel.

INCREASE OF ATTORNEYS.—From the official list of persons who have given the requisite notices of their intention to apply to be admitted on the roll of attorneys of the Court of Queen's Bench, lately issued by the authorities of the Law Institution, it appears that in addition to 157 notices given previous to Easter Term last, 170 more have given notice for Michaelmas Term next; eight for re-admission, and eighteen for the renewal of certificates during the present term, making altogether an increase of attorneys in two terms of 335. The average annual increase of attorneys exceeds 600.

PROPERTY TAX.—Return of the net amount of Property and Income Tax received for the two years ending April 5, 1845, classed under the several schedules (A), (B), (C), (D), and (E), in the Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35. The result, for Great Britain, is as follows:—

	Year ending 5th April, 1844.	Year ending 5th April 1845.
Schedule A.....	£2,378,060 ..	£2,366,047
" B.....	317,716 ..	315,607
" C.....	795,702 ..	766,066
" D.....	1,559,828 ..	1,541,970
" E.....	321,478 ..	313,900

ORDNANCE SURVEY, SCOTLAND.—Returns, shewing the expenses, the present state, and the progress of the survey.—In the counties of Wigton and Kirkcudbright, from 1st May, 1843, to Dec. 31, 1845, there were surveyed 628,502 acres, and drawn 104,131 acres. There were employed, during the last year, one officer of the Royal Engineers, 36 Royal Sappers and Miners, 54 civil assistants, and 63 labourers. The staff for the ensuing year is the same, excepting that the number of Sappers and Miners is increased to 51. The sums expended in the period above mentioned amount to 11,360*l.* exclusive of the last quarter's accounts, not yet closed. In addition to the surveying carried on in the counties of Wigton and Kirkcudbright, extensive observations have been made for determining the astronomical latitudes of the Monarch, in the island of Lewis; Ben Hutick, near Tongue, in Sutherlandshire; Ben Lomond, near Dumbarton; and Ben Huguish, in the island of Tiree. Observations to perfect the secondary triangulation in advance of the surveyors have been extended over a large portion of the county of Dumfriesshire, and others have been made for supplying data for Admiralty surveys of Locks, Long, Gait, Straven, and Ridas, and the Frith of Forth. The engraving of Wigtonshire, on the scale of six inches to a mile, is begun, and will be proceeded with as rapidly as the plans are prepared.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

THE first public meeting of this society was held on Saturday, the 6th inst. at the rooms of the society, 21, Regent-street, and there was not so much a crowded as an influential attendance of noblemen and gentlemen present on the occasion. In addition to those who took part in the proceedings, and whose names will appear in our report, we observed the Duke of Cleveland, Lord Chief Justice Denman, Lord J. Manners, Mr. Lynch, Mr. Starkie, Mr. W. Hawes, and Mr. Travers.

Lord Brougham, who is president of the society, took the chair at half-past three o'clock, and the proceedings commenced. His lordship said that he would make his observations much fewer than the subject would justify, while he shortly called the attention of the meeting to the business which had brought them together. More than twelve months ago a society had been established there for the purpose of promoting that most important of all designs, the amendment of the law of this country. It proposed to found that amendment not on any rash or speculative views, but on sound principles, both as to the objects to be attained, and the manner of effecting them. And certainly they had hitherto no reason to complain of not being approved by the community at large, or of not having secured the approbation of the Government of the country and the members of both Houses of Parliament. During the twelve or fourteen months, or perhaps he might rather to say nearly two years, which the society had been in operation, it had made very considerable progress in the great design which its members had proposed to themselves. The first course they took was this; they divided themselves into committees, each of which devoted itself to one particular subject—one engaged in the consideration of the criminal law, another in that of the language of Acts of Parliament, another on the law of real property, and the rest on the various branches of the law to which their attention might be beneficially directed. The reports of those separate committees had been printed at different times, and extensively circulated; and it appeared to the members that the time had at last arrived when it was fit to call on the great body of their fellow-subjects to assist in the labours and share in the counsels of the society. They had, therefore, thought it proper to summon a general meeting of persons interested in the objects of the society, to hear the course which it was about to take, and the fruits which its labours were yielding. He would now call their attention to that subject. He (Lord Brougham) had always felt a deep interest in the subject of law reform, and had, as many of them knew, devoted to it a great portion of his life. He had laboured for it strenuously, and he would add, not hopelessly, and although he had met with disappointments, he believed they might now look forward to the pleasure of success. The first thing they did was to report in favour of certain legislative measures, and he was requested by his colleagues to take under his protection one or two of those measures which required the sanction of Parliament. He had brought forward no less than nine of these during the Session before last, out of which number four had become the law of the land, and, in his opinion, were of very great benefit. One of these bills, which was that for the merging or extinction of terms outstanding which had been satisfied, had been entirely approved of by the Profession, and still more by those for whose benefit it was made; by the landowners and others, to whom security of title and cheapness of conveyancing was of very great importance. Another of these bills, and a very important one, related to the law of debtor and creditor. He had brought forward that bill, though it passed less from the society than the other, and he took more of the responsibility with regard to it on himself. That was the bill for the Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt. It had been considerably modified in committee by Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Coleridge, and himself, and had subsequently passed into a law; so that imprisonment for debt had ceased to exist in this country. It existed only for the suppression of crime, and that was the true principle. For reaching at the property of a debtor, he believed that the arrest on mesne process was much more effectual than the arrest on execution; for when a man became insolvent it was quite useless to bring an action against him, as Mr. Commissioner Rame had very clearly proved, there being no less than twelve steps in the law which a man must take before execution; and each of these steps was attended with serious expense. In arrest on mesne process it was said that the property of the debtor was at once got hold of, whereas, long before that twelfth step in arrest on execution was arrived at, the debtor had made away with, or spent, or secreted his means. The law now said, that any man who was indebted might apply to the Court of Bankruptcy for protection, unless it was proved that he had been guilty of fraud or gross extravagance. In such cases, if he made away with his property or refused to give it up, then his imprisonment was for contempt. His was bound to admit that there was great division of opinion on that point, and he knew that in the Profession and in the trading world it was said that they had gone a little too far in favour of the debtor, and that they ought now to retrace their steps; that if they could not retrace their steps, which he (Lord Brougham) thought it would be a very difficult thing to do, they should give the creditor every protection, security, and consideration, and go as far in his favour as they had done in that of the debtor. That was his opinion, and, therefore, he had listened to the arguments urged on the subject by tradesmen as well as by members of the Profession, and was disposed to give them the aid of measures which, without destroying what had already been done, might act as a set-off in favour of the creditor. The presumption must always be against the man who did not pay what he owed, and that the creditor was in the right. (Hear.) The creditor could not be to blame, but the debtor might. The imprisonment of a debtor for fraud was no grievance, but a necessary part of the administration of public justice. There was one part of the bill which he was sure would work very ill indeed, a part undertaken by the Lord Chancellor, whose humanity had been exercised in favour of debtors under 20*l.* His noble friend at first agreed with him, but said that small debt courts should have the power of imprisonment. However, there came out at the time such statements of the unspeakable horrors of the prisons attached to these courts, that no one could resist his noble friend's proposition, that imprisonment in such cases should be abolished altogether. The unfortunate thing, however, was, that it was not considered that almost all the debts in the country were small debts. The tradesmen very justly complained that out of 900 debts on their books, 890 were under 20l. for men took care not to get credit for more. He had moved for the appointment of a committee to consider whether the Act might not be remedied by putting the small debtor on the same footing as the larger. Another measure which had been successful, having been brought forward on the reports of the society, was for shortening deeds and lessening the expense of conveyancing. His lordship shortly explained the causes which had rendered such a measure necessary, and quoted instances. The measure had produced the best results, he said, with respect to settlements, devises, and wills, and more particularly it had proved a boon to those connected with the land in regulating the subject of farm leases. They were proceeding bit by bit, and God forbid that they should do otherwise. He should say that it would be the greatest reflection on the law, that a person should come down, and say, "Here is a new code, which I have invented, and which I wish to be established." It was impossible, he believed, to codify too much; and the criminal code was now waiting for Mr. Starkie's report. The criminal code would have been ready in a short time, but the Lord Chancellor said, "I must beg you to stop in your code till we see how we are to remove the penal statutes which deform our statute-book, and which have occupied the attention of the commissioners for so many months." Their six months' labour had borne the fruits of the Lord Chancellor's bill, now before the House of Lords. If the people were called on to obey the law, it was the bounden duty of the State to let the law be so arranged as that they could understand it. It was bound to give them a code of criminal laws, and he hoped soon to find that part of the society's labours attained. They were called dilettante legislators. But he begged to state who those dilettante legislators were. He would take the instances of the Terms Bill and the Short Deeds Bill. These were the fruits of the following dilettante legislators:—the Lord Chancellor, an ex-Chancellor, and another ex-Chancellor of Ireland, the Lord Chief Justice, the Master of the Rolls. These dilettante legislators gave the bill in every part of their progress their entire and hearty support. Again, it was said that the Real Property Commission should be avoided; but the Finance and Recovery Bill was the work of the Real Property Commissioners; the Powers Bill was drawn by them, together with the Will Statute. All these were bills which had made the law of real property different to what it was, that old Mr. Shadwell, if he were to rise again, would not know what industry he was in. To have recourse to the Real Property Commissioners from those who were called dilettante legislators, was like an appeal from Phillip to Phillip. The noble and learned lord concluded by apologizing to the meeting for detaining them so long from the business to be brought before them.

—SIR JOHN BURNES then rose to propose the first resolution, which was as follows:—"That the well-considered and practical amendment of the law is of the utmost importance to all classes of the community, and that the subject may be advantageously promoted by a society composed of members of all classes of the legal profession, and of other persons not belonging to that profession, desirous to co-operate with them." His lordship said, that if he considered the resolution anything beyond the affirmation of a principle he should feel that he was guilty of a great intrusion. As a country gentleman he was deeply concerned in the effectiveness of the law bearing on the land of England. He rejoiced to see that the members of the society were such as to justify the expectation that from their united labours better operations would result. They were practically acquainted with the imperfections of the science of which they were masters. He and others, not professional, knew those imperfections, not by the knowledge of the principles of the law, but of the consequences litigation entailed. There was not one noble lord in the committee, which recently sat to consider the peculiar burdens on land who did not leave it with the impression that the present state of the law was one of the greatest grievances to which the proprietors of land were subjected, and that while every other class of the community was interested in improving the law, there was none more especially interested than they in such improvement and simplification. This had been brought before them very strongly in the shape of a question and answer, which he hoped, without disrespect to his lordship in the chair, he might quote. A legal friend of his was asked what he believed was the greatest burden upon land in this country? His answer was, "the Court of Chancery." (Laughter.) He would leave it to any one to determine whether the simplicity of the reply was not as unanswerable as its truth was undeniable. But the committee did not rest on the mere allegation, however undeniable, for they went into special facts and inquiries—they went into the examination of men of the highest learning and experience in their profession, and he believed that all were impressed with the opinion that reform in this matter was required. It appeared in the course of the inquiry that one of the best steps taken in that direction was the system of registration, that the value of landed property and its security had been considerably increased thereby.

Mr. Serjeant D'OYLEY seconded the resolution, which was then put and carried.

The Marquis of CLANRICARDE moved the next resolution, which was as follows:—"That the transfer of real property is greatly impeded by the existing system of conveyancing, and that the market value of land is kept down below its proper value." The noble marquis commenced by saying, that it was a very remarkable fact that the members of the late committee of inquiry, in politics so wide apart, should yet, on the substance of the resolution he had to propose, be so completely agreed. One report had been made by the majority, and another most able one (he trusted he might be permitted to say, without expressing any opinion in other respects) by the minority, but when they came to recommend what should be done to relieve land from its burdens, they arrived on the first point at the same result. Now who had anything to do with real property or with the purchase and sale of it without having had the grievance complained of brought home to him? He alluded, in saying so, not merely to the uncertainty, but the expense and delay produced. There was the greatest difficulty in forcing a sale of land on an unwilling purchaser, and effecting those sales, or raising money on real security, was often almost a ruinous course to those who attempted it. The noble marquis concluded by moving the resolution, which was seconded by Lord BEAUMONT, who, as having presided over the late committee alluded to by previous speakers, confirmed what had been said with regard to its proceedings. It was impossible for any one to have been present in the house during the examinations on real property, without being impressed with the conviction that the country was burdened beyond all others in that respect. It was gratifying to think that there was a great probability that the landowners would be relieved from the burden now that the labours of the society would be devoted to the subject. The noble lord concluded by seconding the motion, which was put and carried.

Mr. BURNES moved the third resolution, which was—"That the proceedings of the Court of Chancery required great and extensive amendment." The learned gentleman said that he wished to speak of the Court of Chancery as an instrument which most usefully affected the property of men, and it was for that very reason he required that its improvement should keep pace with the necessities of the age. The resolution which he had to move rightly discriminated between the principles of the Court and its procedure. The procedure required great vigilance—unceasing watchfulness in striking away the defective law—amending mistakes, and accommodating the amendments to the improved state of society. In speaking of the procedure, it might be expected that he should draw their attention to some instances in which it required great amendment. There was one point which he would not refer to, for it was a subject which had attracted general attention. It regarded the simplification of justice in the Court of Chancery with respect to charities. So amply endowed was this country—so much did it rejoice in the universal diffusion of charity, that such trusts formed a very large portion of the administration of justice in the Court of Chancery. But the expenditure was too heavy, and there existed a great facility on the part of judges in giving way to the desire that the administration should be borne out. He would instance the case of a small charity in Norfolk, by which eighteen cottages were left in trust for the use, rent free, of as many deserving labourers. Some peculiar circumstances led to a suspicion in the neighbourhood of a breach of the trust. Costs were incurred. An order was perhaps too hastily made that those costs should be borne by the property. It was sold in consequence, intended, as it was in the outset, as the means of support for deserving labourers. The solicitor permitted the property to be put up in eighteen separate lots, for which eighteen separate titles were made out; the consequence was, that out of the sale which realized 1,800l. 1,400l. were deducted for expenses incurred. Mr. Bethell, after some observations on this case, referred to the possibility of having in Chancery a proceeding long known with advantage to the common law, and which, if known there also, might realize the means of conveying cheap and esteemed justice to the poor. It would operate, he thought, as a species of reconciliation to the parties, and frequently prevent the necessity of litigation. What he alluded to was that the judges of the court should attend at chambers to receive in some extemporary form a great number of applications. He would take the case of a poor man to whom a legacy of 100l. had been left. He would suppose the testator had given his principal estate to another person, and that such principal estate was not of such a nature as that the legacy of 100l. could be easily got out of it. Now, in such circumstances, was the poor man to obtain his right? He would suppose that he could go to a judge's chambers to discover proof there. The executor would have questions put to him by the judge, and if the means were not provided for immediate payment, at least a satisfactory assurance would be given, and litigation thus be prevented. In this and many such cases the order of the judge at chambers would be sufficient. He would allude again to that subject of complaint that, when the decree was pronounced the suitor, instead of welcoming it as the fruit of his toils, found himself in a worse position than ever, and encumbered with new losses and disappointments. He alluded to those investigations in the Master's office. Sufferings were produced which the Master had no power to control. Now, if there was a power to go from the Master to a judge at chambers, a great deal of time, expenditure, and the hope delayed, which maketh the heart sick, might be avoided. During the last twenty years, great things had been done in ameliorating the law. When Lord Lyndhurst first received the seals, the work began, and it had continued while his lordship in the chair was in office, and since. But of necessity the amendments of the law must be slow, and, therefore, the subject invited suggestions from all quarters. As for the chancellors, the legislature had armed them with a statute, giving them large powers, and, therefore, it became the society to deliberate how these might best be exercised for its purposes.

Mr. SPENCER seconded the motion, and

The CHAIRMAN, in putting it, complimented Mr. Bethell on his valuable suggestion, and expressed his entire approbation of it. The judges of the Chancery Court were now five in number, two more than he had thought requisite, and they might be most usefully employed in affording at chambers a common ground where suitors themselves might meet without professional advisers.

The resolution having been carried,

Mr. Commissioner FANE moved the next resolution, which was—"That the law of debtor and creditor is causing great dissatisfaction in the trading and other branches of the community, inasmuch as it is neither sufficiently considerate towards the honest debtor, nor sufficiently stringent towards the dishonest debtor." The learned commissioner commenced by referring to the acknowledgment made by the noble lord in the chair, that he thought the time had come for considering the question of arrest on mesne process, with a view to the interests of the creditor. He then passed to the statement in the resolution, that the law was not sufficiently considerate towards the honest debtor. He had been engaged in the administration of the law of debtor and creditor, and though the result had been to convince him that for one honest there were 1,000 dishonest debtors, still it was impossible to deny that occasionally there does turn up a case of honesty on the part of a debtor, and in many cases an impression had been created on his mind that the honest debtor did not meet with the consideration due to his misfortunes. It appeared to him that this was so, because the body of creditors, or the majority of them, had not power to bind the minority. Why should it be so? Why should one resisting creditor have the power to force the whole affair into bankruptcy? It was quite true that an honest man did not become dishonest because he had been bankrupt, but why should he be subjected to so cruel an imputation as that name implied? He entirely concurred in what had fallen from the noble chairman that the law was not sufficiently stringent towards the dishonest debtor.

Mr. J. SKEWART seconded the motion, which was put and carried, after having been supported by a gentleman who spoke in strong terms on the leniency of the law towards dishonest debtors, and on the liberality with which creditors were generally disposed to act.

The Duke of RICHMOND moved the next resolution, which was, "That great as are the amendments recently effected in the criminal law, much yet remains to be done both as to punishment and procedure, more especially as regards the system of secondary punishments and the treatment of juvenile offenders, and the due preparation of the criminal code and digest." The Noble Duke said that though he might be charged with presumption in proposing such a resolution, still he was induced to do so by his anxiety to promote the interests of the society, and assist in the amendment of the law of the land. If they who had property were anxious to improve the civil law of the country, must they not also be so to improve the criminal law? Presiding, as he often did, at the Quarter Sessions, he had often brought under his notice cases of hardship caused by the law, which were a disgrace to its efficiency. Sitting at a Court of Quarter Sessions, presided over by Serjeant D'Oyley, he had seen children of ten, eleven, and twelve years of age, brought up to be tried for felony, and, if convicted, having the brand of felon imprinted on their brows. Was it right that a child of ten or twelve years old, who hardly knew right from wrong, should be brought before the grand jury, tried by the verdict of twelve men, and, if it stole to the amount of an egg, branded as a felon, and when that is so it is very difficult ever after to make him follow an honest course of life? He would give no opinion how the existing codes of our admiral law ought to be remedied, but he ventured to tell them that they could not better perform their duties to themselves and their country than by getting rid of those evils which were so rapidly increasing.

The Marquis of NORMANBY, in seconding the resolution, expressed his cordial interest in the success of the society, and regretted that circumstances having removed him from the country at the time when he first became a member, he was consequently less conversant than he wished to be with the details of its proceedings.

Lord RADNOR shortly moved, and Mr. EWART seconded, the sixth resolution, which was agreed to. It was as follows:—"That the existing system of framing public Acts of Parliament leads to a mode of drawing them deficient in closeness and uniformity of language, and that it is desirable that some measures should be adopted to secure these manifest advantages to the Houses of Parliament, the courts of justice, and the public at large."

The last resolution, proposed by Mr. JOSEPH HUME, seconded by Mr. DUCKWORTH, and agreed to by the meeting, was—"That in an especial manner some improvement in the course of legislative procedure be required for transacting the private and local business of the country in Parliament in a manner satisfactory to all parties, and consistently with the undoubted privileges of Parliament."

After a vote of thanks to Lord Brougham for his conduct in the chair, the meeting broke up.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CONVEYANCING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Your extracts from the "Report of the Lords Committee on the Burdens on Land," in your journal of this week, affords an opportunity of saying somewhat on the above subject.

I had all along been inclined to think that the threatened changes in the system of Conveyancing were levied at business which was of a very heavy description; one would be led to this opinion by the extraordinary assertions as to the charges; such, for instance, as those made by Lord Campbell, when he said, that "the costs of a Conveyance frequently equalled that of the freehold itself," when he spoke of the "enormous" expenses attendant on the conveyance of property; when he said that the parcels were enumerated with the most "inconceivable" verbosity; that the release contained such a "vast" number of covenants that sometimes the parchment used for it were sufficient in extent of surface to cover the whole of the property conveyed; expressions, by the bye, which carry their own refutation on the face of them.

By the extract from the report, however, it would appear that it is by no means at very large business exclusively that the blow is aimed: under the heads both of "inequality of stamp duties," and "costs of Conveyancing," the evidence cited commences at transactions of the value of 50*l.*, and it is on this evidence I would offer some remarks. As to the inequality of the operation of the Stamp Laws, as I happen to have already spent much time, and some money, in endeavoring to call attention to that iniquity, I would only here ask the question, is the dip into the pocket of the public, by means of stamp charges, the fault of the lawyers?

But with regard to the cost of Conveyancing, I do not know where Mr. Baxter gets the premises, from which he draws the conclusions embodied in his evidence; his account astonishes me: but perhaps the profession in some parts of the country is threefold more painful than it is in this neighbourhood. I need not repeat his evidence, but refer your readers to it in page 213 of the current volume of the L. T., and in answer, would crave attention to Mr. Rankin's letter in page 546, volume 5 of the L. T., to one of mine in page 63, volume 1 of the L. T., and to the following observations:—

Firstly. That abomination, the lease for a year stamp, is now generally disused, not only in small transactions, but in large ones; but pray to whom is the public indebted for the saving? Is it not to the very men against whom these reiterated accusations of high charges are made? Clearly, noble lords themselves have done nought to save the public the expense: as is well known, they met in solemn conclave, to deprive solicitors of the il. for the preparation of the lease for a year; but at the same time declared that 1*l.* 1*s.* for the stamp duty should still be paid.

Secondly. There is no doubt that, notwithstanding the continued vilification of the members of the profession, constant and thoughtful effort, attended with considerable responsibility, has for a long time past been made to shorten Conveyances: and I believe that commonly, at all events among what may be called modern practitioners, they are as short as is consistent with safety; sometimes perhaps shorter than this.

Thirdly. In addition to what has been said about charges in the before-mentioned two letters, I would add, that I consider the following amounts to be about what in this neighbourhood is received for the respective transactions mentioned. A mortgage for 50*l.* would cost in stamps and law expenses 4*l.*; a mortgage for 100*l.* or even 150*l.*, 6*l.*; a mortgage for 400*l.*, 14*l.*; a mortgage for 1,500*l.*, 23*l.*: and so on in proportion, being respectively 8*l.*, 6*l.* 4*l.*, 3*l.* and 1*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* per cent., instead of respectively 30*l.*, 20*l.*, 7*l.* and 3*l.* per cent.; this of course does not include the fees for any extraordinary professional labour; but as for ordinary fees, such as "instructions," and "attendants," which would be allowed on taxation, I have no hesitation in saying, that in the majority of cases they are not charged; and I do not see how, in making a general estimate, charges for extraordinary professional labour can be included, as they must vary in every given case, where such labour is required; by which I mean Mr. Baxter cannot have included them in his evidence; should, however, this gentleman have included unusual charges, then the case is not fairly stated.

In constructing any new scale of conveyancing fees, I would most strongly advocate the adoption of the ad valorem principle; it will be found in the main the soundest.

I should like to add more to deprecate the continual, and vexatious, it would almost seem "spiteful" efforts made by the legislature to reduce what it appears, very erroneously, to suppose to be the large gains of the legal profession, but fear to make my letter longer, and therefore conclude, with a hope that this brushing of the subject will call forth abler advocates of the interests of the attorneys.

Yours, &c.

A. CHAMBERLAIN.

Portsea, June 10th, 1846.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

AN "OLD SUBSCRIBER" submits the following on the subject of Conveyancing:—

I think your advocacy of the rights of the legal profession, of which I am a member, entitles you to our thanks and hearty support. The impending change in conveyancing practice will seriously affect country practitioners, who will, by the proposed simplifying of the forms, be doubly injured, I fear, by every hedge lawyer becoming a conveyancer. Do you not think, therefore, that the attention of the profession should be directed to secure some provision being made in the bill now in progress through Parliament, forbidding under a heavy penalty any person drawing deeds who is not a certificated conveyancer or attorney? and I do not think that it would be carrying the measure too far to enact that no deed should be valid unless it be drawn by such a certificated conveyancer or attorney in actual practice. At first sight this may savour of selfishness, but I think it would be found a valuable protection to the public against their inattention in employing unqualified persons, by requiring every deed to be indorsed with the name of the attorney who prepared it, and who would be held responsible for its accuracy. This guarantee to the public would be lost if every unemployed lawyer's clerk is to be at liberty to draw deeds. This is the most valuable part of the country attorney's practice, and if he is not to be thus protected, I do not know why he should continue to pay the annual certificate duty, nor is there much reason for the payment of so large a duty on articles of clerkship or for the incurring of so much expense in the education of a clerk.

Requesting the insertion of this in your next, and your consideration of the subject.

"P. R. A." thus writes on the Certificate Duty:—

I am glad to find from the notice you took of my letter as to the certificate duty, that my observations have been anticipated. I am well aware that your valuable journal has done quite enough now, and heretofore, in the way of anticipation, but will anything be done in Parliament? You seem to think that the Bill to shorten conveyances will afford an opportunity of mentioning the subject. Has the profession any friend in either house of Parliament to do this? Whatever may become of this Bill, the certificate duty ought not to be paid next November. There is quite enough to justify the profession in calling for the repeal of that tax, and, in my opinion, for compensation alms. They have paid money to the country on the faith of receiving certain profits, now taken away. I heard of a deputation of attorneys who waited on the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and immediately addressed a letter to that honourable personage, complaining of the tax, and pointing out if the money raised by it were required at all, that it might easily be obtained in the way I mentioned to you, viz. by 1*s.* payments on different stages of suits, &c. and so the unequal nature of the oppression at any rate be got rid of, and the sacrifice not be felt by parties struggling for a livelihood, but I took care at the same time to deny the justice of any tax of the kind. I do hope this session will not pass away without our being relieved.

ERRATA.—The reader is requested to correct the following errors in the last number of the LAW TIMES:—In the argument in Henry v. Goldney, page 211, lines 6 and 15, for "the contract of parties," and "the contracting parties," line 49, for "joint stock proprietors," read "joint tort-owners." In Stadman v. Hockley, page 211, for "the 5th Act of Parliament," read "the 5th sort of bailment."

NOTICE.

The publisher hastens to explain a mistake occasioned last week through a change of address. Inquiry was made as to the whereabouts of "Mr. E. Bretherton, Old Swan, near Liverpool," to whom the LAW TIMES had been sent, and by whom none of the many applications had been answered. It seems, however, that this gentleman is the same person with Mr. E. Bretherton in the Law List named as practising at Liverpool. In consequence of this double address he appears twice in the publisher's books, in place as of Liverpool, in the other as of Old Swan, where the papers were sent, and where repeated applications have been made by letter without any reply, and in consequence of which it was that the inquiry was made, it being an invariable rule at this office never to adopt any stringent proceeding until patience is exhausted by the neglect or refusal of the parties indebted to answer applications, and that patience is not exhausted till nine or ten letters have failed to elicit a reply. Mr. Bretherton explains that, being addressed, at the Old Swan, he did not receive them, and this, coupled with the dubious character of the address, led to the inquiry. We are happy, however, to state, that the accounts charged to Mr. E. Bretherton, Liverpool, are perfectly satisfactory. It was that charged to Mr. E. Bretherton, "Old Swan, near Liverpool," which, for the reason above stated, necessitated information. No complaint was intended to be preferred against Mr. Bretherton, of Liverpool.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The volumes of the LAW TIMES, neatly, strongly, and uniformly bound, for 5s. 6d. each, with the name and address of the owner on the cover, 1s. extra, if sent to the office. If the numbers for binding be transmitted by the post, they must be tied in a parcel open at the ends, and contain some distinguishing mark by which it may be recognised, of which the publisher should be advised by letter and directed how he shall return the bound volume. Advantage may be taken of the same parcel to enclose other books for binding.

NOTICE.

The LAW DIGEST is now completed. Being stamped, it may be sent by post, or may be had, sewn in a wrapper, price 5s. 6d.

NOTICE.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JUNE 13, 1846.

SOCIETY FOR THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

The first public meeting of this Society was held on Saturday last, and the best report of the proceedings that we could find appears in its proper place.

It has been remarked as a curious fact, that the noble, and honourable, and learned personages who were the speakers on the occasion, were either successful lawyers, who had profited largely by the abuses they were now eager to reform, or legislators who have the power to accomplish the object, without calling in the aid of a society.

To the first of these objections it is difficult to suggest a satisfactory answer. "We must be permitted," says The Times, "to doubt the bound fides with which those who have found the law a very good thing for themselves, now come forward to pronounce it a very bad thing for all who come after them. We cannot believe them guilty of the base ingratitude of wishing to kick down the ladder by which they have been raised, or of the meanness of desiring that none shall derive any benefit hereafter from a system by which they have so largely profited. We may be told that conscience will operate very strongly on those who have practised evil all their lives; but, surely, if this had anything to do with the present movement of the old lawyers against the abuses of their Profession, they would feel that the disgorge of their gains would be necessary to shew the heartiness of their penitence."

Now, although these satirical remarks savour not a little of the spirit of hostility to the lawyers by which The Times has been always actuated, they are certainly not altogether without justification. It is strange that those who have made their fortunes by the abuses they denounce should be so energetic in speaking ill of the bridge they had passed in safety. It looks very much like a death-bed repentance; or, rather, like the proverbial zeal of an antiquated rower for the suppression of the pleasant vices in which he has no longer the power to indulge. The Times proceeds in the same strain:—

Perhaps the occasional sums that find their way to the Exchequer in the shape of conscience-money may be proofs of so many gentle qualms having been experienced by Chancery lawyers, who feel that by their gains the public has been victimised. Still those wretched and very occasional dribblets are not sufficient evidence that the society for amending the law has among its legal members those who are actuated by an earnest wish to make all the atonement possible to the community for having lived and thrived on one of the worst of the incubi to which it is subjected. When we find the state of the law coolly denounced at a public meeting by an ex-chancellor and a practising Queen's counsel—one having made, and the other still making, a splendid income by the law as it is—we are reminded of the anecdotes we read in the papers the other day of two brothers on a temperance mission, one acting as lecturer and the other being always drunk in order to serve as a frightful example. Lord Brougham is the lecturer in this case; and Mr. Bethell, Q.C., who is still, not merely upping, but imbibing very large draughts at the Chancery bar—who, in fact, if success can intoxicate, has had enough to inebriate the strongest head—Mr. Bethell comes, we presume, to a meeting for denouncing the shameful expenses of law in the somewhat humiliating character of "a frightful example."

The Times has written with intent to ridicule the idea of law-reforming lawyers, and not as advancing a serious argument, and, therefore, a very strict adherence to fact cannot be expected. But, even for the sake of fun, it is not justifiable to promulgate an untruth. The Times insinuates that the Society is composed entirely of old lawyers, whose fortunes are already secured. But the fact is far otherwise. A great majority of the members are young men, and it must be admitted that they are the most intelligent and energetic of both branches of the Profession. The older members alone were, as a matter of courtesy, and in pursuance of custom, put forward at the public meeting, but they are certainly backed by a considerable body of those who have their fortunes yet to make, and who, if law reform be really injurious to the interests of the lawyers, must be more public-spirited than any class-men the world has yet seen.

But the truth is, the opinion of the most intelligent members of the Bar, and among the most thoughtful of the attorneys, is, that real Law Reform,—as suggested by practical men and not the mere theories of the study—will not prove injurious to the interests of the Profession, in either of its branches; that the diminished costliness of legal proceedings will materially increase the quantity of law, and that more clients, more suits, and more conveyances, will more than compensate the abbreviation of forms or the reduction of fees. It is for this reason that the Law Amendment Society counts among its members so many men whose fortunes are yet to be made.

The Times has fallen into another error—or, rather, has put forward another objection ad captandam—but which will not bear a moment's investigation. It is due to the lawyers, and the legislators who have joined them in their enterprise, to dispose of it at once. The Times says:—

We have on former occasions remarked on the prevailing mania for having a society to do—or rather to talk about—the duties that should be performed by others. This association for the amendment of the law, consisting as it does almost entirely of legislators, is an illustration of the principle we complain of being pushed to the very extreme of absurdity. If the law requires amendment—and we are quite willing to admit that there is still great need of law reform—why do the legislators who were present at the meeting on Saturday neglect their duty in the Houses of which they are members by going merely to talk to No. 21, Regent-street? Are we to be taught that pressure from without is so necessary to stir the Legislature, that if the motive power is not furnished by the public, the members of Parliament will become agitators against themselves, and form themselves into a society to demand from themselves what themselves alone are able to grant in their legislative capacity? The absurdity of this position is self-evident, but it is exactly the position in which members of Parliament place themselves when they form societies out of doors for objects which within the walls of their respective Houses they have the power, and it is their duty, to advance.

This clever bit of ridicule proceeds on the assumption that a majority of our legislators are members of the Society, and therefore have the power to accomplish their design without the aid of a society. But they are, in fact, only a small proportion of either the Lords or the Commons. They could not carry a single measure of Law Reform of their own strength; and until the entire system of public business be altered, until the Legislature shall so represent public opinion that no expression of it out of doors shall be necessary, there can be no more impropriety in, nor will there be the less necessity for, the formation of societies to advance improvements in the law, than for the furtherance of any other subject of public interest.

But there is another answer to the objection of The Times. The legislators join the lawyers in this Society for the purpose of mutual assistance. Alone, the unpractised legislator could do little to advance Law Reform, whatever his desire; he must have the aid of the practical lawyer to mature the plan, and put it into shape, and to instruct him in the facts and reasons by which it is to be supported. By their union in the same society this important object is secured in the most effectual manner, and the public and the Profession are thus saved from the infliction of that most grievous nuisance—changes of the law proposed by theorists unskilled in the practical working of the complicated machine they rashly undertake to regulate.

RAILWAY LIABILITIES.

The particular attention of the reader is directed to the case of Law v. Wilson, tried on Tuesday and Wednesday last in the Exchequer, by Mr. Baron PARKE, whose name is a guarantee that any opinion expressed upon a trial at which he has presided is entitled to the respect and confidence of the Profession, and will ultimately be found to be the correct law on the subject under discussion. At this moment, when so much litigation is pending and threatened, involving a similar question, the deliberate expression of such an opinion will doubtless prevent many useless and costly contests, and, therefore, we hasten to submit it to the readers of the LAW TIMES.

Many points were decided in this case, some of them growing out of its peculiar circumstances; but those to which we desire to attract the special notice of the Profession are the following, one of which is new, although the same state of facts must have existed in most of the cases yet tried; and the other, though not new, is important as a decided and unequivocal opinion upon a point hitherto held in comsiderable doubt, and upon which the Profession have differed in their views, although anxious that the law of the case should be made to coincide with its justice.

The first point decided, so far as one distinguished judge can decide it, is that where a railway project has both a managing committee and a provisional committee, and the members of the latter take no part in the management, the former alone are responsible for the debts they incur, unless it can be shewn that by joining the provisional committee the defendant intended to make himself responsible for all the acts of the managing committee.

So entirely is this consistent with common justice, that the uninitiated may be surprised that it should have ever been questionable at common law. But the fallacy has originated in a prevalent supposition that the committees of railway projects are partners, and that thus one is responsible for the acts of the others. But they are, in fact, merely joint contractors, like the joint and several makers of a promissory note, and the right of the creditor to sue depends upon the express or implied terms of the credit given. Where there is a managing committee, and the creditor deals with them, it is but a reasonable implication that his credit was given to them, and not to the members of the provisional committee, with whom he had no dealings, and to whom, therefore, it cannot be supposed that he looked for payment when he accepted the offer.

The other point is the broad general proposition, which we state almost in the very words of Mr. Baron PARKE, that if a man merely allows his name to be inserted in the list of a provisional committee, he does not thereby make himself responsible for every act or every liability of a managing committee, unless it be proved that he had acted in the conduct of the concern.

This, too, is in accordance with common sense and justice, although some recent cases, growing out of the railway speculations, appeared to have sanctioned a contrary opinion, and to have held that a mere consent to be placed on the provisional committee, although no part had been actually taken in the business, was sufficient to make the party liable for its acts.

Whether Mr. Baron PARKE intended that his expressions should be taken in the broad sense in which they are reported, or whether he meant only to reiterate the opinion already noticed as to the non-liability of the provisional committee where there is a managing committee, may, we think, reasonably be questioned. He was, perhaps, alluding to the particular case when he laid down the proposition. But in its practical results this will be very unimportant. There are very few, if any, of the railways that had not a managing as well as a provisional committee, and therefore there is scarcely one in which an action could be supported against a member of the provisional committee for debts incurred by the managing committee.

A PRACTICAL COMMENTARY

ON

THE LAW OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REAL PROPERTY.

By WILLIAM HUGHES, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

II. PRACTICAL DIRECTIONS FOR PREPARING THE ABSTRACT.

1. Heading of the abstract.
2. Root or origin of the title.
3. When a double abstract will be necessary.
4. How the various documents should be set out.
5. Deeds how to be abstracted.
6. Attendant terms.
7. Copyhold assurances.
8. Wills.
9. Fines and recoveries.
10. Commission or fiat in bankruptcy.
11. Insolvency.
12. Acts of Parliament.
13. Judgments.
14. Decrees.
15. Descents.
16. Administration.
17. Matters of fact.
18. Cancellation, alteration, or erasure of documents.

1. Heading of the abstract.

The abstract usually commences with a heading setting out the name of the owner; the nature and tenure of the property, and the estate or interest he takes in it; as also the name and local description of the premises. When the description of the parcels is short, it is sometimes fully set out in this place, and merely referred to in abstracting the subsequent documents; but the more frequent practice is to set out the parcels verbatim from the first abstracted deed, and to refer to them shortly in those subsequently abstracted.

2. Root or origin of the title.

In framing an abstract the title should be carried back to some document not less than sixty years old, that time having, for many years, been considered as the established period from which a purchaser is entitled to require his title to commence. Some able writers have, indeed, lately contended that the recent Statute of Limitations (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27,) has shortened this period, and that, consequently, it would be a convenient rule to take a middle course, and to treat fifty years as a sufficient time to trace back a title in ordinary cases. There is nothing, however, in the statute to warrant the introduction of any rule of this kind; for though it renders the security of sixty years better than it was before, because the time within which suits may be instituted is thereby shortened; still another ground of the rule, viz. the duration of human life, is not affected by it; and the objection to titles on the ground that the conveying parties might have been mere tenants for life, or that there may be equitable rights, as between trustees and cestuis que trust still exists; although, to be sure, in the last-mentioned instance, the statute will begin to run from the time a conveyance is made to a purchaser (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 25). Whatever, therefore, might have been the intention of the legislature in passing this Statute of Limitations (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), it has not led to the result of shortening the period from which titles were to be deduced (Cooper v. Emery, 1 Phill. 388; Hodgkin v. Cooper, Rolls, Jan. 28, 1846; 6 Law T. 451). And even a sixty years' title may be insufficient unless its origin can be shewn. It also occasionally becomes necessary to carry back the title beyond that period; as, for example, where a deed, though dated more than sixty years since, operates as an execution of a power contained in some previous deed or will, in which case the instrument creating the power should be abstracted; and the like doctrine holds with respect to a settlement made in pursuance of marriage articles, where the articles themselves must necessarily be inspected in order to satisfy the purchaser that the settlement was made in accordance with them (1 Prest. Abs. 70). But where a necessary has been suffered more than sixty years ago, it will be no objection to the title that the deed or will by which the entail was created cannot be produced. And generally, where an abstract commences with a conveyance to a purchaser, and a possession of sixty years can be shewn under it, it will be considered as sufficient evidence that the party making such conveyance had a lawful right to do so (1 Prest. Abs. 116). As a general rule, therefore, it will be sufficient to commence an abstract with some purchase-deed, settlement, or will at any date at or beyond sixty years, without incumbering the abstract with any of the previous documents. Mr. Preston, with his usual accuracy and discernment, remarks, that a deed of conveyance to the person who was the first purchaser affords the strongest presumption that the title was considered good at that time, and that the person who made it was the absolute owner in fee-simple; but that when a title cannot be taken up by a deed of this kind, the next best instrument for that purpose is a will, or some settlement made by a person acting as the absolute owner of the fee-simple. "This document," the same learned writer observes, "with possession consistent with the evidence of title, furnishes the like presumption of a good title; and the presumption is greatly strengthened if there has been a frequent change of ownership without any adverse claim."

Pedigree should accompany abstract, when.—As often as a title depends on a descent, a pedigree, authenticated by such evidence as would be sufficient to support the title in case of an adverse claim, should accompany the abstract. (1 Prest. Abs. 43.)

As to advowsons.—In the case of advowsons, it was always considered necessary to trace back the title farther than in other kinds of real property. The reason of this was, that the title of an advowson might not have been in possession, nor an opportunity occurred of trying the title within the sixty years. Thus, according to the authority of Sir E. Coke, there was a person of one of his churches who had been incumbent there upwards of fifty years. Sir William Blackstone also mentions (3 Blac. Com. 251) that the last two incumbents of Chelmsford cum Farnborough continued one hundred and one years; so that, as the learned commentator proceeds to remark, had the last of these incumbents been the clerk of an usurper, or had been presented by lapse, it would have been necessary and unavoidable to the patron, in case of a dispute, to have recurred back above a century, in order to shew a clear title and seisin by presentment, and admission of the prior incumbent. He then adds, that as the title of advowsons is rendered more precarious than that of any other hereditament, it might not perhaps be amiss if a limitation were compounded of a length of time and number of avoidances together; as, for instance, if no seisin were admitted or alleged in any writs of patronage after sixty years, and three avoidances were past. These wise suggestions, after a lapse of many years, and having been read in the interim by every lawyer in the land, were at length attended to, and the object of them carried into effect by the late Statute of Limitations (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27), by the 30th section of which it is enacted that no advowson shall be recovered but within three incumencies adverse to the right of presentation, or sixty years. By the section next immediately following (sec. 31), it is, however, provided that, although incumencies by reason of lapse will be adverse presentations within the meaning of the period, yet that such incumencies as arise from the promotion of the prior incumbent to a bishopric are not to be so considered; and one hundred years' adverse possession is the extreme limit now allowed under that statute for the recovery of an advowson. The title, therefore, to an advowson should now be carried back to a period of not less than one hundred years; to which title a list of presentations should be annexed, to shew that acts of ownership have been duly exercised in conformity with such right of presentation.

Tithes.—Notwithstanding the original right to tithes must be founded on a grant from the Crown at the dissolution of the monasteries, yet no one ever now thinks of calling for a title commencing and regularly deduced from so ancient a time as this; a clear sixty years' title being all a purchaser of this kind of property is entitled to require, or can compel a vendor to give.

Documents should be abstracted according to priority of their respective dates.—The various documents by which the title is to be supported should be inserted in the abstract according to the order of their respective dates, unless the property has come through different channels; in which case the course of each separate portion must be traced separately until the ownership of the whole of them unites in the same party. As suppose for instance three estates, A, B, and C, all held under different titles, have been purchased by D, then the title of each of these estates must be traced separately down to the conveyance of the whole of them to D, after which they will all three become consolidated in one common title, and from that period they will all be traced together as long as the entire property continues to flow on in the same course. To accomplish this, all the documents "As to A," must be abstracted down to D's purchase-deed. Next the documents "As to B," and then the documents "As to C," down to the conveyance to D; which being done, then insert a heading, "As to all said premises," commencing with the first conveyance, or other disposition from D to any other party. The like observations are also applicable where an estate in joint tenancy or coparcenary has been severed, until the whole estates unite again in one common title.

3. When a double abstract will be necessary.

In some instances an abstract relating only to the property intended to be conveyed, will not alone suffice; as where lands have been taken in exchange (4 Rep. 121; 1 Prest. Abs. 87), or allotted under inclosure acts, in both of which instances an abstract must not only be furnished of documents of title relating to the estate sold or allotted, but of those also of the estates given in exchange, or of the original estates in respect of which the lands were allotted. The reason why a double title is required in the first instance, is, because the foundation of an exchange was an implied warranty, which engendered the right of entry in case of eviction (Shep. Touch. 290; Finch L. 27; Shep. Fract. Couns. 2). In the second instance, because the allotted lands became liable to the uses of the estates in respect of which they were allotted. The statute of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 30, s. 24, 25, has, however, made some important alterations in the law in the latter case; as that statute, by expressly changing the uses, takes away any right of eviction after an exchange made of lands in common fields under the powers of that Act; and by a still more recent enactment (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106), deeds of exchange have no longer the effect of creating any warranty, or right of re-entry, or implied covenant by implication. But this statute is only prospective, and will not affect assurances made previously. As to these, therefore, a double abstract will still be necessary.

Copyholds.—Another instance in which an additional abstract will be required, is in the case of an enfranchised copyhold estate, when the title of the lord to the freehold must be shewn, in addition to that of the copyholder, previously to his enfranchisement. (1 Prest. Abs.)

Leasehold.—In the case of leaseholds, also, unless there is some express agreement or stipulation to the contrary, the vendor must be prepared to produce his lessor's title, otherwise he cannot compel the purchaser to complete the contract. (Rosewell v. Vaughan, Cro. Jac. 196; Lymey v. Selby, 2 Lord Raym. 218; Keach v. Hall, Doug. 21; Waring v. Macreth, 11 Ves. 343; Fidler v. Hooker, 2 Mer. 424; Purvis v. Rayner, 9 Pri. 488; Souter v. Drake, 5 B. & A. 992.) It may be proper also to remark, that the purchaser of leaseholds is equally entitled to a clear sixty years' title as if he were a purchaser of the fee-simple itself. (Hodgkinson v. Cooper, 6 Law T. 451.) The title, also, should be regularly deduced from the original lease by means of the intermediate assignments, though, if these cannot be produced, their loss may, in some instances, be supplied by the recitals. (Doe v. Maple, 3 Bing. N.C. 832.)

Where the property contracted for is of various tenures.—When the property consists of lands of different tenures, as where some are freehold and others leasehold, or of copyhold or customary tenure, then the purchaser should be furnished with a separate abstract of each distinct species of property.

Adwoson.—In the case of an adwoson, the purchaser will be entitled to a statement of the presentations, and by whom made; also the names of the clerks presented during the period of time comprised in the abstract, which, as I have already stated, ought to extend over a period of one hundred years.

HOW TO INVEST CAPITAL.

An useful little book by Mr. G. M. Bell, entitled A Guide to the Investment of Capital, has just been published. Under the various heads of houses, land, annuities, joint-stock banks, railways, shipping, insurance companies, mines, bills of exchange, bonds, and mortgages, and foreign funds, is comprised a short description of all the means of investment which are offered to capitalists. The hints, which form part of the "general summary" which concludes the work, we extract, as they give a good classification of the various kinds of investment, made to suit the various kinds of parties investing:—

"1. Those who desire to obtain the highest rate of interest without much risk ought to select the best of the public companies, such as banks, insurance companies, old railway companies, and other established undertakings of high character.

"2. Those who would prefer a high rate of interest, and are willing to run the risk that securities yielding high rates generally involve, ought to invest in mines, in ships, and in new railway companies; they may stake their money upon scrip, and upon new shares where there is a prospect of their being run up to a high premium.

"3. Those who are not in a position to invest their money for any lengthened period, but may require to call it up suddenly, or within a short time, should invest in the funds, or deposit it with a bank that allows interest.

"4. Those who desire to obtain a steady and uniform rate of interest, and to be secure of their capital in a few years, may invest in railway bonds. In doing this they will consult their own advantage in selecting the bonds of such lines of railway as are well managed, and possess a good and improving traffic.

"5. Those who are willing to be content with a low rate of interest, and to be entirely secure from risk, ought to invest in Exchequer Bills, India Bonds, or landed property.

"6. It can scarcely be deemed advisable to make permanent investments to a large amount, at periods when there is any commercial or political excitement in the country. When the position of commercial and political affairs is unsettled, when the public mind is agitated with regard to passing events, the value of securities of every description is liable to be more or less affected. The anticipation as well as the realization of change will often produce great variations in the prices of the funds and other public securities. The late railway excitement had the effect of running up prices to a most unreasonable extent. The depression that followed, while it was in some measure only the natural result of an inflated and unsound system, strongly exhibited the danger of embarking in new enterprises, involving responsibilities comparatively unknown. Nor has the injurious effect of that excitement been yet experienced in all its deformity. Many persons are under the impression that the prices of railway shares must rally, and a strong feeling that this will soon be witnessed is extensively prevalent. There is every probability, however, that such parties will find that they have been under a strong delusion. The value of the shares in good lines already in operation, or in course of construction, may improve, and perhaps in some cases considerably; but it will only be after the rubbish lines have been swept out, and after 'speculations for a wind up' have begun to cease.

"Persons who have money in hand ought not, at such periods, to invest it hastily in doubtful securities, or in such as are likely to be affected by the circumstances to which we have alluded. They ought to keep it at command, so as to be able to take advantage of a fall in those securities which present a favourable opportunity of investing to some profit. It will be found to be the general practice of experienced capitalists to lend their money only upon the best securities, and for the shortest possible periods, where there is any cause of disquietude in commercial or political affairs, or in the circumstances of the country.

"7. Persons engaged in trade, who have not more capital than is necessary to conduct their trade—who have, in fact, no surplus money at their disposal—ought to be cautious of entering into money speculations of any kind—of making investments in railways, or any other schemes or securities of a doubtful or hazardous description. The Gazette has recently been filled with the names of tradesmen who were doing well, and might have continued to do well by attending to their own proper business, but who, from a mistaken sense of their position, by embarking in thoughtless speculation, have involved their families and themselves in misery and ruin. Tradesmen without spare capital ought never to embark in such schemes. Those parties only can be justified in doing so who can afford to lose money, and are prepared to meet the engagements for which they become liable."

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

May 7, and June 6.

BROWN v. BAMFORD.

Separate property—Clause against anticipation—Feme covert—Alienation—Form of limitation of separate estate—Negative words not necessary—Intention—Power of appointment and estate.

The form commonly used by conveyancers for limiting property to the separate use of a married woman, with the clause against anticipation of the income, is sufficient, as it plainly indicates the intention to prevent the married woman from charging the property and anticipating her income, without the insertion of express negative words.

The decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England in this case (11 Simons, 127), and subsequently affirmed by the Lord Chancellor, overruled.

The intention of the settlor to give a married woman a life interest in the property without the power of anticipating the income, operates and controls the whole clause.

John Beckett, by his will, dated the 21st of September, 1832, gave certain leasehold houses and stock in the funds to trustees, upon trust from time to time, during the natural life of his daughter, Sophia Bamford, or until she should be duly declared a bankrupt, or take the benefit of any Act passed, or to be passed, for the relief of insolvent debtors, to pay the clear rents, interest, dividends, and proceeds of such leasehold hereditaments, stocks, funds, and securities, unto such person or persons, for such intents and purposes, and in such manner as Sophia Bamford, by any writing or writings under her hand, when and as the same should become due, but not by way of assignment, charge, or other anticipation thereof, should, notwithstanding her then present or any future coverture, direct or appoint; and in default of any such direction or appointment, or as far as the same, if incomplete, should not extend, into her proper hands, for her sole and separate use, independent of the debts, control, or interference of her then present or any future husband; for which purpose the testator directed that the receipts, in writing, under the hand of his daughter, Sophia Bamford, should, notwithstanding any such covertures as aforesaid, be good and sufficient discharges for the last-mentioned rents, interests, dividends, and proceeds, or so much thereof as should in such receipts respectively be expressed to have been received; and from and after the decease of his daughter, Sophia Bamford, or such her bankruptcy or insolvency as aforesaid, which should first happen, then in trust for all and every or such one or more of her children as therein mentioned. After the testator's death, Sophia Bamford, in consideration of the Sunderland Joint Stock Banking Company withdrawing a writ under which certain goods of Benjamin Parker, her son-in-law, had been taken in execution for a debt due from him to the company, signed a paper writing, by which she agreed to guarantee the payment of the debt to the company. In December 1840, Parker became bankrupt; and no moneys having been paid in reduction of the debt since the guarantee was given, the bill was filed by one of the public officers of the company against Sophia Bamford and John Bamford, her husband, and the assignee of Parker's estate, and the trustees of the will; which, after stating that Sophia Bamford had refused to pay the debt which she had so guaranteed, alleged that John and Sophia Bamford, and the trustees, pretended that Sophia Bamford was by the will restrained from charging her shares and interests in the dividends, rents, issues, and profits of the trust property, or rendering the same liable for any claim on her, by way of anticipation; whereas the plaintiff charged that, according to the true construction of the will, Sophia Bamford had both a restricted power of appointment and the general uncontrolled dominion over the income so bequeathed to her for life as aforesaid; and that by the agreement signed by her as before mentioned, she had rendered all the property which she was entitled to or interested in under the will, liable to the payment of the debt. The bill prayed for a declaration that the income which Sophia Bamford was entitled to, under the will, for her separate use, was liable, to the extent of her right in or to the same, to make good and pay the debt to the company.

To this bill Bamford and wife, and the trustees of the will, demurred for want of equity, and on argument before the Vice-Chancellor of England, his Honour overruled the demurrer, upon the ground that the words upon which the question arose were the same in substance as the words in Barrymore v. Ellis (8 Sim. 1). In giving judgment, the Vice-Chancellor observed, that he admitted the common form to be in the terms stated, but it always appeared to him to be defective. That when he was in the habit of drawing conveyances, and wished to settle on a lady property over which she was to have no power of anticipation, he always used to introduce an express proviso, that no receipt should be a discharge to the trustees, except a receipt given by the lady for rents or dividends then actually become due. That in this case there were no negative words in the receipt clause, and therefore there was nothing to restrict the power which Mrs. Bamford had, to dispose of or charge the rents and dividends of the trust property under the general direction to pay those rents and dividends to her for her separate use.

From this decision the defendant appealed to the Lord Chancellor, who, on the 16th day of April, 1844 (3 Law T. 69), affirmed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, upon the ground that the restriction on anticipation did not extend to the estate which she took in default of appointment, and that it was not to be distinguished from Barrymore v. Ellis. It having been represented to the Lord Chancellor that this decision did not give satisfaction to the profession, especially to conveyancers, and that much consternation had been excited by reason that the ordinary form by which married women were restrained from anticipating was substantially the same as that in this case, his lordship consented to have the appeal reargued before him by one counsel on each side.

Bethell, for the defendants, the appellants, contended that the form which the Vice-Chancellor had declared to be ineffectual, had been for many years the common form, and much alarm had been excited in families by the decision; that the two branches of the clause ought not to be severed, for that construction would render the restriction on the power of appointment merely idle, and would entirely defeat the testator's intention; that the true way was to read the whole together as relating to but one subject, which was a separate interest in the married woman for her life, without power of alienation. Two other judges of this Court had expressly declined to follow the decision in this case. He cited and referred to Pybus v. Smith (3 Bro. C.C. 339); Ellis v. Atkins (3 Bro. C.C. 565); Parkes v. White (11 Ves. 209); Jackson v. Hobhouse (2 Merivale, 489); Hulme v. Tenant (1 Bro. C.C. 16); Chapman v. Parsonage (5 Ves. 15). The form was Mr. Bytler's. It is also found in Roper on Husband and Wife, edited by Mr. Jacob; Sanders on Wills and Trusts, 4th edit. App. 129; Jarman's Bythewood, vol. 9, p. 215 (he comments on Barrymore v. Ellis, supra); Barton v. Brisco (Jacob, 603); Acton v. White (1 Sim. & Stu. 429); Moore v. Moore (1 Col. 54); Harnett v. MacDougal (Rolls, 27th Feb. 1845, 5 Beav. 59).

Stuart, for the plaintiff, the respondent, contended, forms of conveyances cannot be reconciled; that this gift consisted of a power of appointment and an estate to her separate use; the first was restricted from anticipation, but there was no such restriction applicable to the latter, and consequently the married woman takes the estate with all the incidents of property. (Owens v. Dickenson, Craig & Phillips, 48; Chance on Powers, s. 114.) He commented on the cases cited and mentioned on the other side, and cited and referred to Brandon v. Robinson (18 Ves. 429); Medley v. Horton (8 Jur. 853); Cox v. Chamberlain (4 Ves. 631).

Bethell, in reply, referred to the doctrine of the separate estate as laid down in Tullett v. Armstrong (4 My. & Cr. 444).

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This was an appeal from a decree of the Vice-Chancellor of England. When the case first came before me, I expressed an opinion upon it in accordance with the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor; but entertaining doubts as to the correctness of that opinion, I directed the case to be again argued. The result of that argument, and subsequent consideration of the case, have led me to change the opinion I had previously formed. The testator, John Beckett, by his will, dated the 21st of September, 1832, gave certain leasehold houses and stock in the funds to trustees upon trust, from time to time, during the natural life of his daughter, Sophia Bamford, or until she should be duly declared bankrupt, or take the benefit of any Act for the relief of insolvent debtors, to pay the clear rents interest, dividends, and proceeds of such leasehold hereditaments, stocks, funds, and securities, unto such person or persons, and for such intents and purposes, and in such manner, as Sophia Bamford, by any writing or writings under her hand, and as the same should become due, but not by the way of assignment, charge, or other anticipation thereof, should, notwithstanding her then present or any future coverture, direct or appoint, and in default of any such direction or appointment, or so far as the same, if incomplete, should not extend, unto her own proper hands, for her sole and separate use, independent of the debts, control, and interference of her then present or any future husband; and the testator directed that the receipts in writing of his daughter, Sophia Bamford, should, notwithstanding any such coverture, be good and sufficient discharges to the trustees for the last-mentioned rents, interests, dividends, and proceeds, or so much thereof as should in such receipts respectively be expressed to have been received. I think the intention of the testator was, that the income of the property should be kept entire for the use of his daughter, and that it should not be charged or disposed of except as the successive payments should become due; that it should not be in any way anticipated. It could not reasonably be supposed that he would be so careful, as he evidently has been, to exclude one mode of anticipation, and at the same time mean to leave the property subject to alienation, even to its full extent, in another form. The question, therefore, is, whether the terms used by the testator are sufficient to enable the Court to give effect to this intention. The trust is to pay the rents to such persons as Sophia Bamford, by any writing under her hand, when and as the same shall become due, should direct and appoint, but not by way of assignment, charge, or other anticipation thereof; and in default of such direction or appointment, or as far as the same, if incomplete, shall not extend unto her proper hands, for her sole and separate use. This right to appoint was not to be exercised until the rents and other income became due, and then only to the extent of what was due. In default of any such appointment, the rents, &c. and those only, or so much of them as shall not have been appropriated by the appointment, are to be paid into her own hands. All this is very clearly and precisely expressed. The negative words in this clause, viz. "but not by way of assignment, charge, or other anticipation," remained to be considered. The question depends upon the effect of these words. The daughter, Sophia Bamford, was not allowed, by means of any assignment, charge, or other anticipation, to direct the payment or application of the rents, &c. by the trustees; but any assignment, charge, or other anticipation, if effectual, would operate as direction, and this is so evidently considered by the testator or other person who framed this clause. The effect, therefore, of the prohibition is to restrain Sophia Bamford from assigning, charging, or in any manner anticipating the income or exercising any dominion or control over her life estate, unless in the form and under the restrictions contained in the power of appointment; she is precluded from assigning, charging, or in any manner anticipating the rents or other income; but she is permitted, when and as they become due, and not before, to direct the application of them; and in default of any such direction, they are to be paid into her own hands. I think this is the true construction of this clause, and it corresponds with what I consider to have been the manifest intention of the testator, viz. that the continuance of the income, during his daughter's life, should be secured for her benefit. This case does not in any degree depend upon the terms of the receipt clause; the observations of the learned judge upon that point appear to have arisen from what occurred incidentally in the course of the discussion. I certainly do not understand that this decision is rested on any such ground. He considered that this question came within the principle upon which he had decided Barrymore v. Ellis, viz. that where a limited power of appointment is created, and, in default of execution of such power, the estate is given generally to the same person, it is competent in the donee to dispose of the estate without regard to the power, the execution of which he is at liberty to waive and abandon. The question, however, is not as to the principle, as stated, but as to the application of it to the present case. I think it has no such application. The restriction against anticipation extends to the whole gift. That is the true construction of the bequest, and it corresponds with what was the manifest intention of the testator. I may further observe, that the receipt clause in this case is, in all its material parts, the same as in the settlement stated in the case of Barlow v. Briscoe (Jac. 603). That was a case very much considered by the Court and the bar, but it would have been wholly unnecessary to discuss the important question there decided, if it had been supposed that the clause would have admitted of the interpretation given in the present instance by the Vice-Chancellor. For these reasons, this appeal must be allowed.

Bethell.—The effect of your lordship's allowing this appeal is, that the demurrer to the bill in the Court below is allowed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Yes; but there will be no costs of the appeal.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Tuesday, March 17.

ANDREWS v. LOCKWOOD.

Practice—Pleading—Revivor for costs.

Where a decree among other things has directed one party to pay costs to be taxed, but the other party dies before taxation, all the rest of the decree having been performed, a bill of revivor will not lie.

Where, by the decree, deeds are ordered to be delivered up, but there was no statement in the bill of revivor that they had so been delivered up, a plea and not a demurrer is the proper mode of defence.

This was a bill of revivor by the personal representative of a Mr. G. D. Andrews, one of the defendants in the original suit of Andrews v. Abdy. (a) It stated that, at the hearing of the original cause, a decree was made whereby it was ordered that the plaintiff's bill should stand dismissed, with costs, to be taxed by the Taxing Master of this court in rotation, and that such costs, when taxed, should be paid by the said plaintiff, William Joseph Lockwood, to the said defendants, Andrews and T. N. Abdy, and that by consent it was ordered that the documents deposited with the record and writ clerk, pursuant to an order in the said decree mentioned, should be delivered to the defendants. That the said defendant, Andrews, had since died, and that the plaintiff was his personal representative, and the bill prayed that the decree might be revived. Lockwood, who was ordered by that decree to pay the costs, put in the following plea to the said bill of revivor:—"That before the said plaintiff exhibited her said bill, that is to say, on the 26th day of May, 1846, the documents mentioned in the decree of the 26th of Feb. 1845, in the said bill stated or referred to, and which were by the said decree ordered to be delivered to the defendants in such decree named, were, in pursuance of such decree, duly delivered to the defendants, to whom the same were, by the said decree, ordered to be delivered; that by the means aforesaid the said decree was, before the filing of the said plaintiff's said bill of complaint, fully performed and executed in all respects, save in so far as respects the taxation and payment of the costs thereby directed to be taxed and paid; and the defendant doth therefore plead the matter aforesaid in bar to the said plaintiff's bill, and to all the relief thereby sought."

The whole question now to be argued was simply whether, upon the death of a party who was directed to receive costs, a bill of revivor lay when nothing remained to be done under the decree but the taxation and payment of costs.

Bethell and Heathfield, in support of the plea.—The rules of the Court are, first, that whenever a party is directed to pay costs, and such payment forms the only matter of the decree, the decree cannot be revived after the death of either party: secondly, if the Court orders something else to be done besides the mere payment of costs, but the only part of the decree which remains to be performed at the time of the abatement is the payment of costs, the suit cannot be revived, and there is no settled distinction between an abatement by the death of the party to pay, and that occasioned by the death of the party to receive the costs. In Morgan v. Scudamore (2 Ves. jun. 313), which was heard upon demurrer, Lord Loughborough attempted to draw a distinction between the party entitled to the costs dying, and the party to pay the costs dying; that, however, was a mere dictum. The same case was again heard before his lordship, after answer, and then he held that a suit might be revived for costs only, although there had been no taxation. We admit that to have been a departure from the general rule; but that decision was doubted, and the former practice revived in Jupp v. Geering (5 Madd. 375).

Cases cited and commented upon: White v. Hayward (2 Ves. 461); Johnson v. Peck (2 Ves. 464); Kemp v. Mackrell (2 Ves. 579); Hall v. Smith (1 Bro. C. C. 438); Gibb. For. Rom. 181.

James Parker and Goodvee, contra.—The question is, not as to whether we are to revive simply for the purpose of adjudicating upon the subject of costs. We admit that, if a party die before a decree, you cannot revive for the purpose of adjudication as to costs; but here there has been a final decree for costs; the plaintiff having unjustly filed his bill, which put the defendant to a great expense, the plaintiff was ordered to pay those costs. This, we contend, established a right to the costs as if they had been incurred in any other way. Sir John Leach, in Jupp v. Geering, took upon himself to overturn this rule, which had been established by three Lord Chancellors, Lord Camden, Lord Thurlow, and Lord Loughborough, the latter of whom, in Morgan v. Scudamore, decided, after reviewing all the cases, that a bill might lie for untaxed costs. Sir John Leach supposed that Lord Loughborough went upon some fanciful analogy to the common law, but we can shew that there is no analogy between the one and the other. Doubtless, in the early times there existed a general understanding that there should be no revivor for costs; but no reason was ever assigned for that rule, although in those times the Courts went even so far as to allow a party to revive even for taxed costs; and this remained so even to the time of Lord King. (Thorne v. Pitt, Selw. Ch. Cas. Tem. King, 54; Lloyd v. Powis, 1 Dick, 16; Temple v. Rouse, 1 Ch. Cas. 17; Lord Dacres v. Tuile, 2 Ch. Rep. 127.) This Court, however, has always deemed it a hard rule, and has struggled upon the slightest ground to depart from it. (Hall v. Smith, Johnson v. Peck, Kemp v. Mackrell, 3 Atk. 812; Blower v. Morrell, 3 Atk. 772.) [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The expression put into Lord Loughborough's mouth by Mr. Veasey is, "Lord Camden overruled the demurrer, as the deeds were set aside for fraud." Now, when words so absurd are put into the mouth of a Lord Chancellor, I must come to the conclusion that he is misreported. In the case of Jenour v. Jenour (10 Ves. 572), Lord Eldon, in his judgment, said, "You cannot revive for costs alone; but if they are to be paid out of an estate, you may revive for them." Now it is very remarkable what changes have taken place upon this question. The old practice continued down to the time of Lord Camden; then came his decision. Lord Bathurst revived the former practice. Then Lord Thurlow re-established the practice. Lord Loughborough unsettled it again. After that, Lord Eldon laid down the rule that you cannot revive for costs only. And, finally, we have Lord Redesdale stating as follows:—"A demurrer will also in many cases hold to a bill of revivor brought simply for costs; the Court in general not permitting a suit to be revived for that purpose only, except where the costs have been actually taxed before the abatement happened." 3 ed. p. 164.] Sir John Leach deduces the rule from analogy to that at the common law. But whether at law final judgment be given for plaintiff or defendant, the taxation precedes the final judgment, and there the amount is mentioned in such final judgment, upon which execution afterwards issues. A final decree, however, in a Court of Equity is unlike a final judgment at law, it being the invariable practice in this Court to refer it to the Master to compute what is due. Again, the Master's report or certificate is also unlike a judgment at law, for the only effect of it is to ascertain the quantum. And although the certificate for costs does not require confirmation, the process to recover the costs proceeds upon the decree, and not upon the report. No analogy, therefore, whatever exists between interlocutory judgments and final judgment at law, and the relation between the final decree in this Court and the Master's report. Execution issues upon the final judgment at law, but process does not issue upon the Master's report. But upon the assumption that we are wrong in this view of the case, still we submit that by the 18th section of 1 and 2 Vict. c. 110, a decree of this Court must have the same effect to all intents as a judgment at law. The party declared entitled to costs is a judgment creditor forthwith. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Do you think the statute of 1 and 2 Vict. c. 110, gives any new equity? It affords a party in whose favour the decree is made a right to proceed by execution, but does it give any new equity against the debtor? It allows a writ of fi. fa. to issue out of this Court, which it did not before, and why should the writ be denied to the representatives of a deceased party? It is said that costs die with the person—but how can that be? If there be a revivor for the smallest matter besides, it revives the decree for costs also. Besides, the defence ought to have been taken by demurrer, and not by plea, as the allegation of the delivery up of the deeds was immaterial.]

JUDGMENT.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I am pleased that this case has been brought forward, and also with the arguments for the bill. The practice stands thus:—

It is unquestionable, and indeed it is admitted by the other side, that, according to the early rule of the Court, a bill of revivor did not lie for costs alone. There were some exceptions—as, for instance, where, as stated by my Lord Eldon, the costs were directed to be paid out of a fund. That the rule, however, existed in the way I have stated, is undeniable; nay, the fact that the chief argument against the rule being on the ground of moral propriety proves its existence. It appears also that, although Lord Camden had taken upon himself to decide in the manner in which Lord Loughborough stated he had done, yet of so little authority was that decision held, that it was expressly overruled by Lord Bathurst. Then we find Lord Thurlow going out of his way to give a right which he otherwise did not think he was enabled to give, by ordering the Master to sign his report. Again, we have the decision of Lord Loughborough, in Morgan v. Scudamore, in the year 1796; and it is to be remarked that that decision cannot be taken to have settled the law according to the expressed wish of Lord Loughborough, for Lord Eldon, in Jenour v. Jenour, laid down the rule itself generally, namely, "you cannot revive for costs alone; but if the costs are to be paid out of an estate, you may revive for them." He did not think it necessary to give all the exceptions; he stated the general rule, and that the general rule was subject to exceptions. This proves that his lordship was alive to the practice as it existed in his time. Lord Redesdale only gives the general rule that there cannot be a revivor for costs merely; and so he laid down the rule in the second edition of his Book on Pleading in 1787, in the third edition in 1814, and in the last edition in 1828. The question, it appears, came on again in 1820, that being about twenty-four years after Lord Loughborough's decision; and there Sir John Leach, in answering the argument which had been used by Mr. Spence, taking it for granted that what Mr. Trealove stated was the law, except for what was argued by Mr. Spence, addresses himself to that argument; but it was clearly his opinion that if the argument urged by Mr. Spence did not stand in the way, the general rule ought to prevail, and he so decided, which decision still remains undisturbed. And now, after the lapse of twenty-six years, the case comes on. Now I cannot, upon a question of this kind, enter into the original propriety of the practice; but this idea strikes me, that it could not have been conceived to be just that, without any exception, and under all circumstances, and at any time, a bill of revivor might be filed for procuring the payment of costs merely. That would have been creating a perpetuity which no other general rule allows. If a new rule is to be established it must be done by a superior authority. My duty is only to consider what the rule is at the present time; and I do understand it to be thus: that if there be a decree for payment of costs, and such costs are not taxed before the abatement, and they are not within the excepted cases, there cannot be a revivor for those costs merely. I cannot think that the mere circumstance of a something remaining to be done under the decree is sufficient to give a right in perpetuity to revive for costs. Whatever absurdity there may be in the original rule, there would be much greater in allowing this perpetuity. Again, it has been urged that this plea is in point of pleading wrong, because it is contended that it is a plea of an immaterial fact, viz.: that the documents had been delivered up. Upon the best consideration, however, that I can give, I think the fact stated in the plea that the documents were delivered up, was a fact material to be stated, and thus gets rid of the reasoning which might have been adduced in respect of a demurrer. I am, upon the whole, of opinion that the practice is too strongly laid down for me to disturb it, and I must, therefore, hold this plea good.

Plea allowed.

ROLLS COURT.

DUNCOMBE v. LEWIS.

Practice—New Orders—Common order to amend—Irregularity—Discharge.

A bill was filed against two defendants who put in their answers separately; the plaintiff excepted to both for insufficiency, and one of the defendants having submitted, and put in a fresh answer, and the exceptions being allowed as to the other, the plaintiff obtained the common order to amend, and that the latter defendant should answer the amendments and exceptions together; the defendant who had put in a fresh answer to the original bill, answered the amendments, and then the other defendant answered the amendments and exceptions; the plaintiff then obtained the common order to amend.—Held irregular.

This was a motion to discharge with costs the common order which the plaintiff had obtained to amend his bill, for irregularity. The bill was filed on the 17th February, 1845, against the defendants, Charles Lewis and Elizabeth Levy, who, on the 19th May following, put in separate answers. On the 10th July the plaintiff excepted to the answer of E. Levy, for insufficiency, and she submitted thereto, and put in a fresh answer on the 24th of September. The plaintiff also excepted to the answer of Lewis, and one of the exceptions being allowed, he, on the 7th November, obtained the common order to amend, and that the defendant Lewis might answer the exceptions and amendments together; but as to E. Levy, she had only to answer the amendments, which accordingly she did, on the 17th February, 1846. On the 19th of the same month, Lewis answered the amendments and exceptions; and on the 7th May the plaintiff obtained the common order to amend as against both defendants, and this order it was now sought to set aside for irregularity.

Southgate, in support of the motion, contended that as there had, on the 7th November, been a previous order to amend, the second order was irregular, and ought to be discharged. (Davis v. Prout, 5 Beav. 375.) Mrs. Lewis had put in a full answer in September, and there had been two common orders to amend since. It was true that, by the first order, Lewis was to answer amendments and exceptions together; whereas the cases decided on the subject had reference to a full answer, but that made no difference.

Hallett, contra, said the case of Davis v. Prout had no application; for it was decided on the 13th Order of 1831. Now the 32nd and 33rd Articles of the 16th Order contained special provisions, the former for the case in which there was only one answer, and the latter where there were several. Both defendants in this case put in an insufficient answer, and each was excepted to. Mrs. Levy submitted, and put in a fresh answer; Lewis did not, but went to the Master without success. The plaintiff then obtained an order to amend, and that the defendant Lewis might answer the amendments and exceptions together. Lewis did so on the 19th of February, and within four weeks after that answer was to be considered sufficient. The plaintiff might, under the 66th of the New Orders, obtain the common order to amend, for an insufficient answer was no answer at all; and, therefore, the order so obtained was the first after answer. (Dalton v. Hayter, 7 Beav. 576.) The 16th Order, Article 33, at all events, means that there may be one order of course, after the answer of the several defendants is to be deemed sufficient.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The question is not whether the plaintiff is entitled to amend at all, but whether he is at liberty to do so by virtue of a common order of course; and I am of opinion that he is not. The 66th of the New Orders says, "One order of course for leave to amend a bill, as the plaintiff may be advised, may be obtained by the plaintiff at any time before filing (or undertaking to file) a replication, and within four weeks after the answer, or the last of several answers, is to be deemed to be sufficient." So far Mr. Hallett has contended for the right construction, that there may be one order after the last answer, that is, the last of several defendants, is sufficient. But then the order goes on to say, "But no further order, of course, for leave to amend a bill is to be granted after an answer has been filed, unless in the case provided for," which this is not. Now, there has been an order for leave to amend, and an amendment; then answers, and then an order for leave to amend. Well, is not that contrary to the 66th Order, and is it not a further order? But it is said to be inconsistent with the 33rd Article of the 16th Order; but the Orders are all dependent on one another. The 16th Order, Art. 33, says, "In cases where there are several defendants who do not join in the same answer, the plaintiff (if not precluded from amending, or limited as to the time of amending, by some former order) may, after answer, and before replication, or undertaking to reply, at any time within four weeks after the last answer is deemed or found to be sufficient, obtain one order of course, for leave to amend his bill." Well, there has been one order of course obtained, and the 66th Order says, "No further order" is to be granted; the plaintiff is, therefore, "precluded" from obtaining the order in question. There is no doubt about the meaning of the Orders, and I would recommend gentlemen to construe them more by the words that are in themselves than by comparing them with each other. Something has been said about an insufficient answer being no answer at all, but that is only a way of speaking we have in this court. I wonder whether, in case of a defendant committing perjury in his answer, it would be any answer to an indictment to say an insufficient answer is no answer? After all, however, the plaintiff may obtain an order to amend, on special application. I discharge the order with costs.

SMITH v. SMITH.

Practice—Service of subpoena.

Glasse, in this case, which is reported 7 Law T. 155, produced the affidavit of the person who had called on George Smith, the father-in-law, and Mary Smith, the mother of Rosina Smith, the infant, stating that she was informed that the latter intended to remain in Scotland, and was not expected to return to this country; and he now renewed his application for the order, and to fix a time for appearance and answering.

The MASTER of the ROLLS allowed a fortnight to appear, and six weeks to answer.

RAMSBOTTOM v. FREEMAN.

Practice—Solicitor and client—Conduct of solicitor—Jurisdiction.

The defendant Freeman renewed his application in this case (reported 7 Law T. 155), and read the affidavits on both sides, from which it appeared to be admitted on both sides that the money was paid, and that the relation of solicitor and client existed; but Freeman alleged that Jervis solicited him to deliver the papers into his possession, and to be allowed to undertake the business, whereas Jervis denied this, and alleged he had been requested by Freeman; and as to the money, though Jervis admitted the receipt of it, yet he denied that it was for a particular purpose, as alleged by Freeman. As to the transaction itself in reference to the dismissal of the bill, Freeman went into a long detail of circumstances with a view to shew that he had been deceived and "deceived," with promises and pretences on the part of Jervis that he would take the necessary steps to get the bill dismissed, and that nothing had ever been done. He said he had been frequently sent for by Jervis to come to his house, at a considerable loss of time and at expense; and he had constantly promised, but never performed any thing; that he once pretended to consult a person in his (Freeman's) presence as to the practicability of obtaining the order of dismissal, and told him he would have it with 20l. or 30l. costs; that 1l. 8s. 6d. part of the money, was expressly given for the purpose of making the provisional assignee a party, and that Jervis said the necessary steps had been taken to bring on the motion, which was then in the paper; that he frequently brought him to Court to see the business disposed of, but either the Court had risen, or some other obstacle intervened to prevent the motion coming on; that he stated to him he had filed a long affidavit respecting the matter, but he had never produced that to him, nor indeed had given him any reason, except his own word, to suppose he had done any thing. He then stated several personal matters as to the solvency, &c. of Jervis, and expressed a hope that the Court would interfere.

Wright, for Mr. Jervis, said the receipt of the money was admitted, and it was wrong to make this expensive motion, the proper course being to apply for the common order to tax, which would have cost about 5s. 6d. only. There was no reason to go out of the common course of the Court. There was a sum of 20l. due to Mr. Jervis; and he denied the charges brought against him; and, as to the other irrelevant allegations, he did not think it was proper to answer them. There was an order to tax already in other suits, and the taxed costs were not paid. Mr. Jervis cannot give up the money, even if he would, for he may have to account for it to the provisional assignee, who does not concur.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This is a very painful and distressing case. The application is made in a form in which I have no jurisdiction to grant an order. The conduct of the solicitor is not satisfactory, for he has not met the charge. It is admitted that the relation of solicitor and client exists, but the parties offer no explanation as to how the relation arose, and as to the purpose to which the money was to be applied. It is clear Freeman has a right to have a bill of costs delivered and taxed, on his undertaking to pay any thing that may be found due, and if the balance should be the other way, he has a right to recover the difference. But Jervis says he did business in that and other suits; whereas Freeman alleges he did not, but entirely deluded him. The matter is a proper one to be investigated; but how? If there had been the common order to tax, Jervis would not have got a penny but for such business as he could shew he performed; the bill, therefore, should have been delivered and taxed. On the other hand, if he has done wrong, there is another way of proceeding; but in neither case is a motion like this the proper course. A number of calumnious allegations have been made, which are irrelevant to the question, and therefore improper. I make no order in this case; and I give no costs, for I am not satisfied with the conduct of Mr. Jervis.

Practice—Answer—Serjeant-at-arms.

If an order for a Serjeant-at-arms, for want of an answer, be obtained, and before it is drawn up or executed the answer is filed, it is unnecessary to move to suspend the drawing of it up, as it would not be served after notice of the filing of the answer; and if the answer be found sufficient it ultimately falls to the ground.

Turner moved to suspend the drawing up of the order for a serjeant-at-arms, for want of an answer which had been obtained on Friday last, on the ground that the answer was filed before 4 o'clock on Saturday, the order not having been then executed or even drawn up.

The MASTER of the ROLLS. They cannot serve the order now, as the answer is in; the execution of the order is therefore virtually suspended till the answer is found sufficient or insufficient. It would be a mistake to execute an order of a serjeant-at-arms when the answer is in, and they have notice of it; you are, therefore, safe till the answer is found sufficient or insufficient, after exceptions; and if it should be found sufficient, the order falls to the ground.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Monday, May 4.

REG. v. PELHAM.

Indictment for ill-treating a lunatic, sufficiency of. An indictment for ill-treating a lunatic in one count charged, that whilst the lunatic was under the care and control of the defendant, the defendant did certain things. Held, no sufficient averment that the lunatic was under the care and control of the defendant.

In another count it charged, that the lunatic resided with the defendant; that the defendant had sufficient means for the support of both of them; and that the lunatic was incapable of taking care of himself, whereby it became the duty of the defendant to take care of the lunatic. Held, that no such duty was shewn.

The same count then went on to charge various acts of omission and commission, to the great damage and peril of the said lunatic. Held insufficient, for not shewing that any injury had been actually sustained, or that the acts charged had been so long continued that injury must, in all probability, have resulted.

Indictment.—Upon the first and fourth counts the defendant was acquitted. The second and third were as follows:—

Second Count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present that the said Harriet Eleanor Pelham, being such person as aforesaid, and unlawfully and maliciously contriving and intending to hurt and injure the said Brent Spencer, being a person of unsound intellect and incapable of taking care of himself, did, whilst the said Brent Spencer, being such person as last aforesaid, was under the care, custody, and control of the said Harriet Eleanor Pelham, and whilst the said Harriet Eleanor Pelham received divers sums of money for his support and maintenance, with force and arms, &c. to wit, on the said fourteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord 1844, and for a long space of time, to wit, for the space of ten years before then, and at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, cruelly, inhumanly, unnecessarily, maliciously, and unlawfully, keep, confine, and imprison the said Brent Spencer in the dark, cold, and unwholesome room aforesaid; and did, during the time last aforesaid, cruelly, inhumanly, unnecessarily, maliciously, and unlawfully neglect and omit to clothe the body of the said Brent Spencer; and did then and there suffer and permit the body of the said Brent Spencer to be naked and foul, and covered with soil, excrement, and vermin; and did also then and there suffer and permit divers large quantities of filth, soil, excrement, and vermin to collect and remain in the said room, and there to cause divers noisome, noxious, offensive, and unwholesome smells, vapours, and stench; and did also then and there keep the said Brent Spencer without sufficient and proper air, warmth, and exercise necessary for the health of the said Brent Spencer, to the great damage and peril of the said Brent Spencer, of the evil example of all other persons, and against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

Third Count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said Brent Spencer was the illegitimate son of the said Harriet Eleanor Pelham, and that for a long space of time, to wit, for the space of ten years, the said Brent Spencer was of unsound intellect, and incapable of taking care of himself, and during all that time the said Brent Spencer resided with the said Harriet Eleanor Pelham; and the said Harriet Eleanor Pelham had possessed and enjoyed ample and sufficient means for the comfortable support and maintenance of herself and the said Brent Spencer, whereupon it became, and then was, the duty of the said Harriet Eleanor Pelham, during all the time aforesaid, to take due and proper care of said the Brent Spencer. Nevertheless, the jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present that the said Harriet Eleanor Pelham, being an evil disposed person, did not, nor would, during the time aforesaid, take due or proper care of the said Brent Spencer, but on the contrary thereof, during that time, to wit, in the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, cruelly, inhumanly, unnecessarily, maliciously, and unlawfully, did keep and confine the said Brent Spencer in a dark, cold, and unwholesome room, in and parcel of a dwelling-house, situate and being in the parish aforesaid; and did also then and there neglect and omit to provide and furnish the said Brent Spencer with proper and requisite clothing for the body of him, the said Brent Spencer; and did then and there suffer and permit the body of the said Brent Spencer to be, and the same was, during the time aforesaid, foul, and covered with soil, excrement, and vermin; and did also then and there suffer and permit divers large quantities of filth, soil, excrement, and vermin to collect and remain in the said room, and there to cause divers noisome, noxious, offensive, and unwholesome smells, vapours, and stench; and did also then and there keep the said Brent Spencer without sufficient and proper air, warmth, and exercise, necessary for the health of the said Brent Spencer, to the great damage and peril of the said Brent Spencer, to the evil example of all other persons, and against the peace of our said lady the Queen her crown and dignity.

A rule nisi having been obtained to arrest the judgment upon those two counts,

Watson, Q. C. on the first day of last Easter Term, shewed cause; and on that and the following day

E. James and Phinn were heard in support of the rule. Many objections were taken to the indictment; but as two only are noticed in the judgment of the Court, it is not thought necessary to give the argument at length.

The following cases were referred to: R. v. Marriott, 8 Car. & P. 425; R. v. Edwards, ib. 611; Urmoston v. Neucomen, 4 Ad. & Ell. 899; R. v. Friend, R. & R. C. C. 20; R. v. Saunders, 7 C. & P. 277, and the note to that case in 1 Russ. on Crimes, 492; R. v. Maude, 2 Dowl. N. S. 58; 11 L. J. N. S. M. C. 120; R. v. Clendon, 2 Stra. 870; 2 Ld. Raym. 1572; R. v. Benfield, Burr. 980; Campbell v. The Queen, 1 Cox, C. L. Cas. 269; R. v. Somerton, 7 B. & C. 463; Smith v. Adkins, 8 M. & W. 362.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C. J. now delivered judgment.—There were two counts in this indictment on which the defendant was convicted. One was objected to for want of a positive averment that the lunatic was under the defendant's care when she committed the acts for which she stood indicted. They were all said to have been done whilst the unfortunate lunatic was under her care or control, but there was no averment that he ever was so. Some cases were quoted to shew that this followed by necessary implication, from the averment, that the acts were done whilst he was under her control; but none of them go to that extent. With respect to the other count, there was no averment that the lunatic was under the care and control of the defendant, so as to shew that there was any duty in her to take care of her son. Even if such duty had been shewn, acts of commission and omission were charged against the defendant as likely to produce injury; but it was not alleged that injury was actually produced, and it is by no means a necessary consequence of such acts, nor was it alleged to have been the actual consequence of them: nor were the acts stated to have continued so long that injury must or probably would result. There is, therefore, nothing at most beyond a probable conjecture to shew that the patient's sufferings, or that the supposed injuries, were at all connected with his mother's misconduct, and the judgment must therefore be arrested. Rule absolute.

DOR dem. MOLESWORTH v. SLEEMAN.
Reputed manor.

Upon a question of manorial rights or boundaries, evidence of reputation is admissible where the manor is shewn to be a reputed manor, just as much as where it is shewn to be an existing manor.

Ejectment for certain strips of land called land-scores, extending eighteen feet from the limit of the manor into the adjoining land. At the trial before Coleridge, J. at the Devon Spring Assizes, 1845, the question was treated as one of parcel or no parcel; and there was some evidence, although very slight, of the existence of a manor called Affland. There was stronger evidence of it being a reputed manor. In summing up, Mr. Justice Coleridge told the jury that the reasons which rendered evidence of what old people had said admissible to shew the existence of a manor failed when it was shewn that the manor in question was only a reputed manor,—“that which may or may not have been formerly a manor,”—and that if they thought Affland was a reputed manor only, they were to give no weight to the declarations which had been received, for that then the parties who had made these declarations had no more to do with the boundaries of Affland than of a private estate; but that if they considered it was a manor, they were then to give weight to this evidence by reputation. The jury found for the defendant.

In Easter Term, 1845, Greenwood obtained a rule nisi for a new trial for misdirection, against which Crowder, Q. C. Montagu Smith, and Merivale (May 4) shewed cause.—Evidence of reputation is only used as to manors, but when it is proved that it is not a manor, but has been only a reputed manor, the effect of admitting such evidence would be to extend the rules hitherto followed. Even once calling it a manor would be sufficient to render evidence of boundary by reputation admissible. This is not a claim of waste, but of parcel or no parcel. A reputed manor is that which has ceased to have a court, for defect of suitors; but other rights of a public nature may exist, and those may be provable by reputation; but not so where it is a simple question of boundaries between two proprietors. In Soane v. Ireland (10 East, 259) a manor was proved to have existed. Here there was only slight evidence of a manor by reputation.

Greenwood, contra.—This evidence is equally admissible whether it is a manor or a reputed manor. A reputed manor is that which has once been a manor, but which has ceased to have the necessary legal incidents. It is not merely that it has been called a manor. Sir M. Finch's case (6 Rep. 63); R. v. Chester (Skinner, 661); Watkin's Copyholder; Coke's Copyholder, p. 60; Steele v. Prickett (2 Stark. 468, 5 Esp.); Soane v. Ireland (10 East, 259), were cited. Cur. adv. vult.

In Trinity Term the Court delivered judgment as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—In this case the plaintiff claims the property in question, seeking to prove that it is his by shewing it is within the boundary of his reputed manor; as to which boundary my learned brother Coleridge told the jury they were to consider whether this was a reputed manor or a manor, and if it were not a manor, evidence of reputation ought not to be considered by them; because in that case there was no probability in its favour, as there were no inhabitants of the manor interested in ascertaining the evidence. On much consideration, we cannot accede to this doctrine; for by a reputed manor is commonly understood to be that which has been a manor, though from some supervening cause it has ceased to be so. There seems to be no reason why such conversations as were related might not have been held during the existence of the manor, and used to prove that the manor existed. There is no rule of law which confines such conversations to persons who are tenants of the manor, because it is a public question, in which all the neighbourhood would be likely to express their opinions. Two cases have been cited from 5 Esp. and 10 East, in which this is clearly made to appear. The first of them is like the present in all points, and it is clearly made there to appear that the defect of freeholders capable of doing suit in the manors does not prevent that which has been a manor from being so. We therefore think the question was wrongly left to the jury, and the rule must be absolute.

Rule absolute.

DOLBY v. RIMINGTON.

Prohibition.

If the Court can see, upon the face of the proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court, that matters of purely temporal cognizance (as parochiality, and the existence of a custom) are put in issue, prohibition will be granted.

Declaration in prohibition.—This was a demurrer to a plea. The argument turned almost entirely upon the effect of the proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court, as set out upon the pleadings.

On June 2, judgment was delivered as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.—This was a process of prohibition, the question arising upon demurrer to the plea to the declaration, which makes it necessary to advert with some particularity to the declaration. The declaration states that the plaintiff was libelled in the Spiritual Court, and the libel did, amongst other things, allege, firstly, that the parish of Foston, in the county of Lincoln, actually was part of and within the parish of Long Bennington, in the same county, during the period therein specified; 2ndly, that for the like period a laudable usage prevailed for the inhabitants of Foston to maintain their own parish church and contribute to the repair of the parish church of Long Bennington, and all necessary charges and expenses laid out and expended by the churchwardens, in a certain proportion stated in the libel. The declaration, after noticing other parts of the libel not material to be stated, proceeds:—“And the now plaintiff gave in the said episcopal and consistorial court a negative issue to the said libel, denying thereby the allegations of the said libel;” so that we must understand (nothing appearing to the contrary) that the first and second allegations in the said libel above set forth, and which contain matter of temporal cognizance, were denied, or, as we should term it, put in issue, in the court below. The declaration, however, goes farther to state the course of proceeding in the Ecclesiastical Court:—“the now plaintiff, by way of answer to the said libel, did by his personal answer plead and allege amongst other things,”—and then follows a distinct denial that Foston is part of or within the said parish of Long Bennington; and also that there is any such usage or custom that Foston, besides maintaining its own parish church, should contribute in a certain proportion to the repair of that of Long Bennington, or all or any of the necessary expenses otherwise incurred by the churchwardens of Long Bennington. So we see a second distinct and formal denial pleaded to the two formal allegations in the libel, containing matter of temporal cognizance. The declaration, however, proceeds still further, and states such proceedings were thereupon had that the now plaintiff allege that Foston was a distinct and separate parish, and had a parish church, which had been, time out of mind, maintained by the parishioners of Foston aforesaid, and that the same was not a hamlet, chapel, or township belonging to or within the said parish of Long Bennington, and that from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, Foston had been held and considered a separate and distinct parish to all intents and purposes. Then follows, in respect of the said suit, a statement, that it was falsely alleged in the libel, that from the time therein mentioned an ancient usage had been observed by Foston, by which the inhabitants of Foston contributed to the support of the parish church of Long Bennington in the proportion of three to eight, and that when the churchwardens of Long Bennington levied 8l. for the repair of the said church, or in due execution of their office of churchwardens, the inhabitants of Foston had been used to raise towards the same 3l. as their due proportion of such charges and expenses; and the now plaintiff expressly alleged and propounded there was no such usage or custom of Foston contributing in any proportion towards the repair of the parish church of Long Bennington; and the inhabitants of Foston never had been summoned to a vestry held for Long Bennington for the purpose of making a church-rate or any other purpose. It is observable that the usage or custom for Foston to contribute in the terms stated, that is, towards the repair of the church of Foston, and also all repairs and expenses and charges laid out by the churchwardens of Long Bennington have been twice denied by the now plaintiff, first by a negative issue, and again by his personal answer; but in the latter part of the passage just quoted, the expense of the churchwardens is omitted; and that circumstance was relied upon in the argument in support of the plea, to which we will now refer. It states that from the time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, there has been, and still is, an ancient usage, custom, and prescription; and during all the time aforesaid, has been observed and prevailed, by which Foston has supported its own chapel, and contributed to the support and reparation of the parish church of Long Bennington, in a certain proportion already specified as in the said libel is in that behalf mentioned. Now the usage stated in the libel is set forth in the declaration, and there is nothing before us respecting that libel except what is so put; it is not that stated in the plea. The part respecting the expenses of the churchwardens, contained in the libel, is omitted in the plea; the usage or custom, therefore, found in the Ecclesiastical Court is another and a different one from that contained in the libel; but besides this, the plea is confined to the existence of the usage or custom by virtue of which the parishioners of Foston were required to contribute a proportion of three to eight towards the repairs of the parish church of Long Bennington independently of their own repairs. It appears, however, upon the statement of the proceedings contained in the declaration—as has been already observed, they are before us in no other manner—that another issue has been twice raised in the Ecclesiastical Court, viz. whether Foston be a part of or within the parish of Long Bennington; and the question is purely of temporal cognizance, and to be decided according to the rules of common law. Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the plea discloses no sufficient ground for awarding a commutation, and that our judgment must be for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

BAILEY v. WALFORD.

Case for false assertion.

A mere false assertion by which another person is misled to his injury is no ground of action.

But if such false assertion is made knowingly and willfully, and with the view to the advantage of the party who makes it, in consequence of the person to whom it is made believing it, such person acting upon it, and suffering damage, may sue in case for false representation.

This was a declaration in case for a false representation, to which the defendant demurred generally. The declaration was very long and special, but the substance is stated in the judgment.

Applied, in support of demurrer.—The declaration does not shew any special duty on the part of the defendant to inform the plaintiff, and if the plaintiff was misled it was his own fault. Pasley v. Freeman (3 T. R. 51); Bailey v. Merrill (3 Bulst. 94); Kelly v. Partington (5 B. & Ad. 645); 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100; Vernon v. Keys (12 E. 632), were cited. The inuendo as to the false representation is also larger than is warranted, and the very words should have been set out. (Guttsale v. Mather, 1 M. & W. 495.)

Browne (with him Simon), contra.—It was not in the plaintiff's course of business or power to ascertain the truth of the assertions of the defendant, for there is no opportunity of inspecting the copyright of the designs. But at any rate the assertion was made falsely and wilfully, and with the view to gain, by causing damage to the plaintiff. (Evans v. Collins, 4 Q. B. 804; Taylor v. Ashton, 11 M. & W. 401.) There is no necessity to set out the exact words used. (Turnley v. McGregor, 6 Sc. N. R. 906.)

Aspland, in reply. Cur. adv. vult.
In Trinity Term, judgment was delivered as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—The declaration in substance states that the plaintiff was a dealer in printed silk goods, and had sent to defendant divers lots of such goods, the last lot of which contained handkerchiefs which had been printed by the plaintiff in a certain ornamental pattern, and that he was about to print others of the same pattern for profit, all of which were sold to the defendant; yet the defendant, artfully contriving to deceive, injure, and defraud the plaintiff, and induce him to desist from printing the same, and deprive him of the profits, and put him to great unnecessary expense, falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully represented, and affirmed to the plaintiff, of and concerning the said last lot of the said handkerchiefs, that in the said last lot there were copies of a registered pattern, and the parties interested in the pattern intended to proceed against the defendant in the most expensive manner, namely, by injunction and order of the Court of Chancery, thereby meaning that the said pattern was a copy of the pattern registered according to the statute, whereas in fact no such pattern had been registered, and no party did so intend, as the defendant well knew; in consequence of which false assertion the plaintiff was induced to take a long journey from Glasgow to London, for the purpose of inquiring into such matter, and satisfy the party that he was injured in his trade, and refrained from making goods of that kind according to orders received. The defendant demurred generally. The judgment which was given in this Court in Evans v. Collins, affirming the proposition that every false statement made by one person and believed by another, and so acted on as to bring loss on him, constituted a grievance for which the law gives a remedy by action, has been overruled by the Exchequer Chamber, which did not deny the authority of Humphreys v. Platt in the House of Lords, but thought that it might be distinguished from Evans v. Collins. Whether, in point of reason that is satisfactory we need not inquire, for having been established by a Court of Error it must prevail, and on the more general subject we must admit the reasonableness of the doctrine there laid down, for if any untrue statement, which occasions loss or damage, would found an action at law, a man might sue his neighbour at any moment for communicating erroneous information, such, for instance, as having a conspicuous clock too slow by which the plaintiff might be prevented from attending some duty. This doctrine, therefore, must be restrained within some reasonable limit; but an averment that the falsehood of his statement was known to him, and that he knowingly and wilfully uttered it, seems to carry the matter somewhat further. If the defendant was under any legal obligation to state the truth correctly to the plaintiff, that would be a grievance in misleading him for which an action on the case might lie, still more so if he made a false representation with a view of some unfair advantage to himself. Now, here, on minutely examining the declaration, although not very scientifically drawn, we think it sufficiently appears that the defendant uttered knowingly a deliberate falsehood on this subject with a view to his own advantage. It is averred he did so with a design to deprive the plaintiff of the benefit of the last lot of goods for his own sole use, and this might have been effected in the manner alleged by deterring the plaintiff from bringing his goods to market. The defendant has no right to say the plaintiff was wrong in giving him credit for the truth of what he said. There is no doubt that the special damage would naturally follow from the confidence of the plaintiff. We think, therefore, the plaintiff has laid a good cause of action, and the demurrer must be overruled. The objection that the innuendo was too large as laid in the declaration is answered by the remark that no innuendo was required.

Judgment for plaintiff.

GILES v. GILES.

Independent conditions.

An agreement recited that the father of the defendant made his will, and therein directed his debts to be paid; that he had made a former will, and afterwards disposed of some of his property contained in that will, so as to make a considerable alteration as to the interest the children would take after his death; and then it recites that the parties were desirous to take equally, as they would have done if the original will had stood, and therefore the defendant, in consideration of natural love and affection to the plaintiff and his sister, and for other good causes, agreed to permit the plaintiff to occupy all that part of the lands and premises in his possession until the 29th of September, which would be in the year 1843; the plaintiff paying, therefore, on the said last-mentioned day, that is, on the 29th of September, 1843, to the defendant the sum agreed upon, 30l. as rent for the same, and then to deliver up the same premises to the defendant in good tenantable repair, and in the meantime to manage the premises in a husband-like manner, and according to the custom of the country, and to permit the defendant to enter for the arrears of crop at the usual time; and upon the plaintiff, his executors, administrators, and assigns, so quitting the said premises, and paying the said rent, and observing the other stipulations, and releasing the defendant from all claims of his under the said will, and also releasing and quitting the defendant, his heirs, and so on, from all the freehold and leasehold lands and hereditaments which were to each given by the former will, and which the plaintiff did thereby agree to do, he the defendant said he would well and truly pay unto the plaintiff the sum of 200l. with the interest of 4l. 10s. per annum, to be calculated from the 29th of May, 1842. And by the said agreement it was also further agreed, that all deeds and releases that might be required by the defendant, pursuant to these presents, should be prepared by the attorney of the defendant at his own expense. The declaration went on to state that the plaintiff was ready and willing to deliver up the premises, and stated also that he was ready and willing to execute the release; and then says, that although no release was prepared by the attorney of the defendant, according to the said arrangement, yet the defendant did not pay the money. The defendant traversed by his second plea the readiness and willingness to quit and deliver the premises, and in the third the readiness and willingness to release.—Held on demurrer, that the second plea was good, because the conditions were concurrent and not conditions precedent, or wholly independent, but that the third was bad as tendering an immaterial issue.—Held also that the second was not too large a traverse.

Demurrer to plea.—This was a question as to whether certain conditions were precedent or independent. The judgment sets out the pleadings sufficiently.

JUDGMENT.

In Trinity Term, judgment was delivered as follows:—

PATTON, J.—This was an action on an agreement which was recited, that the father of the defendant made his will, and therein directed his debts to be paid; that he had made a former will, and afterwards disposed of some of his property contained in that will, so as to make a considerable alteration as to the interest the children would take after his death; and then it recites that the parties were desirous to take equally, as they would have done if the original will had stood, and therefore the defendant, in consideration of natural love and affection to the plaintiff and his sister, and for other good causes, agreed to permit the plaintiff to occupy all that part of the lands and premises in his possession until the 29th of September, which would be in the year 1843; the plaintiff paying, therefore, on the said last-mentioned day, that is, on the 29th of September, 1843, to the defendant the sum agreed upon, 30l. as rent for the same, and then to deliver up the same premises to the defendant in good tenantable repair, and in the meantime to manage the premises in a husband-like manner, and according to the custom of the country, and to permit the defendant to enter for the arrears of crop at the usual time; and upon the plaintiff, his executors, administrators, and assigns, so quitting the said premises, and paying the said rent, and observing the other stipulations, and releasing the defendant from all claims of his under the said will, and also releasing and quitting the defendant, his heirs, and so on, from all the freehold and leasehold lands and hereditaments which were to each given by the former will, and which the plaintiff did thereby agree to do, he the defendant said he would well and truly pay unto the plaintiff the sum of 200l. with the interest of 4l. 10s. per annum, to be calculated from the 29th of May, 1842. And by the said agreement it was also further agreed, that all deeds and releases that might be required by the defendant, pursuant to these presents, should be prepared by the attorney of the defendant, at his own expense. The declaration went on to state that the plaintiff was ready and willing to deliver up the premises, and stated also that he was ready and willing to execute the release; and then says, that although no release was prepared by the attorney of the defendant, according to the said arrangement, yet the defendant did not pay the money. The pleas were non assumpsit, and then that the plaintiff was not ready and willing to quit and deliver up the said premises so in possession of the plaintiff, as in the agreement mentioned; or to pay the said rent in the manner and form as the plaintiff has alleged in the declaration; and then there is a further plea, that the plaintiff was not ready and willing to release the defendant in manner and form. Then the first question on this state of the pleadings is, whether the declaration is sufficient, and it is objected to on the ground that the plaintiff had only averred a readiness and willingness to deliver up the premises and to pay the rent and release the defendant; whereas the defendant contends those things were conditions precedent to his the defendant's paying the 200l. under the agreement, and undoubtedly the declaration ought to have averred an actual performance of those things. The plaintiff, on the other hand, contended that those things to be done by him, and the payment of the 200l. by the defendant, were independent acts altogether, and the averment of readiness and willingness is unnecessary and not traversable, and therefore may be considered an immaterial issue. We think the plaintiff is wrong in his view, and that these acts are clearly not independent. The words are upon the plaintiff doing so and so, the defendant promises to pay 200l.; the time for paying is not fixed by the agreement itself, and cannot be fixed otherwise than by the plaintiff doing the acts required on his part. The case of Pordage v. Cole (1 Saund. 320), cited in the argument is one of importance; there were also others cited in the notes to Peters v. Ops (2 Saunders, 352) quite as important, and more strictly applicable to the present case. On consideration of those cases and the intention of the parties in the agreement in this case, as shown by the agreement itself, we are of opinion that the acts to be done by the plaintiff were not conditions precedent—not independent but concurrent with those to be done by the defendant, and therefore it was sufficient for the plaintiff to aver readiness and willingness to do them; but if it was necessary for him to make the averment, it follows that the averment was traversable, and therefore the plaintiff's demurrer to the pleas on the ground that they tendered an immaterial issue cannot be sustained, except, indeed, as to the third plea for other reasons. But the plaintiff objects to the pleas on other grounds; to the second he objects that it is multifarious, inasmuch as it puts in issue two distinct things, the plaintiff's readiness and willingness to pay the rent, and also to deliver up possession. Now the plaintiff was bound to do both acts; the issue therefore does not cast on him further proof than the averment; and although he is ready and willing to do either, it does not necessarily follow the defendant was bound to traverse them separately. The principle laid down in Stuhls v. Lanson (1 M. & W. 728); Drewe v. Lanson (11 A. & E. 529); and Moore v. Boulcott (1 Bing. N. C. 323), is that a traverse is too large where it casts more proof on the other side than is necessary to maintain the pleadings which contain an allegation traversable. That is not so here; therefore we think the second plea not objectionable on that ground; the judgment, therefore, should be for the defendant on that plea. As to the third plea, the plaintiff objects that as it appears by the agreement set out in the declaration the release was to be given to the defendant, was to be prepared by the defendant's attorney, and as it is averred in the declaration that no such release was prepared, the plaintiff's readiness and willingness to have executed the release if prepared has become immaterial; and we think this objection must prevail. If no release was prepared by the defendant's attorney, the plaintiff might still sue the defendant for the money, whether he was ready to have executed it or not; indeed, if none were prepared, it would be sufficient for the plaintiff to prove his willingness to have executed it, for he was not bound to call upon the defendant to prepare the release. If, on the other hand, the release was prepared by the defendant, he should have pleaded the fact, and shewn the refusal by the plaintiff to execute it. On the demurrer to this plea we think the issue is immaterial, and the judgment must be for the plaintiff.

Judgment for plaintiff on the third plea, for the defendant on the second.

MAY v. BURDETT.

Pleading—Action on the case for injury committed by a monkey—Averment of negligence.

In an action on the case for an injury committed by an animal kept by the defendant, it is sufficient to allege the mischievous propensity of the animal and the defendant's knowledge of that propensity, without averring that the defendant negligently kept such animal; for the gist of the action is the keeping it after notice of its propensity.

The declaration was in case for an injury done to the plaintiff by a monkey kept by the defendant, but as the form of it, as well as the objections taken to it, are so fully stated in the judgment of the Court, it is thought unnecessary to repeat them here.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

LORD DENMAN, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—A motion to arrest judgment in an action on the case, for keeping a monkey which the defendant knew to be accustomed to bite people, and which bit the female plaintiff, the declaration stated the defendant wrongfully kept a monkey, well knowing it was of a mischievous and ferocious nature, and used and accustomed to attack and bite mankind, and that it was dangerous to allow it to be at large; and that the monkey, while the defendant kept the same, did attack and bite and injure the female plaintiff, laying special damage. It was objected, on the part of the defendant, that the declaration was bad, for not alleging negligence or some default on the part of the plaintiff, in not properly securing and keeping the animal; and it was said, consistently with this declaration, the monkey might have been kept with due and proper caution, and that the injury might have been occasioned by the carelessness and want of caution of the plaintiff herself. A great many cases and precedents were cited on the argument, and the conclusion to be drawn from them appears to us to be, that the declaration is good on the face of it; and that whoever keeps an animal accustomed to attack and bite mankind, with a knowledge that it is so accustomed, is prima facie liable in an action on the case, at the suit of any person attacked and injured by the animal, without any averment of negligence or default in receiving and taking care of it. The gist of the action is the keeping of the animal after a knowledge of its mischievous propensities. The precedents, both ancient and modern, with scarcely an exception, merely state the ferocity of the animal and the knowledge of the defendant without any allegation of negligence or want of care. A great many were referred to on the argument, commencing with the Register (1066, 110, a), and ending with Thomas v. Morgan (2 Cr. & R. 496), and all in the same terms, as nearly as. In the Register two precedents of writs are given; one for keeping a dog accustomed to bite sheep, and the other for keeping a boar accustomed to wound other animals. The cause of action, as stated in the declaration, is the propensity of the animal and the knowledge of the defendant, and the injury to the plaintiff, but there is no allegation of negligence or want of care. The case of Mason v. Keeling (1st Lord Raym. 606; and 12 Mod. 332) was much relied upon on the part of the defendant; want of due care was alleged, but the scienter was omitted, and the question was not whether the declaration would be good without the allegation of want of care, but whether it was good without the allegation of knowledge; and there it was held that it was not. No case has been cited in which it has been decided that a declaration stating the ferocity of the animal, and the knowledge of the defendant of the ferocity of the animal was bad, for not averring negligence also; but various dicta were cited to shew that this is an action founded on negligence, and therefore not maintainable unless some negligence or want of care was alleged. In Comyn's Digest, title "Action on the Case for Negligence" (A. 5), it is stated that "an action on the case lies for a neglect in taking care of his cattle, dog, &c.;" and passages were cited from the old authorities, and also some cases at Nisi Prius, in which expressions were used shewing that if persons suffered animals to go at large, knowing them to be disposed to do mischief, they were liable in case any mischief was done; and it was attempted to be inferred from these that the liability only attached in case they were suffered to go at large, or be otherwise insecure; but the conclusion to be drawn from the examination of all the authorities appears to us to be this: that a person keeping a mischievous animal, with knowledge of its propensity, is bound to keep it secure, at his peril; and that if it does mischief, the negligence must be presumed, without any express averment of it. The precedents as well as the authorities fully warrant this conclusion; the negligence is in keeping such an animal after notice. The case of Smith v. Pelah (2 Strange, 1264), and the passage in 1 Hale's Pleas of the Crown, put the liability on those two grounds. It may be that if the injury was solely occasioned by the wilfulness of the plaintiff, after warning, that may be a ground of defence by confession and avoidance; but it is unnecessary to give an opinion as to this, for we think the declaration is good on the face of it, and shews a prima facie liability in the defendant. It was said, indeed, further, on the part of the defendant, that if the monkey be an animal fera nature, and an injury be committed by it, he would not be liable, if it escaped and went at large, without any default on the part of the defendant, during the time it so escaped, because at that time it would not be in his keeping, nor under his control. But we cannot allow any weight to this objection, for, in the first place, there is no statement in the declaration that the monkey had escaped, but, on the contrary, it is expressly averred that the injury occurred while the defendant kept it. We are, besides, of opinion, as I have already stated, that the defendant, if he did keep it, was bound to keep it secure, at all events. The rule must, therefore, be discharged.

Rule discharged.

R. v. THE INHABITANTS OF WALBOTTLE.

Settlement by hiring and service—Exceptional hiring. Upon the construction of a pit-bond, whereby a pauper was hired for a year to do a full day's work every working day, including pay Saturday, and the master was to find so much work as would enable him to earn 28s. in a fortnight; the hiring was held exceptive; although it was agreed that during the days the pits should be off work the pauper should continue to be the servant of the employer.

Upon appeal against an order of removal, the Quarter Sessions quashed the order subject to a case, which set out a pit-bond, by service under which the settlement was claimed. The material provisions of the bond were, that the pauper was hired for a year to work in a pit; that he should on every working day, including pay Saturdays, do a full day's work, or such a quantity of work as should be deemed so; that the master should find as much work as would enable him to earn 28s. in a fortnight, under a penalty of 2s. 6d.; except for fourteen days at Christmas, during which he might lay the pits off work; but that during ten days at Christmas, and other days when the pits should be off work, the pauper should continue in the service, although not at work. The pauper was to live in a cottage provided by the master, but to quit the cottage when he quitted the employment; and some restrictions were imposed as to the keeping of cattle, &c.

R. Ingham, in support of the order of sessions.—This is not an exceptive hiring. One test is, whether the pauper was bound to work more than a limited number of hours in each day; R. v. Ossett-cum-Gaithorpe, 4 B. & Ad. 216, 220; and that case as well as R. v. Byker, 2 B. & C. 114, are authorities to shew that in this case, according to the proper construction of the agreement, it fixes only the minimum, not the maximum, of labour. In the latter case it was agreed that the master should pay for every good day's work, not exceeding fourteen hours, so much, and 2d. per day when that time was exceeded; and in answer to the argument there used, that the pauper was entitled to absent himself at the expiration of fourteen hours, and that the master could not compel him to work any longer, Bayley, J. delivering the judgment of the Court, said: "We are of opinion that the time was only mentioned as the measure of the wages; that the contract does not impose any limit upon what might reasonably be required by the master; and that the relation of master and servant continued during the whole twenty-four hours." So here no limit is imposed upon what the master might reasonably require; for the only limit is the ability of the man to work. In order to make the hiring exceptive there must be a distinct exception of some period, during which the control of the master would not continue; as of ten days at Christmas in R. v. Gateshead, 2 B. & C. 117, a, and of the pay Saturdays in R. v. Cowper, 5 Ad. & E. 333; but here the exception of certain days at Christmas is qualified by an express proviso that the relation of master and servant shall continue the whole time; and they are to work on pay Saturdays. The contract is silent as to Sundays; but that does not suspend the relation of master and servant during that day. It is one of those exceptions which are implied in every contract, and is like the exemption of hours for relaxation, food, and rest. (R. v. All Saints, Worcester, 1 B. & Ald. 322.) Something depends upon the nature of the occupation. R. v. Norton Bavant, 3 Ad. & E. 161, was the case of a colt shearer; R. v. Edmond, 3 B. & A. 107, that of a bricklayer; R. v. Birmingham, 9 B. & C. 925, that of a button-caster; R. v. Stoke-upon-Trent, 5 Q.B. 303, that of a china-manufacturer; all of them occupations entirely different from that of working at a pit. How can it be said here that the employment is at an end when the full day's work is done? The other stipulations of the contract forbid that construction. The men occupy houses belonging to the master; and they are to quit their houses when they quit their employment; they are not to keep certain cattle; and they are subjected to other restrictions which could only be imposed by the authority of a master.

Knowles, Q.C. and Granger, contra.—In this contract of hiring there is an exception, 1st, of certain hours in every day; 2nd, of Sundays; and 3rd, of certain days at Christmas. The rule is clear that in order to confer a settlement, the relation of master and servant must subsist during every moment of the year; and as to the first of the above exceptions, there is no distinction between this case and R. v. Gateshead, 2 B. & C. 117, a. The contract there contained a provision exactly similar to the 8th clause in this contract; and it is a mistake to suppose that that case was decided upon the exception of certain days at Christmas. In R. v. St. Helen's Auckland (4 B. & Adol. 718, 724), Lord Denman, C.J. referring to that case, said: "It appears, however, from the reasoning of the judges there given, that the hiring was held to be exceptive, not because the pauper was not bound to work for his master during the ten days, but because he was not bound to work during the whole of every day, but during such part of the day only as might be required to complete a full day's work." With that explanation of the decision in R. v. Gateshead, it governs this case. [WILLIAMS, J.—What do you say to the 6th clause, which provides that the pauper is to continue the servant of the employer when the pit is laid off work?] That applies to a part of the Christmas holidays only; not to the ordinary working days. In R. v. St. Helen's Auckland, the contract was to work constantly at the pit; and therefore in that case the settlement was upheld; but whenever there is a period during which the pauper cannot be compelled to work, the hiring is exceptive, and confers no settlement. (R. v. Cowper, 5 Ad. & Ell. 333; R. v. Byker, 2 B. & C. 114.) Secondly, there is by implication an exception of Sundays. Every other day is mentioned in the contract, and expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Thirdly, of the fourteen days at Christmas, four of them are not covered by the 6th clause; and the contract is exceptive, therefore, in that respect. No argument can be drawn in favour of the settlement from the stipulation that the houses and employment are to be given up together; because, as there is but one hiring, the power to eject would not arise until the expiration of the period for which the hiring took place.

LORD DENMAN, C.J.—R. v. Gateshead must decide this case, unless the words of the 6th clause are general enough to make the pauper a servant of the employer during the whole time over which the hiring extends. They are calculated to create that impression in the first instance, but upon examination it is clear that they do not refer to the ordinary working days. That being so, there is such a limitation of the hours of work, as in R. v. Gateshead was held to constitute an exceptive hiring.

COCKER v. MUSGROVE and MOON.

8 Anne, c. 14.—*Payment of rent under an execution. The true construction of the 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, is, that where the sheriff in possession under a f. fa. receives notice, as well as the execution creditor, of rent being due (not exceeding one year), it is not his duty to proceed to a sale, unless the execution creditor first of all pays the rent to the landlord, whatever may be the supposed value of the goods seized.*

Quære, whether notice to the execution creditor is necessary to justify the sheriff in not proceeding?

In an action for a false return, the declaration stated that there were goods out of which the defendant might and ought to have levied. One of the pleas traversed that allegation. The facts were, that five executions came into the sheriff's hands, that there was rent due from the execution debtor, of which the several plaintiffs had notice, but no one of them chose to pay the rent. The sheriff returned these facts; the jury found that there were goods sufficient to pay the rent and execution, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff under the direction of the learned judge.

Held, upon motion for a new trial, that the return was true, and that under these circumstances there were no goods upon which the sheriff could levy.

This was an action for a false return. The declaration set out that the plaintiff had recovered judgment against one Steinitz, and issued execution thereon. That the writ was duly delivered to the defendants, as sheriffs of Middlesex. Upon being ruled to return the writ, the defendants returned, that before they had received the plaintiff's writ, they had received five other writs of f. fa. indorsed for various amounts; that under them they had seized, and while the goods remained in their hands for want of buyers, they received notice of a year's rent being due; that they gave notice to the several execution creditors, but that no one had paid the rent pursuant to the statute; and that there were no other goods or chattels within his bailiwick whereof he could cause to be made the plaintiff's writ. The indorsement of the declaration averred, that although there were more than sufficient goods to satisfy the said five writs and rents, and whereof the defendants, as such sheriffs, ought to have levied the amount of the plaintiff's writ, and although they had seized more than sufficient, yet they would not levy the amount last aforesaid, and afterwards falsely returned as above-mentioned. The defendants pleaded not guilty, and in the 2nd plea traversed the averment that there were any goods besides the goods and chattels sufficient to satisfy the said writs and rent, whereof the defendants had notice, or could, or might, or ought to have levied the amount of the plaintiff's writ. The action was tried before Mr. Justice Wightman at the sittings after Hilary Term, 1845; and the plaintiff having only proved goods upon the premises and subject to the rent, it was objected by Bovill and Wise, for the defendants, that the plaintiff should be nonsuited, as the effect of 8 Anne, c. 14, was to make it the duty of the execution creditor to pay the rent, and until that was done there were no goods upon which the sheriff could levy. The objection was overruled, and upon the facts the jury found for the plaintiff, that the goods were more than sufficient in value to pay the writs and the rent.

In Easter Term, a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, was granted (supra, 5 Law T. 72), against which, in Hilary Term last (Jan. 11),

Watson, Q. C. shewed cause.—This rule must be discharged. The evidence showed that every thing was done by the sheriff under an indemnity from the attorney of the execution debtor, and the attorney to the defendants in this action. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—That has nothing to do with this question. WIGHTMAN, J.—The sheriff says it would have been a breach of duty to have sold.] The sheriff ought to have levied and paid the landlord, for there were sufficient goods for this purpose, as the jury have expressly found. Wherever actions have been brought for the non-payment of the rent, the sheriff, and not the execution creditor, has been sued. The landlord is not entitled to the goods, but to the amount they sell for, up to the value of a year's rent. [COLERIDGE, J.—I don't see what interest the execution creditor has in selling, unless there be enough to pay the rent.] This is so done in practice, and is the established usage. [WIGHTMAN, J.—What is the strict right? That the practice has been different cannot affect that.] The sheriff has no business to remain upon the premises, as he would be liable to an action, at the suit of the debtor. He must therefore sell, although it may be admitted, for the purposes of the present case, that he ought not to remove. The cases against the sheriff are where the removal has taken place, without payment of the rent. And this is the view taken by the Court of Exchequer, in Riseley v. Ryle, 11 M. & W. 16; where Parke, B. says: "The duty is cast upon the sheriff to take care that the goods are not removed, he having notice that rent is due." [PATTERSON, J.—Suppose he sells, would not the vendee remove without payment of the rent. COLERIDGE, J.—Money had and received will not lie against the sheriff by the landlord. (a) Calvert v. Joffe, 2 B. & Ad. 418, which was cited when this rule was obtained, is distinguishable, for it was merely an application to the Court for leave to pay money into court. Both Lord Tenterden, C. J. and Parke, J. speak of it being wrong to remove the goods; but here the question is, ought he not to have sold? [PATTERSON, J. referred to the other parts of the judgment in that case.] The sheriff must not allow the removal before payment. The position now contended for would place the sheriff in great difficulty. [PATTERSON, J.—All the cases may perhaps turn on this, that there the sheriff did not follow the words of the statute. It appears to be the duty of the execution creditor to pay. Is there any plea to raise the point?]

Bovill.—The second plea is, that there were no goods besides, &c. whereof the sheriff could levy.

Watson.—That is not the proper mode of raising it.

Bovill and Wise contra.—It is clear that this question is properly raised by the pleadings. The traverse, that there were no goods whereof the sheriff could levy, means, no goods applicable to the plaintiff's writ; and if the construction of the statute put by the defendant be correct, there would be no goods applicable, for none could be sold until the rent was paid. Drew v. Lainson, 11 A. & E. 529; Stubbs v. Lainson, 1 M. & W. 728; Windle v. Freeman, 11 A. & E. 539, shew this to be the meaning of the word "levied." Heenan v. Beans, 1 D. N. S. 204, is to the same effect. The sheriff here says he was prohibited from realizing the plaintiff's writ by a sale, because the rent was unpaid. It is sufficient here to shew that he is not obliged to sell; although the words of the statute seem to prohibit even the taking of goods liable to rent. But at any rate he cannot sell. Calvert v. Joffe, in 2 B. & Ad. 418, is a strong authority in favour of the defendants. The goods had been sold under a f. fa. and removed without the year's rent being paid, for which the landlord sued the sheriff. He offered to pay into Court the whole proceeds of the sale, which did not equal the rent, but the Court refused to permit this, holding clearly that the rent should have been paid first. Lord Tenterden, C. J. says: "The statute seems to contemplate that the execution creditor should pay the rent." [PATTERSON, J.—Had the sheriff here required any execution creditor to pay the rent? Did he put himself upon the statute?] Yes. [WIGHTMAN, J.—There was no evidence of that.] It is distinctly alleged in the return that the execution creditor had notice: and it is admitted by the declaration. [COLERIDGE, J.—Under what words do you say he is prohibited from realizing?] Upon the whole statute. [PATTERSON, J.—If a landlord does not interfere, why should a sheriff refuse to go on; there are no express words of prohibition?] It may be that notice is requisite, but according to the strict literal meaning, he is prohibited from taking. The Courts, indeed, have put a construction different from the exact words. Thus, in Riseley v. Ryle, 11 M. & W. 16, Parke, B. says: "It is clear the statute does not mean the original taking, but that there shall not be a substantial taking for the satisfaction of the debt, that is by the removal and sale of the goods without payment of the rent." The plaintiff here is seeking to impose an unfair liability upon the sheriff. It is not his duty to assess the value of the goods, nor is he bound by the value he states in the return. Chambers v. Coleman, 9 D. P. C. 594. Yet the plaintiff would in effect compel him to do so, for here the goods being of very uncertain value, he is to be answerable because the jury found they were of greater value than he thought. Had he sold, and the proceeds been insufficient, the cases shew that he would have been liable, although he paid over the whole proceeds to the landlord. [PATTERSON, J.—The sheriff relied upon the supposed value of the goods, and this is a mere afterthought, used for the purposes of defence.] Wise.—This objection was taken upon the very first occasion, and in the only way that it could have been taken. It could not have been raised by demurrer, for, until the plaintiff had closed his case, the defendants did not know but that he relied upon there having been some other goods which they could have seized which were not liable to the rent, or upon these premises. It happens, indeed, that the jury found that the value of the goods was more than sufficient to pay the executions and the rent; but it was not a question for them at all. It is a bare question of law arising upon the words of the statute. Unless this construction be given to the statute, it would be a useless enactment. The preamble and all its provisions shew that it was intended to benefit the landlords, and give them some rights they did not before possess; and it is only by this construction that any such right is given. Before the statute the goods could not have been distrained while in the hands of the sheriff, but if they remained there after the sale by him, they would become liable just the same as the goods of any other stranger. They would cease to be in the custody of the law, and the vendee could bring trover for them. It is said on the other side that the sheriff may sell but not remove. The fallacy in this argument is, that the removal is not the act of the sheriff, but of the vendee, and if the property is to be sold subject to a right of distress, who would become the purchaser? Take, for instance, a chattel of great value. The words of the first section are, that the goods shall "not be taken upon any pretence whatever," and the benefit given to the landlord is, that before the tenant's goods are sold he shall have the preference to the extent of a year's rent. The difference between a sale by distress, and a sale by the sheriff, is very great, and the landlord might incur a serious loss by the damage thus done to the tenant's property. Had the legislature intended otherwise, it would have been easy to have said the sheriff shall sell, and out of the proceeds shall pay the landlord, and the surplus, if any, to the execution creditor. But it is materially different. The party at whose suit the execution has issued is to pay the landlord, and then he may proceed to execute his judgment as he might have done before the act, i.e. without reference to any claim of rent; shewing, therefore, that the act has deprived the execution creditor of his rights, pro tanto, and given the advantage to the landlord. Nor does he ultimately lose, for the sheriff is to repay him the amount so paid to the landlord. The only difference is, that the execution creditor, and not the sheriff, is to estimate the value of the goods, and act accordingly. This is the grammatical meaning of the statute, as well as the plain intention, and it must be followed. It is said, indeed, that the practice has been different, but, as already has been observed in the course of the argument, this very disregard of the words of the statute has frequently brought the sheriff into positions of difficulty. It will be seen, however, that there are numerous authorities in support of this view, and not one against it. Thus the marginal note to Henchell v. Kimpson (2 Wills), is, a landlord is entitled to one year's rent before a defendant can sell upon an execution for costs on a nonsuit. Pratt, C. J. there said: "Before this statute execution took place of all debts that were not specific liens, even of rents due to landlords; it was thought hard that landlords should not have something like a specific lien, so the Parliament have given them this remedy for one year's rent, but for no more, because vigilantibus non dormientibus jura subveniunt. Neither a plaintiff or defendant has any right to go upon the premises; the law gives this entry to the sheriff only by virtue of the execution, but after he has notice of rent being due to the landlord he cannot remove the goods before he has satisfied the landlord one year's rent; the landlord shall have the like benefit of distress for one year's rent, as if there had been no execution at all. Unless the rent be paid, the sheriff must quit, and, if he does not quit, a special action on the case lies against him after notice of the rent due." "The bailiff in this case became a wrongdoer immediately after he had notice of the rent due." So in Palgrave v. Windham, 1 Str. 212, which was an action against a bailiff for executing a f. fa. and removing the goods before the landlord's rent was paid, it was admitted in argument that such a return as the present would have been good. This is important, as it was argued in the 6 Geo. 4, soon after the statute. In Rothery v. Wood, 3 Camp. 24, where the question turned upon the effect of the landlord consenting to the goods being sold, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. said: "In future it will be better for landlords to have their rent before they suffer their tenants' goods to be sold in execution." In Stuart v. Whitaker, 2 C. & P. 100, this very return was adopted. In Calvert v. Joffe, already cited, Mr. Justice Littledale observed: "The Act of Parliament says that no goods shall be taken in execution, unless the execution creditor shall pay a year's rent to the landlord of the premises; in point of practice, perhaps, the rent has been paid to the landlord by the sheriff, and not by the execution creditor, but the words of the Act of Parliament are clear." This view was also expressed by Patterson, J. in Windle v. Freeman, 1 G. & D. 93, as cited in Riseley v. Ryle, 11 M. & W. 20. (See also Foster v. Hilton, 1 D. P. C. 35.) So also the legislature have considered it in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 67, by which the landlord's "claim to goods" seized in execution is now limited in some cases to a shorter period than twelve months. The confusion between sale and removal has already been noticed. [COLERIDGE, J.—In one case it was held, that a bill of sale was a removal] (a). Wise.—Yes; but that case was examined and overruled recently in Smallman v. Pollard, 1 D. & L. 901; still the view now contended for was supported by Tindal, C. J. in his judgment. As there the point is properly raised, and the words of the statute are clear, while the authorities in favour of this construction, are opposed by nothing but the practice, it is submitted that the rule must be made absolute; for even if there be a doubt about it, there should be an opportunity for a bill of exceptions to be tendered.

(a) His lordship probably referred to Green v. Austin, 3 Campb. 246.

Cur. adv. vult.

In Trinity Term (June 10) the judgment of the Court was delivered as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—This was an action against the sheriff of Middlesex, for not levying under a writ of f. fa. The declaration stated that there were goods out of which the defendant might and ought to have levied: one of the pleas traversed that allegation. The facts were, that five executions came into the sheriff's hands; that there was rent due from the execution debtor, of which the several plaintiffs had notice; but no one of them chose to pay the rent. The sheriff returned those facts; the jury found that there were goods sufficient to pay the rent and execution, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff under the direction of the learned judge. The defendants contend, upon the true construction of the statute of 8th Anne, they were not bound or at liberty to sell the goods until the rent was paid by one of the execution creditors. The practice, undoubtedly, has been very general for the sheriff to sell in such cases, and out of the proceeds to satisfy the landlord in the first instance, and if he does so sell he is liable to an action if he does not pay the landlord. Many cases shew this is not necessary. Some will be found cited in Windle v. Freeman, 11 A. & E.; and the statute is still more discussed in Riseley v. Ryle, 11 M. & W. 16. In the latter case, Parke, B. says: "Construing the Act as it has hitherto been construed, it means that the sheriff is not to remove the goods until the rent has first been paid by somebody; if he does, he is liable to an action at the suit of the landlord, for whose benefit the Act of Parliament was made." It is plain that the advance should be made by the execution creditor. If he neglects to make it after notice of rent being due (and it is not necessary to say whether notice be requisite), the sheriff cannot be called upon to sell the goods, let the value be what it will. Until the rent be paid, there are no goods out of which the sheriff is bound to levy, that is, bound to sell. We are, therefore, of opinion that the rule for a new trial in this case must be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

Re THE JUSTICES OF DENBIGHSHIRE.Power of magistrates to exclude attorneys from audience at Quarter Sessions.*Magistrates at Quarter Sessions have full power to regulate the practice of their own Court; and this Court, therefore, refused a rule for a certiorari to bring up an order of a Court of Quarter Sessions, directing that attorneys should not have audience when four barristers were present.

Sir F. Kelly, S.G. moved for rule to shew cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue to the justices of Denbighshire, to bring up an order made by them in January last, confirming an order made on the 6th of July, 1845, whereby it was directed that in the Court of Quarter Sessions for that county, attorneys should not have audience if there were four barristers present. The question intended to be raised is, whether the magistrates had a right to exclude attorneys from audience. It is submitted that they have not. Since the passing of the Welch Judicature Act, attorneys had been heard exclusively at these sessions, except when, on some particular occasion, barristers had been taken there on special retainer. This course of proceeding continued till July of last year, when some barristers, having before attended the sessions, the magistrates made the order in question. It is admitted, with respect to magistrates exercising a summary jurisdiction, that they have complete authority in matters of practice in their own courts. The case of Collier v. Hicks (2 B. & Ald.), is an authority for that proposition; but even there Lord Tenterden referred to the want of the regular attendance of barristers at distant places, and the pressure of expense, which parties might, in some instances, be unable to bear. That last observation is one of peculiar force in these small courts, and in consideration of that, it may well be argued, that this exclusion of attorneys from acting as advocates ought not to be sanctioned.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—It appears to me that the rule is most important that all courts of justice have full power to regulate their own practice. The exception to that rule arising from occasions of convenience, as stated by Lord Tenterden, does not appear to me to apply to this case, or to cases like this. The argument in favour of permitting attorneys to be heard because of the smaller expense, would apply here, as well as in other courts, and would apply not only in favour of them, but in favour also of those who would attend for still smaller charges than attorneys. Such an argument would be equally good in all cases whatever. We sit here to try causes which are often of very small amount; but that itself is no reason why attorneys, or persons who would accept even still smaller remuneration, should be entitled to audience as counsel. In my opinion, it is necessary, for the interests of all, that there should be orders, and privileged orders, in courts of justice. In saying this, it is not necessary in any degree to interfere with the discretion of each Court in the exercise of its undoubted power of regulating its own practice. That discretion has been exercised here with a reasonable limitation. That limitation is, that without there is a sufficient provision of barristers present, the attorneys shall be heard. If, instead of the limit being four, the justices had said sixty, the reason now relied on, that of expense, would have been equally good, for the poor man would have found equal difficulty in employing one barrister out of the larger as one out of the lesser number. I think that that reason is not sufficient to satisfy us that the order should be quashed, and I am therefore of opinion that the rule ought to be refused.

PATTERSON, J. concurring,

Rule refused.

REG. v. POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS.Workhouses—4 & 5 W. 4, c. 76, s. 23.*The 23rd section of the Poor Law Amendment Act requires the consent of a majority of the board of guardians, or of the ratepayers, to any order for building workhouses. This means, the board of guardians, of any union, or single parish, created a union under section 39.*The Court, in refusing a rule for a certiorari to bring up an order made upon this construction of the Act, granted the Poor Law Commissioners their costs of shewing cause in the first instance.

Martin, Q.C. (with whom was C. Clark) moved for a rule for a certiorari to bring up a certain order made by the Poor Law Commissioners for the erection of a workhouse for the parish of Kensington. The facts agreed on between the parties were that Kensington had formerly been part of the Hammer-smith union, but was now a union of itself. The order was made with the consent of "the majority of the guardians," but not with the consent of the majority of the rate-payers and owners of property entitled to vote, as, it is submitted, sec. 23 requires. By sections 21, 38, and 39, only the general powers are given to the board of guardians, of a single parish, and not that of building a workhouse, which is provided against by sec. 21. That must be done by the consent of the majority of the ratepayers, where there is not a union of several parishes. There are some express directions in the statute, as to the guardians of such a union as this (sec. 38), and, therefore, the general words in sec. 23 must be qualified. There is a distinction between guardians of a union, and guardians of a parish. (Reg. v. Justices of Surrey, 6 A. & E. 883; Reg. v. Lambeth, 2 New Sess. Cas. 68.)

The Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, and Tomlinson, appeared to shew cause in the first instance, but were not called upon.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—It is not at all necessary to do violence to the construction of this statute for the purpose of refusing this motion. The proviso at the end of sec. 21 enacts that nothing therein shall give the commissioners power to alter or build workhouses, save and except such powers as are given expressly by this Act. Then the 23rd section gives power to build workhouses by and with the consent of a majority of the guardians of any union, or with the consent of the majority of the ratepayers. I quite agree that each is to be referred to each, and that the statute points out two separate modes of doing that. In the one case the parish is to be called on to assent through a majority of the ratepayers, that is, if they are not governed by a board of guardians. But there is a specific provision in the 39th section, that where a single parish is governed by a board of guardians, such board shall in like manner and in all respects act as a board of guardians for united parishes. Where there is no board of guardians the ratepayers must determine as to the workhouse, but the guardians where there is a board of guardians.

PATTERSON, J. concurred.

Rule refused.

The Attorney-General then applied for costs, although the commissioners had appeared, in the first instance, under sec. 106. By sec. 107, if the rule had been granted and the order sustained, they would have been entitled to costs. After some discussion the Court granted the costs.

Costs granted.

WALL v. PICKERNELL.

Costs.

Where the executors of the claimant in an Interpleader Act, to prevent money being paid out of Court, caused a foreign attachment to be served upon the Masters of the Court, the Court made a rule absolute for them to pay the costs of the proceedings rendered necessary thereby.

Wilkes shewed cause against a rule calling upon certain persons to pay the costs which had been rendered necessary by their attorney having issued a foreign attachment against the Masters of the Court, and so prevented certain moneys being paid out of Court under an Interpleader Issue. He contended that being executors only, and not actual parties to the record, costs could not be awarded against them, unless there had been any actual contempt; and that this was only a mistake on the part of their attorney, and as to legal rights. (Evans v. Reece, 2 Q. B. 334; Hayward v. Gifford, 4 M. & W. 194.)

Jervis, Q.C. contra.—As far back as the time of Comberbatch, was it decided that the process of foreign attachment would not lie against the Masters of the Court, which is, in effect, against the Court itself; and the parties have here interfered, so far as to render themselves liable.

FANCOUR V. THORNE.A promissory note contained the following sentence: "and I have lodged with Mr. Thorne the counterpart leases granted by me to A B, C D, &c. as a collateral security for the said 500l. (the amount of the note and interest)." Held, that it did not therefore require any other than the usual note stamp.

A rule had been obtained by Butt, Q.C. for a nonsuit, on objection that the note declared on was improperly stamped. It was in the usual form, but with this additional sentence, "and I have lodged with Mr. Thorne the counterpart leases granted by me to A B, C D, &c. as a collateral security for the said 500l. (the amount of the note) and interest," and it was contended that this rendered the note inadmissible, being only stamped as a note.

Maynard now shewed cause.—This sentence is in no respect a qualification of the note, nor need it be looked at or used for the purposes of this action. Even if looked at, it is not a document requiring a stamp. It is not an agreement, but merely a statement of a past fact. Wise v. Charlton (4 A. & E. 786); Williams v. Gerry (10 M. & W. 306); Smart v. Nokes (6 M. & G.); Reed v. Deane (7 B. & C. 361); Evans v. Pratt (1 D. N. S. 505); Beechey v. Westbrook (8 M. & W. 411); Wroughton v. Turtle (11 M. & W. 561) were cited.

Butt, Q.C. contra, referred to Robertson v. Showler (14 L. J.) and contended that the document was an agreement within the Stamp Act, as being evidence of an agreement to charge lands.

By the COURT.—It is not even evidence of an agreement binding in itself, and no stamp is requisite.

Rule discharged.

AMELET V. BRUCK.Foreign bill of exchange.*A foreign bill of exchange stated the sum to be cent vingt quatre livres sterling, deux pence. At the top of the bill was written 124l. 0s. 2d., but a line was drawn through this, and at the side was put 122l. 2s. The acceptance was, in English, "for one hundred and twenty-two pounds, two shillings." It was declared on as a foreign bill for 122l. 2s.—Held, that it was rightly declared on as a foreign bill for that amount, and, therefore, did not require a stamp.

This was an action against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, drawn in Paris, and declared upon as a bill for 122l. 2s. At the trial the bill was produced, when it appeared to have been originally drawn for cent quatre vingt livres sterling, deux pence. A line was drawn through the quatre, and at the top of the bill 124l. was marked through, and 122l. 2s. written. Across the bill, in English, was written, "accepted for one hundred and twenty-two pounds, two shillings."

Humfrey, Q.C. thereupon objected that it required a stamp, the alteration having made it an English bill. A verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the objection, and a rule nisi had been obtained for a nonsuit (supra, 227), against which Hoggins shewed cause.

Humfrey, Q.C. and Tapping, contra.—(Bathe v. Taylor, 15 East; Taylor v. Morell, 6 C. & P.)

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—The plaintiff draws a bill for the sum which he supposes is due to him from the defendant, and the defendant accepts for what he says is the correct sum. The plaintiff makes no complaint of this, but treats it as an acceptance for the smaller sum. I think he is quite entitled to do this, and there was no alteration in any material part.

PATTERSON, J.—It is not like Knight v. Clements (8 A. & E. 215), for there was nothing upon the face of the bill to explain the alteration. Here, if it needed any explanation, the bill itself affords it. But I see no reason why it is to be inferred that the alteration was not made in Paris, in which case it is admitted that no stamp would be necessary.

REG. v. DOBSON.Costs—Parties grieved.*The Court will not refuse costs of an indictment under 5 & 6 Wm. 3, c. 11, because the expenses have been partly or wholly paid by subscription.*Where costs are ordered to be paid by several defendants, an attachment may issue against any one for non-payment, without any affidavit that the others have been applied to for payment.

Baddley moved for a rule nisi to set aside an attachment which had been issued against Sutton, one of the defendants, found guilty in this indictment for a nuisance (see Law T. 168) for non-payment of costs according to the Master's allocatur. This attachment has issued improperly, and upon insufficient materials. The parties claiming the costs had their expenses paid by subscription, and although it has already been decided that this was no objection against a side bar rule for taxation of costs, yet it prevents these parties issuing an attachment. (Rees v. Cook, 1 M. & R. 526.) [Lord Denman, C.J.—That has been a good deal doubted of late.] They are not parties grieved, within the statute, as the grievance stated in the affidavit is different from that laid in the indictment. Then the costs were taxed against all the defendants, and application should have been made to all, before an attachment was issued against one.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—Mr. Sutton is one of the defendants, and there is no necessity to demand payment of the others. As to the other point, we recently considered it (see R. v. Williams, 3 Law T. 220), and we see no reason why a subscription for the purposes of the prosecution should benefit the defendants. Here the parties grieved were the prosecutors, and it is sufficiently shewn.

REG. v. EAST LANCASHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.Second application.

Archbold applied for leave to move for a mandamus to this company, to assess damages for severance of land, the former mandamus having been discharged for nonconformity with the rule nisi. (See supra, 228.) This was not a second application upon new materials, but the mistake arose entirely from the brief being indorsed simply rule nisi. No other affidavits but those then used are now proposed to be used.

The Court granted a rule nisi; an affidavit of the circumstances of the mistake to be made.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

POWLES, PUBLIC OFFICER, v. PAGE.

Since the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 96, a banking co-partnership is in the nature of a corporation, and notice to one of its members is not notice to all.

C D was a director of a banking company under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 96, and a member of a trading firm of A B and Co. Although a director, C D had nothing to do with the actual management of the accounts of the bank, which were under the management of three managing directors. A B having retired from the firm of A B and Company:

Held, that C D's knowledge of this fact was not constructive notice to the banking company.

This was an action brought by the public officer of the Liverpool Banking Company, and was stated in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court. The defendant was sought to be charged with debts incurred by a co-partnership, of which he had been a member, but from which he had withdrawn in July, 1842. At that time the firm was indebted to the banking company, but considerably more than sufficient to pay the debt then due had since been paid into the bank by the new firm, although, in the course of their dealings, they had overdrawn their account. Dixon, who was one of the co-partnership at the time of the defendant's withdrawal from it, was a director of the bank, but the case found specially that that fact gave him no part in the management of the bank, which was conducted by a resident manager, not a shareholder, named Wilson, and three managing directors. The case further found that Dixon had never mentioned to any of the directors of the bank, that the partnership was dissolved. The other facts of the case, that are important to this report, appear in the judgment.

tiff, referred to 1 & 2 Vict. c. 96; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 85; Hill v. Manchester Water Works (5 B & Ad. 866); Stead v. Dunn (12 M. & W. 655); Duncan v. Chamberlayne (11 Sim. 123); Re Style (Turn. & Phil. 105); Thompson v. Spiers (14 Law J. N.S. 453 Ch.).

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J.—This was an action of assumpsit, brought to recover the balance of a banking account. The declaration contained counts for work and labour, and commission, with the money counts. The defendants pleaded first, non-assumpsit; secondly, payment; thirdly, that the defendant was sued as one of a co-partnership, carrying on business under the name of "Grantham, Page, and Company," consisting of the defendant, John Grantham, and Wm. Dixon; and that at the time of the commencement of the suit, the co-partnership had a set-off against the banking company; fourthly, that the defendant had retired from the said co-partnership, which was thenceforth carried on under the name, style, and firm of "John Grantham and Company," of which the banking company had notice, and that there was an agreement between the banking company, and all the members of the firm of Grantham, Page, and Co. that the banking company should accept John Grantham's company as their debtors for the sum due from Grantham, Page, and Co. and should discharge the defendant from all liability for such sums; and that such agreement was performed; fifthly, as to the sum of 3,177l. 6s. 4d. accord and satisfaction, by the delivery of two bills of exchange amounting to that sum. The replication joined issue on the first plea; traversed the second and third; denied the act of performance mentioned in the fourth plea, and also the agreement to accept and receive the bills mentioned in the last plea. This cause came on to be tried before me at the sittings in London after Hilary Term, 1844, when it was agreed between the parties, that no question should be submitted to the jury, but that the facts should be stated in a special case for the opinion of the Court, who should have power to draw any inference the jury might have drawn, and direct the verdict to be entered on the several issues joined. The case was argued before us during the last Term, and the Court took time to consider the several points of law which were under discussion. The principal question in the case was whether the banking company had either actual or constructive notice of Page's withdrawal from the firm of Grantham, Page, and Company, before the debt sought to be recovered was contracted. We think it clear the facts stated in the case do not warrant the inference that the banking company actually knew of the dissolution of partnership between Page and the co-partners, and indeed it was hardly contended by my brother Byles that such an inference could be fairly drawn. But the main argument was that Dixon, one of the firm of Grantham, Page and Co. was a shareholder in the Liverpool Bank, and that what he knew must in point of law be considered as known to the banking company. It has been held that notice to a principal is notice to the agent, because it is the duty of the principal to give notice to his agent. See Parker v. Ramsbottom (3 B. & C. 267.) In like manner notice given to the Bank of England in London has been held to operate as notice to the branch banks; at all events, from the time when the information is given to transmit to them. Willis v. The Bank of England (4 A. & E. 21.) But those cases are obviously distinguishable from the present. The banking company and an individual shareholder cannot be considered as bearing the relation to each other of principal and agent. The cases of Porthouse v. Parker (1 Camp. 82), and Jackall v. Finch (12 East), bear a greater resemblance to the present case. In those cases it was held that where a firm consists of several persons, the knowledge of one is the knowledge of all; and such being the established rule of law, the real question in this case is, whether Dixon is or is not now to be considered as a member of an ordinary banking co-partnership; for if he is, the knowledge acquired by him would be binding on him as a partner in the banking company, and he could not sue Page for a debt contracted by Grantham, Page and Co. after Dixon knew that Page had been withdrawn from the firm.

We are of opinion that a joint-stock banking establishment, under the provisions of the 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, and the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 96, and suing in the name of a public officer, is not to be considered as an actual company, but as a quasi corporate body, and such joint stock company is not affected by that which may be known to each individual shareholder. The public officer represents a fluctuating body, suing for the existing body of shareholders, who may be different persons from those who were so at the time when the cause of action accrued; and this opinion is confirmed by what fell from Mr. Baron Parke in Stead v. Dunn (12 M. & W. 655), although unnecessary to decide the point in the case. It was pressed upon us in the course of the argument, even assuming that to be the law, yet, as Dixon was a member of the board of directors, the company must be affected by that which was known to him, but as the case states he had not, as a director, any management or interference in the banking arrangements, we think the circumstance of his being a director makes no difference in this respect. The plaintiff, then, is entitled to a verdict on the first issue of non-assumpsit; and as it appears to us the facts stated do not make out any of the defendant's special pleas, as to which indeed no argument was offered before us, the verdict must be entered generally for the plaintiff for the balance sought to be recovered.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

June 6 and June 8.

HILL v. KITCHING.

1. By the custom of the trade in London, a broker procuring a charter-party for a ship owner is entitled to a commission of five per cent. upon the value of the freight provided for in the charter-party, whether the vessel ultimately be loaded according to the charter-party or not.

2. By the custom of the trade, if A, a broker, introduce B, another broker, to a shipowner, in order that a charter-party, which B has the power of procuring, may be effected with the shipowner, A is entitled to half the commission paid to B by the shipowner in respect of procuring the charter-party. In an action against the shipowner for the commission payable to the broker for effecting such a charter-party, under such circumstances:—Held, 1st, That B only is the proper person to sue, and not A and B jointly; 2nd, That A is a competent witness for B under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85.

This was an action of assumpsit for work and labour, care, diligence, services, and attendances done and performed by the plaintiff, as a ship-broker for the defendant, at his request, in and about causing and procuring certain persons, trading under the firm of Messrs. Hills and Aldridge, to enter into a certain charter-party with the defendant, &c.

Plea, non-assumpsit, except as to 4l. 15s. as to that sum payment into Court.

At the trial before Tindal, C.J. at the sittings in London after last Easter Term, it appeared that the plaintiff was a ship-broker, and that having received instructions from Messrs. Hills and Aldridge to procure a ship for them, he went to another broker named Cramond, and was by him introduced to the defendant, who was a shipowner. After some negotiation, which was conducted by the plaintiff, a charter-party was entered into between Messrs. Hills and Aldridge and the defendant, whereby the defendant agreed that he would proceed to Ichaboe and load by his servants a full and complete cargo of guano, free from dirt and rubbish, and that his ship should therewith proceed to Cork or Falmouth for orders, and thence to some port of discharge, &c. He further undertook to deliver his cargo at the rate of 4l. 15s. per ton of 90 cwt. if the vessel reached Cork or Falmouth before April 30, 1844, but at the rate of 4l. 12s. 6d. per ton if she did not arrive until that day or later. And the charterers bound themselves to pay for every ton delivered, in the same way. The registered tonnage of the vessel was 328 tons, but it was proved that she was capable of taking a heavier cargo than that. The vessel did not return until after April 30th, and then only brought a cargo of about 80 tons. The plaintiff claimed remuneration for effecting the charter-party, and he called a number of witnesses who proved that it was the custom for the brokers upon effecting a charter party to receive a commission of 5 per cent. upon the freight. It was said to be usual not to receive the commission on the homeward freight until the return of the vessel, but it was also said that the broker was entitled to his commission immediately, and that it was a mere act of courtesy to allow the payment to be deferred. And two instances were deposed to, in which the broker had successfully maintained his right to immediate payment; one of them being a case in which the claim was enforced at law. The sum paid into Court, with some previous payment, covered the commission upon the cargo which actually arrived, and it was contended by Manning, Serjt. that that was all to which the plaintiff was entitled. It was urged as a proof of this that it must be uncertain what cargo the vessel would bring, and whether she would arrive before or after the 30th of April, so that the commission could not be ascertained until the vessel's return. Tindal, C.J. overruled the objection, but reserved leave to move to enter a nonsuit. One of the witnesses in support of the plaintiff's case was Cramond, and being examined on the voir dire, he deposed that by the usage of the trade he was entitled, from having introduced the plaintiff to the defendant, to half the commission; and it was thereupon objected, first, that he ought to have been made a co-plaintiff; next, that he was an inadmissible witness under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85. These objections were overruled, and a verdict found for the plaintiff, damages 115l. 12s. Manning, Serjt. having obtained a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered, or why there should not be a new trial on the ground of the improper reception of evidence.

Kingleake, Serjt. (with him M. Smith) shewed cause.—The broker is entitled to his commission, at all events. All that the defendant wants is to have his vessel put into a condition for bringing home a cargo. If the merchant brought back nothing, the shipowner would still be bound to pay. If the voyage were abandoned, that would be no answer to the ship-broker's claim for commission. The earning of freight is no condition precedent to his right to recover. (Reed v. Wright, 10 B. & C. 438; Broad v. Thomas, 7 Bing. 99.) There is evidence in the case, that it is the practice to pay as soon as the charter-party is executed. The fact that this charter-party is in an unusual form, will make no difference. Then, Cramond could not have joined in suing. All that he does is to give the plaintiff some information. It matters not whether any other broker interferes, the person who brings the parties together is entitled to the commission. (Burnett v. Boucher, 9 C. & P. 620.) It is merely some private understanding, or some trade custom, by which Cramond would be entitled, ultimately, to demand of Hill some proportionate remuneration. Lastly, with regard to his competency as a witness. This is just one of the cases that Lord Denman's Act was intended to meet. The words in the proviso to 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, "Any person in whose immediate and individual behalf," cannot apply to Cramond. Supposing the plaintiff to have succeeded, it would still remain as a distinct matter to be proved, whether Cramond could demand any thing of him. He referred also to Sinclair v. Sinclair, 13 M. & W. 640.

Manning, Serjt. (with him Warren), in support of the rule.—First, there was no evidence to shew upon what commission could be calculated. This case has been put as if it were a contract for the sale of guano. [MAULE, J.—If the vessel were lost upon the voyage home, do you say no commission would be payable? Or if half the cargo were thrown over in a storm, would the broker be entitled to half his commission only?] The amount of commission is rendered doubtful by the uncertainty of the cargo, and the uncertainty of the time of arrival. This is not like the case of an ordinary charter-party. Here, the charterers are not bound to load a full cargo, or even a cargo of any kind. That is to be done by the shipowner. Next, the plaintiff was primarily employed by Hills and Aldridge. Cramond was employed by us. The evidence shows that, by the custom of the city of London, where one broker introduces another, they divide the brokerage. [TINDAL, C. J.—Cramond says, in his evidence, "I only look to Mr. Hill. I am to receive half the commission from Hill, if he recovers it. I have no demand upon Mr. Kitching. My claim is upon Hill." That is his mistake in the law. This action is brought, in part, for his "immediate and individual benefit," within the meaning of Lord Denman's Act. By the custom of the trade, the plaintiff will, if he recovers, become a trustee for Cramond. The case of Sinclair v. Sinclair, which establishes that a prochein ami and his wife are good witnesses, has no application.

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears, to me, that this verdict ought not to be disturbed. The first ground of objection is, that the plaintiff has no right to recover, on the ground of the uncertainty of the sum to be recovered; that uncertainty depending upon the amount of the cargo which the ship brought home, and also upon the uncertainty of the time of her arrival. But let us look to the position of the parties. Hill is a ship-agent, and the defendant a ship-owner. This is really an action upon a quantum meruit, for work and labour done. The plaintiff sets up that he is entitled to such a sum as is usually paid under similar circumstances, and which is calculated according to the benefit which the ship-owner is likely to receive. All the cases cannot be accurately the same, and cannot tally in all particulars with the case under consideration. General evidence was given that in such cases the ship-brokers are entitled to five per cent. on the freight, and although, from the courtesy of dealing, the sum due is oftener not paid until after the freight is earned, still there is evidence that it is considered by brokers to be due upon the execution of the charter-party, and a specific instance was adduced in which payment had been enforced at the earlier period. Then it is said that you cannot apply that to this case, which is not altogether of the ordinary kind. Perhaps not, rigorously, but still it is evidence for the jury, from which they may determine the amount. As to the uncertainty with reference to the amount of the cargo, the plaintiff is entitled to recover something as soon as the charter-party is executed; and the sum to which he is so entitled ought not to be liable to be cut down by the conduct of other parties. If the ship were lost he would still be entitled to something; if the ship brought home nothing he would be still entitled, and a multo fortiori, if, as was the case here, a cargo of some kind is actually brought. So, also, with regard to the other uncertainty, viz. that if the vessel arrive before the 30th of April, the defendant is to be entitled to 2s. 6d. a ton more than if she did not arrive until after that date. At all events it is quite clear that the plaintiff is entitled to his commission upon the smaller sum, unless, which is the position which I think is not sustainable, the earning of freight was a condition precedent to his receiving any thing. I think, therefore, that upon the point reserved there is no ground for a nonsuit. The other ground is either that Cramond ought to have been a co-plaintiff, or, that his evidence was inadmissible. But there was in reality no privity of contract between him and the defendant. If there was no privity of contract between them, it would only be to insist upon the right of nonsuitorship, the plaintiffs to require that Hill and Cramond should be joined. Cramond almost begins his evidence by declaring that he has no claim upon the defendant; that his demand is against Hill, the plaintiff. Next, is he within the proviso in Lord Denman's Act? The words of the proviso are, "that this Act shall not render competent any party to any suit, action, or proceeding individually named in the record;" and it then goes on to specify some persons exactly in the same position as to interest, although not named on the record; "any lessor of the plaintiff, or tenant of the premises sought to be recovered in ejectment, or the landlord or other person in whose right any defendant in replevin may make cognizance, or any person in whose immediate and individual behalf any action may be brought or defended, either wholly or in part." Is this witness in a parallel situation with any of these? If the plaintiff had made over to him the amount of the sum to be recovered, I should say that he was a person "in whose immediate and individual behalf the action was brought;" but that is not so. He has a claim against him upon a sub-contract, but he has no right to lay his hand upon the sum recovered. There was no evidence that Cramond had urged Hill to bring this action, or that he was liable for the costs of it. He would have brought his own action against Hill for an entirely different claim.

COLTMAN, J. concurred.

MAULE, J.—I think there has been, on the part of the defendant, some misapprehension of the effect of the evidence. It appears that the plaintiff was employed by the defendant, and did certain work. To obtain compensation for this the present action is brought. He shews that he did the work in the employment of the defendant; that proves that he is entitled to some compensation. Then the question is, how much? The plaintiff calls a number of witnesses, who say that the sum to which he is entitled is a definite amount, which is usually paid to brokers procuring the execution of a charter-party. In cross-examination, they say that the ordinary form of a charter-party is not like this; but it does not follow that for procuring such a charter-party to be effected the plaintiff was not entitled to compensation. If there were no charter-party in the knowledge of any of them except for freight in the strictest sense, yet from evidence of what is paid for effecting such charter-parties, the jury may fairly infer what this labour is worth. We are not now construing the charter-party, but this distinct contract to pay a fair price for work and labour done in procuring it to be effected. If it be once admitted that the plaintiff would be entitled to something if the vessel were lost, it follows that the earning of freight is no condition precedent, and in no wise affects his right in the present action. Indeed, if the right of the broker to his commission were always to depend on the return of the vessel, the broker would be, to a certain extent, an insurer, which would be very inconvenient. He must then be paid an additional sum for his risk, and it would be found a much more inconvenient practice than that of insuring in the regular way. Further, Cramond had no right to sue the defendant either alone or jointly with the plaintiff. If Hill had sold shoes, and Cramond recommended him to customers upon an agreement that he should have a per centage, Hill of course would have been the only person entitled to sue for the price of the shoes. Lastly, the proviso in Lord Denman's Act is to incapacitate both the formal plaintiff on the record, and the substantial plaintiff in the action, but Cramond was neither of these.

Costs—Judge's order.

Where a Judge's order was made, "that the issue in the cause should be amended," and "that the plaintiff should pay 13s. 4d. costs" to the defendant: Held, 1st. That the defendant was entitled to the costs, whether the amendment was made or not; and, 2ndly, That a demand of the costs having been made, and not complied with, the defendant was justified in making the order a rule of Court, and was entitled to the costs of so doing.

In this case an order had been made upon the 2nd of April by Cresswell, J. to the following effect:—"I do order that the plaintiff amend the issue herein by making it agree with the declaration, and that the plaintiff pay to the defendant, his attorney, or agent, the sum of 13s. 4d. costs." A copy of this order was drawn up by the defendant's attorney, dated April 4th, and served upon the plaintiff's attorney, together with a demand in writing of the payment of the costs awarded. The costs not having been paid, the defendant's attorney, on April 21st, made the order a rule of Court. At the taxation of costs thereupon, the Master refused to allow the defendant the costs of making the order a rule of Court, and allowed him only 13s. 4d., the sum named in the judge's order. On a former day Dowling, Serjt. had obtained a rule to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation; against which

C. Jones, Serjt. now shewed cause.—The plaintiff was never served with the judge's order, which was actually made. He was served with the copy of an order dated April 4th, whereas no order at all was made on that day. The order made April 2nd was not served on him, or he would, in all probability, have complied with it. [MAULE, J.—You were served with a document in the form of a judge's order, and bearing a judge's signature. That was a judge's order, though there might be a mistake in it. The date had nothing to do with it.] Then upon the construction of the order; two things are ordered by it,—the amendment of the issue, and the payment of 13s. 4d. costs. The two things are dependent upon each other. It was the defendant's order, not the plaintiff's. The document to be amended was in the hands of the defendant, and it was his duty to take it to the plaintiff and require him to make the amendment. Instead of doing so, he merely applied for the 13s. 4d. Until the amendment was made there was no claim for costs at all, and there having, therefore, been no default, the defendant had no right to incur the additional expense of making the order a rule of Court.

CRESSWELL, J.—My intention certainly was what the order expresses, that the defendant should have his costs, whether the amendment was made or not.

Dowling, Serjt. in support of the rule, was not called on.

Rule absolute.

SIEVEKING and ANOTHER v. DUTTON.

Pleading—General issue.

To an action for breach of an agreement to receive and purchase divers large quantities of wool, it is a good plea that the wool was to be delivered correspondent to a sample at the time of the agreement produced and shewn to the defendant, and that the goods which the plaintiff offered, and which the defendant refused to accept, were not equal to the sample.

Special assumpsit upon an agreement by the plaintiff to furnish, and the defendant to receive, divers large quantities of wool, to wit, 131 bales, &c. to be purchased by the defendant upon certain terms, to wit &c. with stipulations for discount in case of early payments. The declaration contained an averment that the plaintiffs tendered and offered to deliver the said goods to the defendant according to the terms of the said contract, and assigned as a breach the defendant's refusal to receive or purchase or pay for the said quantities of wool. The defendant pleaded (in substance) that at the time of ordering the wool and making the said promise the plaintiff produced and shewed him a certain sample, and promised to deliver the said quantities of wool according to the sample, and that the defendant ordered the said wool and made the said promise upon the faith and terms of the wool agreeing with the sample, and that the wool tendered did not agree with the sample.—Verification.

The plaintiff demurred on the grounds that the plea amounted to the general issue, that it was an informal traverse of the plaintiff's tender, and that it was double.

Dowling, Serjt. in support of the demurrer.—Under the New Rules the plea amounts to the general issue. It does not directly deny the contract alleged in the declaration, but sets up a contract inconsistent with it. (Morgan v. Pebrer, 3 Bing. N. C. 457; Nash v. Breeze, 11 M. & W. 352; Heath v. Dwan, 12 M. & W. 438.) If the plaintiff is bound to prove a tender, it is not such a tender as required by the plea.

Channell, Serjt. for the defendant.—It is not contended that if this were an action of indebitatus assumpsit this plea would be good; but here there is an express contract laid in such a manner that it is not safe for the defendant to deny it. The New Rules says, that "the plea of non-assumpsit shall operate only as a denial in fact of the express contract or promise alleged, or of some matters of fact from which the contract or promise alleged may be implied by law." [CRESSWELL, J. referred to Parker v. Palmer (4 B. & Ald. 387). If this had been a case of goods already sold and a refusal to accept, I should be with you. Here the contract is to supply and to receive divers quantities of wool. Would not that be satisfied by a supply of any wool whatsoever? If it is to be a sale upon the terms of agreeing with the sample, is there not a new condition introduced into the contract?] It would be so in an indebitatus assumpsit, but not in a case of this kind. Here the defendant has two defences, but by his plea he elects to depend on one of them. He says first, that it was a sale by sample; and secondly, that the wool tendered did not agree with the sample. The first defence is pleaded only as introductory, and as an inducement to the second. [MAULE, J.—That would be a great recipe for curing double pleas—to say that the first half was only inducement.] In Stephen on Pleading, p. 296, it is said, "No matter will operate to make a pleading double, that is pleaded only as necessary inducement to another allegation. Thus it may be pleaded that after the cause of action accrued, the plaintiff (a woman) took husband, and that the husband afterwards released the defendant; for though the coverture is itself a defence, as well as the release, yet the averment of the coverture is a necessary introduction to that of the release." [MAULE, J.—That would be so where the defence cannot be set up otherwise.]

Douling, Serjt. replied.

The Court, after a few minutes' consultation, were about to give judgment, when Douling, Serjt. prayed leave to amend.

Leave to the plaintiff to amend on the usual terms.

EVANS v. WATSON.

Stay of proceedings—Costs—Witnesses.

Where a judge's order has been obtained to stay proceedings until a given day in Term, to give time for an application to review the Master's taxation: if the Court grant a rule they will stay proceedings until cause shown, even though no notice of the motion has been given.

Where a defendant has obtained an order for putting off a trial from one assizes to another, and afterwards obtains an order to stay the action, upon payment of a certain sum and costs, the plaintiff is entitled to the costs of detaining a witness in England from the time of the postponement until the time of settling the action, even though he had obtained an order to examine the witness upon interrogatories, which order, in consequence of better advice, he has declined to act upon.

This was an action brought upon a charter-party to recover the sum of 2,356l. for not shipping a cargo of guano according to covenant. Notice of trial was given for the Summer Assizes in the year 1845, but upon the application of the defendant, a rule was made absolute upon payment of 1,600l. into court to postpone the trial until the Spring Assizes, 1846, on the ground of the absence of a material witness for the defendant. The trial was accordingly postponed, and in the month of February 1846, shortly before the Assizes, the defendant obtained an order that, upon the payment of 2,536l. and costs, all further proceedings should be stayed. Shortly after the rule for the postponement of the trial was made absolute, the plaintiff obtained an order for the examination of a certain witness who was about to leave England upon interrogatories, but the plaintiff's attorney, acting under the advice of counsel, subsequently thought that it would be more beneficial to the plaintiff's case that the witness should be detained in England, and examined in the ordinary way at the trial. The order for his examination was therefore abandoned, and the witness detained in England. On taxing the costs of the action, the plaintiff had claimed 150l. 4s. 2d. as the expenses of this witness, and the Master had allowed 97l. 14s. 2d. which, subject to a small deduction in respect of costs already paid by the defendant, was at the rate of 7s. a day from the time of his being subpoenaed until the date of the order for staying all further proceedings. Upon the 6th day of Term, Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation. He produced an affidavit of the foregoing facts, and also that, during the interval between the postponement of the trial and the final settlement, the witness had been employed by the plaintiff in various services, such as lading goods, and the like, at Liverpool. At the same time he moved that in the mean while all proceedings should be stayed. He admitted that no direct notice had been given to the plaintiff, but in the course of the preceding vacation, a judge's order had been obtained to stay proceedings until the fifth day of Term, in order to give time for an application to the Court for a review of the Master's taxation, and subsequently that order had been enlarged until the seventh day of Term. The order, however, was silent with regard to any application to stay execution.

The Court thought that sufficient notice had been given, and granted the rule to shew cause, with an order that in the meanwhile all proceedings should be stayed.

Channell, Serjt. now shewed cause.—He produced an affidavit from the plaintiff that the sum of 150l. 4s. 2d. had been actually paid to the witness, and that although the witness had occasionally been employed in the Liverpool Docks, he had worked as a volunteer, and had received no payment. In Loneragan v. Royal Exchange Assurance (7 Bing. 725, 729), it was held that the successful party was entitled to the expense of detaining a foreign witness in this country to await the trial of a cause, although opportunity was afforded for examination upon interrogatories. There the witness was detained from the 17th of September, 1829, until the 17th of February, 1830. So in Mount v. Larkins (6 Bing. 195), the Court allowed a charge for the witness's subsistence from the time of his being subpoenaed until the trial, although that was a period of six months. In both those cases, the Court held that the parties were not bound to examine a witness upon interrogatories where his appearance at the trial, and a vide voce examination in the hearing of the jury was likely to be more beneficial. Berry v. Pratt (1 B. & C. 276), is to the same effect, although there the witness was an Englishman living in his own house, but detained from a voyage in order that he might be in readiness. In White v. Brazier (3 Dowl. 499), the Court would not send a case back to the Taxing Master for disallowing a claim for wages, as he had allowed liberally for subsistence and travelling expenses.

Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule. [TINDAL, C. J.—Have you any authority for the position that the parties are bound in such a case to proceed by examination upon interrogatories?] No; the application of that mode of obtaining testimony has been borrowed from the proceedings in a court of equity, and is of very modern date, but neither party has a right to incur unnecessary expense, and then charge it upon the other side. Loneragan v. The Royal Exchange Assurance (1 B. & C. 725) is no authority now upon this point, because at the time the circumstances of that case took place, there was no power to issue a commission and examine either by interrogatories or otherwise. The same remark applies to many other cases. (Temperley v. Scott, 1 Mo. & Sc. 601.) Here the plaintiff by obtaining an order for examination upon interrogatories showed that that was the proper course to adopt.

TINDAL, C. J.—This is an action brought to recover a large sum of money, 2,356l. and the defendant delayed the trial by an application for postponement. He has since then admitted his liability, and paid the money. It was a favour to the defendant to put off the trial, and it is not to be wondered at that the plaintiff did all he could to secure the attendance of his own witnesses, and to present them at the trial in the mode which he was advised was most favourable for the suit. If there had been a wanton keeping of a person in England, without regard to the plaintiff's protection, the case would have been different. Here, from the act of the defendant, it was necessary to detain him. I think the plaintiff was justified in keeping him here, and that the Master's taxation is right.

COLTMAN, J.—We ought to grant all reasonable costs to the successful party, and I do not think that these costs are unreasonable.

MAULE, J.—The parties ought to be allowed with some liberality to exercise a bond fide judgment, whether the same effect is likely to be produced by interrogatories as by an examination in open court. Here it seems to me that the plaintiff would have acted most unwisely if he had not detained the witness, and that he is fairly entitled to the costs of detaining him.

CRESSWELL, J.—In Berry v. Pratt (1 B. & C. 276), the Master allowed the subsistence money from the writ to the time of trial, and the Court thought that it was quite a proper allowance. We must not scan too nicely the discretion that is exercised in considering the respective advantages of a vide voce examination in Court, and an examination upon interrogatories.

Rule discharged with costs.

Friday, June 12.

FINDLEY v. FARQUHARSON.

Semble, a defendant succeeding upon a plea of coverture is entitled to some costs.

Quære, whether she is entitled to costs out of pocket only, or to costs generally.

In this case the defendant had pleaded a plea of coverture, upon which issue had been taken and a verdict found for the defendant. The Master had refused to allow her any costs on the ground that in this Court it was not the custom to allow costs to a married woman, defendant in an action.

On a former day in this Term, Douling, Serjt. had obtained a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation, against which, Byles, Serjt. shewed cause.—The practice in this Court has been not to tax a feme covert her costs under such circumstances. As she is not liable for other costs, it is not reasonable that she should receive them. [MAULE, J.—Suppose she has separate property, and charges that with a debt with a view to providing for the expenses of a cause?] That might form ground for a special application. In Wortley v. Rayner (2 Doug. 636) it seems to have been thought necessary to join the husband in a fi. fa. sued out upon a judgment for the defendant, a feme covert, and then the writ was set aside as not being in conformity with the judgment. The stat. 23 Hen. 8, c. 15, only gives the defendant costs in cases where a plaintiff would have them. But the case of a feme covert plaintiff presents even greater difficulties than this. It is understood that in the Irish courts a feme covert defendant is allowed her costs out of pocket only, and that is also the rule here in the Queen's Bench.

It was ultimately determined that it should be referred to the Master to ascertain what the rule was in the other Courts, and to tax the defendant her costs accordingly.

Rule accordingly.

Ex parte BRUCE FRAZER.

Under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, ss. 8, 9, the Court has a discretionary power; and therefore where, in the affidavit filed under s. 8, the attorney filing described himself as "one of the attorneys of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas," but omitted to swear distinctly that he had been duly admitted, the Court allowed a supplemental affidavit of his admission to be filed, and allowed the service of the clerk to be reckoned from the time of the execution of the articles, although more than six months had elapsed.

Talfourd, Serjt. applied on behalf of Mr. Bruce Frazer, an articulated clerk to a country attorney, for leave for the attorney to file with the proper officer a supplemental affidavit of his having been duly admitted, and that the service of the clerk might be reckoned to commence and be computed from the day of the execution of the articles. It appeared that Mr. Frazer had been bound by articles in writing to serve the attorney as a clerk, and that within six months of the execution of the articles, the attorney had filed an affidavit under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 8, of the execution of the articles, in which he had described himself as "one of the attorneys of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas," but had omitted to state distinctly, as required by the Act, that he had been duly admitted. Talfourd, Serjt. now proposed to file a supplemental affidavit by the attorney, "that he was duly admitted an attorney of this honourable court in Trinity Term, A.D. 1812;" and he also prayed that the service of Mr. Frazer might be computed as if this affidavit had been filed in the first instance. The 9th section of the statute provides that the requisite affidavit may be filed more than six months from the execution of the articles; but that in that case the service of the clerk shall be reckoned to commence from the day of filing the affidavit, unless one of the courts of law or equity shall otherwise order. Here more than six months had elapsed; but it was sworn that, at the time of filing the original affidavit, the attorney was not aware of the terms of the new Act of Parliament, and it was submitted that it was a proper case for the exercise of the Court's discretionary power.

By the COURT.—We think this a reasonable application. Application granted.

WRIGHT v. BURROUGHS.

Practice—Attorney—Pauper.

Where it appears to the Court that a compromise has taken place between a plaintiff, a pauper, and a defendant, in order to prevent the attorney of the plaintiff from obtaining his costs, the Court will set aside any proceedings that have been taken to render the compromise available for the purposes of defence. Such proceedings are not matters of irregularity, and therefore, although the application to set aside a plea, pleaded under such circumstances on the 22nd of April, was not made until the 8th of June: Held, that the application was in time.

In this case the plaintiff had been admitted to sue in forma pauperis. Several issues, both in law and in fact, had been raised by the pleadings, none of which had been determined. The issues in law stood in the paper for argument on April 22nd, but on that day, before the Court sat, the defendant delivered a plea of release, pleaded pais darrein continuance. The case was accordingly struck out of the paper, but on the 8th of June, in the present Term, C. Jones, Serjt. had obtained a rule to shew cause why the plea pais darrein continuance should not be set aside, on the ground that it had been pleaded by collusion between the plaintiff and the defendant to deprive the plaintiff's attorney of his costs; and upon another ground, which it becomes unnecessary to report.

Douling, Serjt. now shewed cause.—He produced an affidavit, from which it appeared that the plaintiff had written to the defendant, protesting that "he did not wish the lawyers to get any thing out of the matter," and offering, "that, if the defendant would release him from all costs, he would release his claim upon the defendant." This offer was accepted, and the release accordingly executed and pleaded. In ex parte Hart, re Tovey v. Payne (1 B. & Ad. 660), where the defendants obtained a release from the plaintiff after notice of trial, and pleaded it pais darrein continuance, no fraud being shewn, the Court refused to interfere. [MAULE, J.—Here the plaintiff is a pauper, who applies to the Court for assistance. They appoint him an attorney to do his work for nothing, except in the event of his obtaining a verdict. Then if there is to be a compromise, he loses all prospect of getting any thing at all for his labour. In any other case the attorney may get the costs from his client.] [TINDAL, C. J.—What induces the attorney to undertake the case? Is it not the spes spoli resulting therefrom? The pauper cannot take a step without the certificate of counsel, and that is an additional assurance to the Court and to the attorney that the pauper has a good cause of action.] Then this application comes too late. The plea is pleaded April 22nd. The plaintiff's attorney takes no step for nearly two months, and then comes and asks to set it aside. This case ought to stand upon the same footing as an irregularity, and any objection, if not speedily made, he held to be waived. [TINDAL, C. J.—This is not a case of irregularity, but of collusion. I do not see how the defendant can be hurt by the delay.]

C. Jones, Serjt. in support of the rule.—The attorney is entitled to some indulgence. The plea of release came upon him by surprise, and he had a right to take time to advise with counsel, and consider the course to be adopted. He swears that his costs out of pocket are more than 30*l.* and that he was advised he should have succeeded upon the demurrer, in which case his costs would have amounted to 100*l.* This is not a question of irregularity, but of fraud.

TINDAL, C. J.—It is only a very strong case that can justify a compromise when the plaintiff is a pauper. All that the attorney has to look to in such a case for his remuneration is the result of the suit. Generally a release from the plaintiff to the defendant, without the knowledge of the plaintiff's attorney, is a strong sign of collusion; but here, from the circumstances, there seems no doubt that there was the intention imputed. It is not desirable to make the situation of attorney for a pauper such that no man of credit will take it at all, which will be the case if we are to suffer a pauper plaintiff to deceive his attorney, and oust him of costs in this manner. This is not like a case of irregularity governed by certain rules, as to the time at which advantage is to be taken. The only effect of an earlier application would have been that the plea of release would have been taken off the record a little sooner.

The rest of the Court concurred. Rule absolute.

OLLIER v. TODD, LAURIE, CHAPLIN, and OTHERS.

The Court has no power under the Interpleader Act to protect the sheriff by staying an action of trespass for breaking and entering brought in respect of circumstances accompanying the seizure of goods to which the title was disputed, and has been adjusted by proceedings under the Interpleader Act.

This was an action of trespass for breaking and entering certain apartments of Mary Ollier, the plaintiff. It appeared that the defendant Todd had recovered judgment against one Magee, and had issued a fi. fa. thereon, under which the sheriff of Middlesex had entered the apartments of the plaintiff, and seized certain goods, for which she served a claim. A summons was taken out under the Interpleader Act, and, subsequently, an order was made to restore the goods to the plaintiff, upon her paying 30*l.* into Court, to abide the event of an issue, Ollier v. Todd. These proceedings, as well as the action of Todd v. Magee, were in the Court of Exchequer. Upon the day appointed for trial, Todd, in open court, repudiated the proceedings, and a verdict was found for Mary Ollier, the plaintiff in the issue. After this the present action was commenced in this court against Todd, the execution creditor, Laurie and Chaplin, the sheriffs of Middlesex, and others. On a former day Channell, Serjt. had obtained a rule to shew cause why all further proceedings as against the sheriff should not be stayed, on the ground that the cause of action had already been disposed of under the Interpleader Act.

Byles, Serjt. now shewed cause.—There is no precedent for an application of this kind. The plaintiff has recovered her goods and obtained the compensation for their seizure to which she is entitled, but she has got no compensation for the breaking and entering of her house. Where the sheriff enters the house of a debtor, and seizes goods that are not the property of the debtor, he is protected by the Interpleader Act. This is a case where he enters a house which is not the house of the debtor. If this motion succeed, it will follow that he may enter any house on speculation. The stat. 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 58, s. 6, applies only to cases in which the sheriff requires protection from counter-claims to the property in certain goods. Further, this Court ought not to entertain any application in the matter at all. All the previous proceedings have been in the Court of Exchequer, and are, therefore, not subject to the control of this Court.

Sir T. Wilde and Channell, Serjts. in support of the rule.—The Interpleader Act is a remedial measure, and ought to be liberally construed. The 6th section of it, after reciting the difficulties that sometimes arise in the execution of process against goods and chattels by reason of claims made by persons not the parties against whom such process has issued, whereby sheriffs are exposed to the hazard and expenses of actions, enacts, for the relief and protection of sheriffs, &c. in such cases "that when any such claim shall be made to any goods or chattels taken under any such process, it shall be lawful for the Court from which such process issued, upon application of such sheriff, &c. to call before them by rule of Court as well the party issuing such process as the party making such claim, and thereupon to exercise for the adjustment of such claims and the relief and protection of the sheriff, all or any of the powers and authorities before contained, and make such rules and decisions as shall appear to be just according to the circumstances of the case." These words draw down to them all the previous sections, and together vest in the Court, or in a judge, powers quite large enough to meet this case. This is, substantially, the same evil as the Act affects to remedy; the form only is changed. The action is brought for that kind of trespass which is peculiar to the seizure of goods. The intention of the legislature will be defeated, and the Act rendered nugatory, if these proceedings are not stayed. [CRESSWELL, J.—Suppose the sheriff, with an execution against

A enters B's house and takes the goods of C. Then there are interpleader proceedings between the execution creditor and C, and the goods are found to be the property of C. Would that prevent B from having an action against the sheriff for breaking and entering his house? TINDAL, C. J.—The interpleader rule would have disposed of the question as to the goods, but nothing further. If that had been urged before the judge making the order, he would have declined to make it. [MAULE, J.—He would have made an order as to the goods.] No. The sheriff would have preferred to stand by his common law liabilities. [MAULE, J.—In ordinary cases the only question is as to the goods. The Act was not intended to protect in extraordinary cases.] Then as to the Court to which the application should be made. The Act would be a nullity if the parties had only to go to a different Court from that in which the order was obtained. [MAULE, J.—Could an order in another Court stay proceedings in this Court? All the proceedings under the Interpleader Act were in the Court of Exchequer. What jurisdiction has any other Court?] Every Court has a general jurisdiction over proceedings in its own Court, although it may exercise that jurisdiction with a reasonable relation to proceedings in another Court. This Court only can stay proceedings taken in this Court. Suppose an interpleader order in the Court of Exchequer, and afterwards an action of trespass de bonis asportatis, or trover brought for the same goods in this Court; it would be perfectly competent for the parties to appeal to the equitable jurisdiction of this Court to stay proceedings. [MAULE, J.—As to an action of trover, there would have been in the interpleader proceedings an adjudication to whom the goods belonged, and the defendant might avail himself of it by plea.]

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears to me that this case does not fall within the terms of the Interpleader Act, and that we have no authority to stay proceedings. The plaintiff has two causes of action: first, a right of complaint for the breaking and entry of her house; and, secondly, a claim to the goods that are seized there. As for one of them, the latter, the Interpleader Act provides a remedy, by empowering the Court or a judge to call before them the different claimants, and to make such order as the justice of the case requires. But the Act is quite silent as to the other injury of breaking and entry. In Semayne's case (5 Cope, 91), it is laid down "that it is not lawful for the sheriff, at the suit of a common person, to break the defendant's house to execute any process at the suit of any subject; for thence would follow great inconvenience that men, as well in the night as in the day, should have their houses (which are their castles) broke, by colour whereof great damage and mischief might ensue; for by colour thereof, on any feigned suit, the house of any man, at any time, might be broke." And therefore, if the sheriff break and enter, he does it at his own peril. Of course, the amount of damages must depend very much upon the circumstances of the case. Here it seems that the place broken and entered is only a separate room in a dwelling-house; the jury will take that into their consideration, and confine their verdict to the measure of the injury sustained. The defendants may, if they think fit, pay money into court, and then the plaintiff will go on at her peril. However, nothing is said in the Act as to the injury sustained by breaking and entry, and we should be taking upon ourselves an authority which we do not possess, if we were to enlarge its application. The case of a sheriff entering into the wrong house is not of daily occurrence, and we must take this case upon the pleadings as if it were a separate house. Unless the plaintiff shews that these apartments were so occupied as that they became domus mansionalis, she will fail, but if she can show this she will succeed. The act is confined in the remedy, which it gives to a claim for goods.

COLTMAN, J.—The defendants are not entitled to the relief which they ask. The interpleader order was in the Court of Exchequer. There is nothing in the terms of it to prohibit this action. But if this action be in violation of the order, they are the proper persons to punish a breach of their own order.

MAULE and CRESSWELL, JJ. concurred.

LANE v. DIXON.—Byles, Serjt. moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and enter a verdict for the defendant, or a nonsuit, or for a new trial. The action was trespass, and the defendant having justified under a demise, the plaintiff replied a prior demise from August 30, 1845, to Sept. 29, in the same year, and thence from year to year. The demise proved was from Aug. 30, for a year, and so on from year to year. 2nd. The plaintiff charged breaking and entering certain apartments. The evidence was that defendant was in the adjoining passage, and prevented plaintiff from entering the apartments. (Hartley v. Moram, 3 Q.B. 701; Bird v. Jones, 15 Law J. N.S. 82, Q.B.) 3rd. The declaration had further charged the taking a certain brass plate of the plaintiff's. There was a plea of not possessed. It was submitted that upon the evidence defendant was entitled to a verdict on this issue; and that upon it defendant might arrest the judgment. (Bennett v. Alcott, 2 T.R. 166; Taylor v. Cole, 3 T.R. 292.) Rule to shew cause.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

RODGERS v. MAW.

Where a set-off is pleaded to the whole action, and proved as to part only of the amount proved by the plaintiff, such set-off may be applied in reduction of the plaintiff's demand, though there are no other pleas proved which form an answer to the residue. Where an execution has been levied against a surety in an action upon the security which he had given for another, and the money paid over to the plaintiff by the sheriff, the surety may maintain an action for money paid against his defaulting principal, and, therefore, he may also prove the same facts under a plea of set-off for money paid in an action brought against him by his principal.

This case was argued in the Court of Exchequer two years ago, and in consequence of that lapse of time, and of a change in our reporters, we are prevented from giving the argument, which we regret the less, as the judgment itself contains every material point, and all the authorities.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C.B.—This was an action on a bond with a penalty of 4,000*l.* conditioned for the payment of 2,000*l.* by different instalments. The defendant pleaded a set-off, on which issue was joined. At the trial before my brother Rolfe, at the Liverpool Spring Assizes, 1844, it appeared that the periods of payment had all elapsed, and 1,725*l.* remained due, which was claimed in the action. The defendant's set-off was under these circumstances: the two plaintiffs and the defendant had been partners; they agreed to dissolve the partnership in January, 1840; the two plaintiffs agreed to take all the debts on themselves, and to release the defendant from all liability as to the joint concern; and this was the consideration for the bond upon which the action was brought. We have no doubt that this amounted to a covenant to pay the debt, and that, as between the plaintiff and the defendant, the defendant became a surety only. The plaintiffs, however, did not pay all the debts, but the defendant was sued with them by the holder of a bill for 1,700*l.* dated in December 1839, drawn by one of the plaintiffs on the firm. Before this action was brought, the defendant had paid to the holder of the note three sums of 500*l.*, 500*l.* and 60*l.* amounting to 1,060*l.*; a sum of 443*l.* had been paid by the sheriff under an execution against the defendant's goods, in an action at the suit of the holder of the note. At the trial, a verdict was taken for the sum claimed in the action, namely, 1,725*l.* and leave was reserved to the defendant to move to reduce the amount to 216*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.* or such sum as the Court should, under the circumstances, direct. Mr. Knowles accordingly obtained a rule to shew cause in Easter Term, which was argued before my brothers Gurney and Rolfe, and myself, in Easter Term. Two points were made on behalf of the plaintiffs; first, that as the set-off proved did not cover the plaintiff's demand, the plea was disproved, and could not avail in reduction of damages; second, that as part of the set-off consisted of money levied under an execution against the defendant's goods, and not paid by the defendant directly in money, it could not be made the subject of set-off as money paid; and the case of Moore v. Pyrke (11 East, 52) was cited as an authority on that point. With respect to the first point, there is no set-off at common law; it is merely under the statutes of set-off, and the question turns upon the construction those statutes have received of ought to receive. The first statute is 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, s. 13, amended and made perpetual by the 8 Geo. 2, c. 24, ss. 4 and 5. The expression in the last Act, that "in case the plaintiff shall recover in any such action or suit, judgment shall be entered for no more than shall appear to be truly and justly due to the plaintiff, after one debt being set against the other, &c." imports that a set-off, if pleaded and proved, shall prevail in reducing the amount, though it may not wholly cover the plaintiff's demand. In Collias v. Collias (2 Burr. 820), Lord Mansfield, in the argument, threw out that set-off, under the 8 Geo. 2, must have the same effect as payment under the 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 11, and when, after deliberation, the Court gave judgment, it was expressly held that a set-off was equivalent to actual payment, and that a balance must be struck, as in equity and justice it ought. We believe this exposition of the statute has been acted upon ever since in Westminster Hall, and has not been doubted, unless the mistaken report of the case of Tuck v. Tuck (7 Dowl. P. C. 373), more correctly reported in 5 M. & W. 109, is an exception. It is contended for the plaintiff that if the plea of set-off pleaded to the whole does act as proof over the whole, that it will avail nothing, and not only the defendant cannot have a verdict to the extent of the set-off proved, which is undoubtedly correct, but the set-off, though proved, cannot operate in reduction of damages. We think this cannot be supported upon authority or on principle. The case of Tuck v. Tuck (5 M. & W. 109), cited for the plaintiff from 7 Dowl. shows the defendant cannot have a verdict on the plea of set-off, unless the plea covers the plaintiff's demand, either as it stood originally or as reduced by some other plea; but it is no authority for depriving the defendant of the benefit of the set-off in reduction of damages, for, according to the report in M. & W. stated by the learned counsel in the cause to be a correct report, this benefit was expressly allowed. In Conner v. Paddon (2 Crompt. M. & R. 547), it was held that the plea of set-off was not to be construed strictly; and in Moore v. Bullin (7 A. & E. 595), it was held that a plea of set-off was not divisible, and that if it failed to cover the demand, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict on the whole plea. But there is nothing in that case, or in any of the cases, to shew that the defendant might not have the benefit in a reduction of the damages, although the plea was found against him; and in giving the judgment of the Court in that case, Lord Denman says, although the plea is no bar to the action, the evidence might reduce the damages. In Tuck v. Tuck the set-off was allowed at the trial to reduce the damages, although the Court would not enter a verdict to the amount proved; and in Barnes v. Butcher (9 Car. & P. 728), the same course was adopted. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that, as to the sums actually paid, the set-off must avail in reducing the damages. With respect to the other point, it is certainly decided in Moore v. Pyrke, that where the goods of a party, taken as a distress for rent which ought to have been paid by another, were actually sold, the party injured could not recover as for money paid, though he might have maintained such an action had he paid the rent in money under the pressure of the distress, instead of allowing his goods to be sold. (See Keall v. Partridge, 8 T. R. 308.) The present case is not precisely the same. Here the plaintiff's goods were taken, not under a distress, but under a writ of f. fa. which directs the sheriff to make of the defendant's goods in that action "as much money," and the sheriff has so done; he has made money of the plaintiff's goods, and therewith has paid the claim in the action. The redress by a claim as for money paid is much more simple and beneficial than a special action upon the case, of which this is an instance. Here the plaintiffs sue for the consideration for their promise to indemnify, and the defendant, it is contended, cannot set-off the money paid by the produce of his goods in consequence of the breach of that promise. We cannot see upon what principle a man may not set off money paid by the produce of his goods as well as money paid directly without any sale of goods. If a man's goods are taken by an act of trespass, and are subsequently sold by the trespasser, and turned into money, he may maintain a trespass for the possible injury; or, waiving the former, he may maintain trover for the wrong; or, waiving the last altogether, he may sue for money had and received. In this case the surplus of the sale, after paying the debt, would clearly belong to the party, and he might sue the sheriff as for money had and received, and of which (the residue) the sheriff has paid a debt that the plaintiffs were bound to pay; we think it is at least doubtful whether it be not more in the spirit of the law that a set-off should be allowed in such a case, than that a party should be driven to a special action. In Mercweather v. Nison (8 Tr. R. 196), where an action had been brought against the defendants for a tort, and the damages reviewed were levied, as the report states, wholly on the plaintiff, and he sued as for money paid, it was decided that no contribution could be claimed as between wrong-doers; but neither at the trial, nor on the motion, was it suggested that the action would not lie because the money was levied and not paid, if that was the fact, as may be collected, although not with certainty, from the report. Lord Kenyon in that case said there was a clear distinction between forti and assumpsit, and intimated that the action might have been maintained if the case had been one of contract, and not tort. And it may be observed that this case was not cited at the bar or noticed by the Court in Moore v. Pyrke. With respect to the necessity for the actual payment of money, it may be remarked, that although in Marwell v. Jameson (2 B. & A. 51) it was held that giving a bond to pay is not equivalent to payment, even in Barclay v. Grock (2 Esp. 571), Lord Kenyon decided that if a surety satisfied and extinguished the debt of the principal by giving a note which was unaccepted as payment, he might maintain an action for money paid before the note was due. Upon the whole, we think there is so much doubt in applying the case of Moore v. Pyrke to the present case, or in the principle of that decision, that we think an opportunity ought to be given to the defendant (if he desires it) to put this upon the record by special verdict, or bill of exceptions, which can be easily done by an arrangement between the parties.

Wednesday, June 10.

BOYDELL v. ECKSTEIN.

Under the plea that the defendant did not indorse a bill of exchange, he may give evidence to shew that the bill bearing the indorsements of the drawer, of A B, and of himself, was returned into A B's hands by an arrangement between A B and the defendant, the defendant's name being left upon it by mistake, and that the plaintiff took the bill from A B with notice of these facts.

This was an action against the indorsee of a bill of exchange (tried before Parke, B.), and the question was, whether, under the plea that the defendant did not indorse the said bill, evidence was admissible to shew that the bill, having been indorsed by three parties, viz. Johnson (the drawer), Penelah, and the defendant, had, by an arrangement between the two last-mentioned parties, been returned into the hands of Penelah, the defendant's indorsement having been satisfied, and that Penelah had given the bill to the plaintiff, that he might get the money for it, stating at the same time that the defendant's name had been left on by mistake, and that he was not liable on the bill.

Crowder, Q.C. now moved for a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial, on the ground of misdirection and of surprise, and that the verdict was against evidence. The defence set up at the trial ought to have been made the subject of a special plea, and was not properly received in evidence, under the plea that the defendant did not indorse. This would have been in accordance with the new rules. It is, for instance, quite usual to plead specially that the defendant handed over the bill to a party to get it discounted, and that that party wrongfully indorsed it to the plaintiff. [PARKE, B.—The present case is similar to Master v. Allen (8 M. & W.). Your argument must, therefore, go to impeach that decision.] A negotiable instrument bearing an indorsement by the party sued upon, must be shewn to have been fraudulently put in circulation in order that a valid defence may be constituted. [PARKE, B.—Here the defence is that the defendant's name was not upon the bill animo transferendi, but that it was there by mistake.] Then that defence should have been specially pleaded. [POLLOCK, C.B.—You contend that the matter mixed up with the indorsing should have been set forth. His lordship referred to Pickard v. Sears (6 Ad. E. 469).] Can a man who loses a bill on which he is subsequently sued set up this defence under the plea that he did not indorse? or if he delivers a bill with his indorsement upon it for the purpose of being cancelled, and this bill is lost, must not the facts here supposed be specially pleaded? [PARKE, B.—They might be given in evidence under the plea on this record.] [POLLOCK, C.B.—Here the defendant's indorsement was altogether satisfied.] The learned judge directed the jury, that if they believed Penelah, who was called as a witness, they ought to find for the defendant, and he further told them that, in the event of such a verdict, the plaintiff would have a remedy against other parties, viz. the drawer and acceptor; it is submitted that the learned judge was wrong as to this latter part of his direction, and that there should consequently be a new trial.

POLLOCK, C.B.—So far as the defendant was concerned, this bill was nothing more than a piece of waste paper. It appears by the evidence that the plaintiff held it with distinct notice of this fact, viz. that the defendant's name remained on the bill by mistake; and it further appeared that no consideration was given for that indorsement as it then stood; it was then sufficient to allege that the bill had not been indorsed, and to shew that the plaintiff received the bill with notice of the circumstances under which the defendant's name appeared on it.

ROLF, B.—Marston v. Allen is undistinguishable from this case, and, with reference to the point which has been under consideration, the New Rules have made no alteration in the mode of pleading. Then, on the other point, viz. whether there ought to be a new trial, merely because the judge misdirected the jury as to what the law would be in an action which might be brought by the plaintiff against a different party, I am of opinion that a new trial ought not to be granted on that ground.

PLATT, B.—Here the bill having been indorsed by the defendant for value, was subsequently, and before it was due, returned into his hands, from which it passed, by an arrangement between the parties, to the witness Penelah; the defendant was, therefore, placed in the same situation as when he was first about to put his name to the bill. Besides, there was here no delivery, which is requisite to constitute a good title by indorsement.

PARKE, B.—I am quite satisfied with the verdict delivered by the jury in this case, and think that Marston v. Allen is directly in point. Rule refused.

HAIGH v. PARIS.

Under what circumstances there should be a special count to recover for work and labour, and where the common count is sufficient.

This was an action for work and labour, tried before Mr. Secondary Potter, in which a verdict was found for the plaintiff, with 41. 1s. damages. It appeared that the plaintiff had been engaged to work for the defendant at weekly wages, and the question was, whether the plaintiff could, under the common count, recover damages from the defendant for a breach of contract, the plaintiff not having been allowed by defendant to do the work stipulated for, owing to a disagreement respecting the number of hours per day during which the plaintiff was to work. At the trial, Greenwood insisted that the plaintiff ought to be nonsuited, as he had merely given evidence to shew the loss of time occasioned by the refusal of the plaintiff to employ him according to his contract, and on the ground that there was no count in the declaration specially framed on the contract between the parties. The plaintiff's counsel, however, having declined to be nonsuited, the case went to the jury; and Greenwood subsequently obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Against this rule

Martin, Q. C. and Thomas now shewed cause.—The ground taken in moving for this rule cannot be sustained, this ground being that there ought to have been a special count in the declaration, setting forth the contract between the plaintiff and defendant. Now the rule is, that if a man is engaged at yearly wages, and discharged after a month's employment only, he cannot maintain an action for work and labour until after the expiration of the year for which he was engaged; but if he sues before the expiration of the year he must declare specially. Here there was evidence to go to the jury of a hiring, and the week had expired. [POLLOCK, C.B.—But what evidence was there of work done, and how can the plaintiff recover on the common count without giving such evidence? It seems that the Secondary must have directed the jury to find the value of the time lost by the plaintiff, i. e. must have directed them to find the amount of a week's wages, subject to the opinion of this Court as to the plaintiff's right to recover under this declaration.] There was some evidence to establish the count for work and labour; why, therefore, should not the plaintiff be entitled to recover? [POLLOCK, C.B.—The jury were substantially directed to consider whether the plaintiff was wrongfully discharged or not, but this issue was immaterial on these pleadings.] Then the verdict here being for a sum under 5l. the Court will not interfere on the ground that the verdict was against evidence. [POLLOCK, C.B.—The amount of damages does not matter on a motion for a misdirection.] It was contended that the plaintiff could not recover any thing without a special count, but it is submitted that an engineer, who was sent for into the country to survey a line for a projected railway, might recover on the common count for the time lost by him in going down, if he was subsequently not allowed to make his survey. [ALDERSON, B.—That would depend entirely upon the nature of the contract.—If the contract were for making the survey, then the going down to the place named is incidental to the subject-matter of the contract, and the engineer must bring his action for a breach of the contract, and so recover damages for his work and labour in going down. But if he were in the first instance directed to go down to a particular place, and this was a distinct and separate contract, although the order were given with a view to a subsequent survey, he might sue on the common count for work and labour.]

POLLOCK, C.B.—There ought clearly to be a new trial in this case. Rule absolute.

STEADMAN v. ARDEN.

An allottee of shares in a projected railway company, who is called upon to pay money in respect of the shares allotted to him, is entitled to inspect the subscribers' agreement and Parliamentary contract—those deeds being within the power and control of the other party.

Bramwell shewed cause against a rule obtained by Wiles for an inspection of the Parliamentary contract and subscribers' agreement of the Dublin and Armagh Railway Company; the rule having been moved on affidavits, stating those documents to be within the power and control of the defendant and his attorneys, and that the plaintiff had no copy of the deeds to which he was a party. It appeared that the defendant was a director and provisional committee-man of the railway company in question. Bramwell argued that the defendant had no exclusive power over the deed, but held it in the character of a trustee for other parties; that the action between the parties was not upon the deed, but collateral to it, and that at all events the rule would be granted, if at all, as against the defendant only, and not as against his attorneys. He cited Pickering v. Noyes (1 B. & C. 262); Mayor of Arundel v. Holmes (8 Dowl. P.C. 118); Morroo v. Sanders (3 B. Moore, 671).

Willes, in support of his rule, cited Doe dem. Morris v. Roe (1 M. & W. 207); Charnock v. Lumley (5 Scott, 438); and was then stopped by the Court, who ordered that the defendant should produce the deed for the inspection of the other party, both having an interest in it.

Rule accordingly.

Thursday, June 11.

TART v. DARBY AND ANOTHER.

A, occupying premises of B, tenant to C, entered into an agreement with B and C to become C's tenant at the expiration of B's term. Before that time arrived, C makes an unconditional contract to sell the property to A; the title is objected to by A, and A continues to occupy, paying no rent until C distrains for twelve months' rent under the agreement for tenancy: Held, that the agreement for a future tenancy operated as a lease, and that the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties at the time of the distress, notwithstanding the contract to purchase.

—Stamp.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendants for distraining property of the plaintiff when no rent was due. There was also a count in trover. To this the defendants pleaded not guilty by statute. At the trial the following facts were proved: In October, 1843, one Robert Mountain was tenant to the defendants of certain premises, and the plaintiff wishing to take them, the following agreement was entered into between the parties:—

An agreement entered into the 28th day of October, 1843, between Robert Mountain, of West Bromwich, of the first part; Thomas Darby and William Darby, both of West Bromwich aforesaid, of the second part; and James Tart, of Birmingham, provision dealer, of the third part.

Whereas the said Robert Mountain holds and rents, of and under the said William and Thomas Darby, a messuage or dwelling-house, situate at Mares Green, West Bromwich, with the out-buildings thereto, at the rent of 25*l.* per year, payable quarterly.

And whereas the said Robert Mountain hath agreed with the said James Tart to underlet the said house and premises to him the said James Tart from Monday next at and after the rent of 20*l.* per year, until the 24th day of June, next, at which time the said William and Thomas Darby agreed to exonerate the said Robert Mountain from his tenancy, on his paying all rent up to the said 24th day of June next, and to accept the said James Tart as tenant from that period at the rent of 20*l.* per year, payable quarterly, and under the further provisions hereinafter mentioned. Now therefore the said Robert Mountain agrees to let, and the said James Tart agrees to take, the said messuage and premises from this time till the 24th day of June next, at the rate of 20*l.* per year, free from all deductions, the said rent to be payable quarterly, and such rent to commence from Monday next, and a proportionate rental paid on the 25th day of December next. And the said Robert Mountain agrees to find all materials except lath to put up the partition wall and make good the ceiling, he the said James Tart finding lath and labour. And the said James Tart agrees to take of the said William and Thomas Darby the said messuage and premises from the said 24th day of June next, at the yearly rent of 20*l.* per year, payable quarterly, free of all deductions, and to give or take six months' notice previously to giving up the said premises. And the said Thomas and William Darby agree to release and exonerate the said Robert Mountain from his tenancy on and from the said 24th day of June next, on his paying up all rent due to that time, after the rate of 25*l.* per year.

As witness the hands of the said parties.

The mark of ROBERT MOUNTAIN.

WM. DARBY.

JAS. TART.

On this agreement being signed, Tart entered into possession of the premises, and in March 1844, being anxious to purchase the premises, he applied to the Darbys to sell them to him, which they agreed to do, and signed an agreement in the following form:—
“We, the undersigned, executors of the late William Maybury, agree to sell to Mr. James Tart the property now occupied by him in the parish of West Bromwich, in the county of Stafford, for the sum of 340*l.* The aforesaid executors to be at the expense of the title-deeds.

(Signed)

W. DARBY.

THOS. DARBY.”

Soon after this, on an abstract of title being delivered, it appeared that the executors had only a mortgage term of the premises for 1,000 years, with a power of sale, but not the freehold. Upon this, disputes arose between the parties, Tart asserting that they had undertaken to sell him the freehold, while the defendants contended that the plaintiff knew they had only a term for 1,000 years, which was all they undertook to sell. This dispute went on until June 1845, when, Tart refusing to pay rent, but insisting on the Darbys making to him a title to the freehold, they distrained on the premises for the year's rent. At the trial a verdict was found for the defendants, whereupon Humfrey, Q. C. obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground that the agreement between Mountain, Tart, and the Darbys, did not amount to a lease, but was merely an agreement for one; but even if it was a lease, Tart had a mere interesse termini, until after the expiration of Mountain's term; and as the agreement to sell intervened, there never was a tenancy between Tart and the Darbys, so as to give them a power to distrain.

Whitehurst, Q. C. now shewed cause.—If this was a mere agreement for a lease, I admit, we should have no right to distrain, but it is clear that it is a lease. The question is, what was the intention of the parties at the time the agreement was signed? If nothing remains to be done, it is a present demise; and here it is clear that the parties never contemplated any further instrument being executed, but intended the one signed to be the only one, as far as regards Mountain. This is perfectly clear; and what distinction can be drawn between him and the Darbys? It is clear, that they meant it to be a lease to Tart from the 24th of June, and no other act was to be done by them.

Then comes the question, whether this interesse termini was put an end to by the agreement to purchase in March? This, it is submitted, it is not; there was never any surrender of the term by the lessee, and it never could have been his intention to surrender; if the lessor could not make a good title, there is no distinction to be drawn between this case and one of a valuable lease at a peppercorn rent. Doe dem. Gray v. Stanion, 1 M. & W. 695, is in point, and shews that an agreement to purchase of this kind does not operate as a surrender of a tenancy from year to year. The only difference between that case and the present is, that in that case there was an existing tenancy, and not an interesse termini merely. But then there was an entry here in June to perfect the lease; and if this instrument be a lease, the moment he was in possession he was in under it. Then there is another point, which is, that the agreement for the sale requires a 1*l.* stamp, and when produced at the trial merely bore a 2*s.* 6*d.* stamp, with a 10*l.* penalty, which was insufficient.

Humfrey, Q. C.—That was the fault of the Stamp-office. We wished to stamp with a 1*l.* stamp, and a 5*l.* penalty; but they said it required a 2*s.* 6*d.* stamp, with a 10*l.* penalty under 7 & 8 Vict.

Whitehurst.—That is clearly wrong, as the duty attached before 7 & 8 Vict. came into operation. [POLLOCK, C. B.—This is a case of hardship, no doubt; but we have only to inquire whether a 2*s.* 6*d.* stamp is sufficient. It is clear that it is not. ALDERSON, B.—Why did you keep the good wine to the last? If you had mentioned this before, you would have saved a good deal of time, as it disposes of the whole question.] But this merely goes to a nonsuit, and I would rather keep the verdict.

ALDERSON, B.—Of course, under these circumstances, the Court would grant a new trial to give the plaintiff time to restamp this paper; and I think the proper stamp would be a 2*s.* 6*d.* one, with a 10*l.* penalty.

Humfrey, Q. C. and S. J. Partridge, in support of the rule, contended that Tart was never tenant from year to year of the Darbys, that until June Tart was tenant of a mere interesse termini, which was put an end to by the agreement to purchase in March, so that he was never in under the lease. The entry in June was under the agreement to purchase, which was not completed, owing to the default of the defendants; therefore it was not for them to set off that fact, and force on the plaintiff the condition of landlord and tenant.

POLLOCK, C. B.—This rule must be discharged. We are all of opinion that this instrument is a lease; it is quite clear that it was one as far as regards Mountain, and who can look at it and say that it is not so as regards the Darbys and Tart? It is quite absurd to suppose that they would give up one tenant without getting another; then if so, it is put an end to by the agreement? I think it would be absurd to hold that he is in under an interesse termini; that an agreement of this kind would put an end to the lease. Here when he enters he enters under every term that belongs to him.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion. It is absurd to say that the landlord meant to give up his title against Tart, if the purchase was not completed; the old terms were to be superseded, on the supposition that the new agreement could be carried out; if not, then you must go on as before. There is no hardship in this, for if he has broken his contract as to the sale, you have your right of action for such breach. It then comes to the question of whether this is a lease or not; on that point we must look at the intention of the parties at the time it was made, and it is clear that they meant it to operate as a lease.

Rule discharged.

Friday, June 12.

WALSTAB v. SPOTTISWOODE.

(Argued May 29 and 30.—Decided June 12.)

1. Where the number of shares on a projected railway company, in which the deposits are paid up, is so small as not to justify the provisional directors in proceeding with the scheme; and where the concern is, consequently, abandoned, without issuing scrip or going before Parliament, an allottee who has paid his deposit may recover back the entire amount so paid from the provisional committee, under the common count for money had and received.
2. The letters of application for, and allotment of shares in, a projected railway, do not constitute a partnership in the undertaking as between the allottee and the provisional committee.
3. The allotment of shares in an undertaking which is not carried on in compliance with the terms of the prospectus, and which turns out wholly abortive, forms no legal consideration for the payment of the deposit by the allottee.

This was an action of assumpsit brought by the plaintiff, who was an allottee of thirty shares in the Direct Birmingham, Oxford, Reading, and Brighton Railway, to recover back the amount of deposits paid up in respect of such shares from the defendant, who was a member of the provisional committee of the line in question. The declaration contained a special count, alleging a contract by the defendant to deliver scrip for the shares allotted to the plaintiff, and a breach of such contract; and there was also a count for money had and received. The defendant pleaded non assumpsit, and several special pleas. It is not, however, considered necessary to set out the pleadings at length, because the Court, in delivering their judgment, expressed no decided opinion as to the sufficiency of the special count, nor did the argument or decision turn upon the form of the pleas, but was confined to considering whether the plaintiff could or could not recover the deposit money as money had and received by the defendant to the plaintiff's use. The facts will be found very clearly stated, both in the course of the argument and in the judgment, and it will be only necessary to refer to that statement. At the trial (before Pollock, C. B.) a verdict was found for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, viz. 78*l.* 15*s.* and in Easter Term (Wednesday, April 22), Martin, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered, pursuant to leave reserved by the learned judge, on grounds which will be found stated in the LAW TIMES for the 25th of April last. The Court having granted a rule nisi, Jervis, Q. C. and Willes, now (May 29) shewed cause.—The rule to enter a nonsuit in this case was moved on three grounds—1st, that the two written documents, viz. the letter of application and that of allotment, did not prove any contract on the part of the defendant to deliver scrip; 2ndly, that there was no evidence of any authority given by the defendant which could make him liable on the contract, he being only a provisional committee-man, and the Joint Stock Companies Act not empowering a company to issue scrip before complete registration; 3rdly, as to the count for money had and received, it was contended that the liability of the promoters of an abortive scheme to return the amount of deposits to the subscribers thereto, which liability existed prior to the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, to the full extent of returning the entire deposit money, without any deduction therefrom, has been removed by that Act altogether. The argument on the other side must go to this length, that the promoters are entitled to deal with the funds placed in their hands for the purpose of liquidating preliminary expenses, even where they do not go before Parliament; and that the subscribers are therefore liable to contribute to all the current preliminary expenses of the company, however great those expenses may be. It must be argued, in fact, that the subscribers are jointly liable with the promoters for all such expenses. The question which arises on the first plea is this—whether the allotment of shares to the plaintiff, and the payment to the company's bankers of the deposit on the shares by the allottee, suffice to raise a contract on the part of the defendant to exchange for scrip the letter of allotment and the banker's receipt for the deposit. This question, in fact, turns upon the form of the letter of allotment, and on the constitution and nature of companies such as that referred to. The Court, therefore, will have to determine whether the promise alleged in the first count to have been made by the defendant has been proved; and secondly, whether, prior to the passing of the Joint Stock Companies Act, the money paid by the plaintiff could not have been recovered under the count for money had and received; and if so, whether that statute makes any difference with respect to the plaintiff's right to recover which previously existed. The history of the formation of the company in question seems to have been this:—The commencement of its existence must be taken to date from the 6th of August last, on which day the usual entry was made at the Registry-office. Some slight changes in the name of the company were made subsequently to this entry, and on the 12th of September the prospectus of the company was filed. Then an advertisement appeared, which stated that the prospectus would be issued; and finally the prospectus itself made its appearance. The second name in this prospectus on the list of registered directors is that of the defendant; and the prospectus ends by stating that applications for shares may be made at the offices of the company, and at other specified places. By this prospectus the company, it must be observed, was held out as being duly registered. The next document registered was on the 9th October, being the consent of certain parties to act as provisional directors, and the agreement on the part of two trustees of the company to take one or more shares each in the concern. The advertised capital of the company was stated to be 2,000,000*l.* in 80,000 shares of 25*l.* each; applications were made for 400,000 shares, of which 70,000 were allotted, but of this number the deposit was paid on 4,000 shares only, that is to say, the entire sum paid up was 10,500*l.* only. The plaintiff applied for shares on October 7th, and an allotment was made to her of thirty shares on October 18th, on which shares the deposit money was paid into the bank. The promoters subsequently determined that no scrip should be issued, and that the subscribers should not be allowed to sign the deeds; that, in fact, no step at all should be taken towards carrying out the original objects for which the scheme was got up. No plans were ever deposited under the standing orders, nor were any steps taken for obtaining the Act. The only proceedings indeed took place between August 6th and October 9th, and in answer to repeated inquiries and applications on the part of the plaintiff, she was informed at the office of the company that the directors did not intend to prosecute the undertaking, to issue scrip or to return the amount of the deposits without first satisfying the liabilities incurred. Under the circumstances above enumerated, were the directors bound to return the whole deposits, or were they entitled to deduct the expenses before returning them? With respect to the first count of the declaration, it has been argued that the letters of application and allotment cannot be taken as together constituting one entire contract, and it was further said that the company was never in a condition to issue scrip under the Joint Stock Companies Act, and that, consequently, the defendant cannot be liable on the special count; but by section 23, it is evident that the promoters are empowered, after provisional registration, to allot shares, and when section 24 is taken in connection with that just cited, it will be equally clear that they have power to issue scrip. It will be argued that the power to issue certificates of shares given by section 25 to companies completely registered shows that companies provisionally registered only cannot issue scrip; but a reference to section 51 shows that the certificates mentioned in section 25 are quite different from scrip, and of a peculiar nature, and the conclusion is, that after provisional registration, the promoters may allot shares and issue scrip; the statute, therefore, did not in any way interfere with the performance of the contract which is disclosed on the face of the letters of application and allotment, and the defendant was, consequently, bound to deliver scrip to the plaintiff. The more important question, however, arises on the second count, that for money had and received, and it is submitted, with the authority of Nockells v. Crosby (3 B. & C. 814), and from the observations of Bayley, J. Littledale, J. and Holroyd, J. in that case, that the scheme having failed and proved abortive the promoters were liable to return the entire deposit money paid by the plaintiff, without any deduction. The duty of the promoters was to carry out the projected company according to the terms of the prospectus, and all the authorities shew that the subscribers only agree to become shareholders when the company is actually formed; that the deposit money is, in fact, paid as earnest that the party so paying it will take the number of shares on which it is paid when the company is actually formed. [ALDERSON, B.—The question would, of course, be different, where all the shares have been taken up and paid upon; then surely the shareholders will be liable to bear their proportion of the expenses.] That may be conceded; but here the promoters take the preliminary steps at their own peril. [ALDERSON, B.—There are, in fact, two questions. 1st, Can the promoters take any preliminary steps before all the shares have been taken up and paid upon? 2ndly, Are they entitled to take such steps when all the shares have been paid upon? Is the bargain entered into for the purpose of enabling the promoters to defray the expenses of the preliminary proceedings, or was the money merely paid as earnest that the shares should be taken?] The ten per cent. deposit is clearly paid as earnest money, for the satisfaction of Parliament. [POLLOCK, C.B.—Was the object of the joint stock Companies Act to protect provisional committeemen, or the subscribers, or both?] The cases with reference to joint-stock companies shew that the directors cannot act until the entire fund has been subscribed. The directors have, therefore, made themselves liable for the expenses, according to the law as it existed before the Act; and that Act was not passed with a view to altering the contract of the parties, but for the purpose of regulating the formation of joint-stock companies. Thus, sec. 23 does not enlarge the power previously vested in the promoters; it merely gives them a power to allot shares, and receive the deposits by way of earnest thereon, as well as such further sums as may be required by the standing orders. Then, again, the certificate of provisional registration is obtained by registering the name and object of the company, and the names of the promoters, and there is no provision enabling the shareholders to interfere in any way with carrying on the company before the certificate of complete registration has been obtained. The whole object of the Act is clearly to regulate the formation of joint-stock companies, but not to affect the liability of parties engaging in such companies, or to alter the responsibilities which previously to the passing of that Act attached to them. [ALDERSON, B.—As to so much of the deposit money as is required to be paid into the Accountant-General's hands by the standing orders, it certainly seems to me that this is subscribed for that specific purpose, and cannot be expended by the directors.] Then as to the 2s. 6*d.* per share, being the 10s. per cent. on the amount of such share, it is submitted that this must likewise be returned to the plaintiff. Pitchford v. Davis (5 M. & W. 2); Fox v. Clifton 6 Bing. 792; S. C. 9 Bing. 115; and Lake v. The Duke of Argyll (9 Jur. 295), are equally authorities to shew that the promoters could not apply the 10s. per cent. as to shew that they could not apply the other portion of the deposit money to the payment of the expenses. [ALDERSON, B.—Nockells v. Crosby is an authority for you as to the latter, but not as to the former.] The argument derived from the fact that the whole number of subscribers had not been obtained, is equally applicable to the 10s. per cent. as to the 2*l.* 10s. and with respect to both these amounts it is therefore submitted that the plaintiff is entitled to recover.

Martin, Q.C. F. V. Lee, and Peacock, in support of their rule.—The existence of companies like the present was not contemplated by or known to the law until within a very short period, and decisions with reference to companies differently constituted, and the objects of which were different, must be applied to railway projects with great caution. The object which all parties have in view who enter upon an undertaking like that under consideration, is twofold; it is to give each shareholder a transferable interest in the concern, and to make proprietorship the criterion of responsibility. In Kempson v. Saunders (4 Bing. 5), it was indeed held, that where a company projected for a particular purpose is abandoned without effecting that purpose, there has been a failure of consideration, which entitles a party who has advanced his money on the understanding that such purpose would be accomplished, to recover the money so advanced. In the first place, the decision just cited cannot be upheld, and is now admitted by the whole Profession to be bad law; the principle there laid down would lead to great injustices. Then, secondly, no evidence was here given to shew that the undertaking had been abandoned, for it was not obligatory on the provisional directors to go to Parliament during the Sessions then next ensuing; the case of Kempson v. Saunders, therefore, does not apply. Then, as to the special count, that cannot be supported, because there was no consideration for anything beyond the allotting of the shares to the plaintiff, and those shares have been allotted. The whole consideration having been thus exhausted, no new consideration appears for the promise on the part of the defendant there alleged, viz.: to deliver scrip to the plaintiff. Neither can the count for money had and received be sustained, for a subscriber to a company like this becomes a quasi partner in it; he deposits his money for the express purpose of meeting the expenses and furthering the objects of the company, and he, in fact, becomes a member of a joint partnership concern, the expenses of which ought in fairness, and without any reference to the Joint Stock Companies Act, to be borne by all the subscribers jointly. Two of the cases cited and relied upon on the other side, viz. those of Lake v. Duke of Argyll, and Pitchford v. Davis, are quite correct, but differ from the present. In the first of these the question was as to the expenses prior to the partnership being formed, and the second related to the liabilities of parties after the trade of the company had actually commenced, and while it was being carried on. The other cases were also, it is conceded, quite correctly decided, but are no authorities against the proposition contended for on behalf of the defendant, viz. that here the deposit-money was brought into hotch-pot for the general purposes of the concern, and was, therefore, chargeable with the expenses incurred. [Argument in continuation, May 30.] The committee was not bound to deliver scrip before complete registration, therefore, the contract set out in the first count of the declaration was not proved at the trial. The question is, whether in the powers given to the committee by the 23rd section of the Joint Stock Companies Registration Act, the words "to perform such other acts only as are necessary for constituting the company," gave them a power to issue scrip before complete registration. This, it is submitted, it does not, but even if it did, they are not bound to do so, for it cannot be said that the issuing scrip is in any way an act "necessary for constituting the company." The scrip in itself is mere valueless paper, and confers no title in the holder to claim shares in the company, which can only be done through the allotment. A holder of scrip incurs no liability. (Jackson v. Coker, 4 Bevan, 59.) No liability can be transferred by the sale of it: if it could be held that scrip represented shares, and was in fact the title to the share, a party holding it might transfer to a man of straw, and so get rid of his liability, which is the very thing the legislature has tried to guard against. Then, again, the contract declared on is to deliver scrip certificates on the executing by the plaintiff of the subscribers' contract. This she has not done, but says she was discharged from such execution by the defendant; now it is submitted there was no evidence to go to the jury of any such waiver or discharge; but further, it is submitted that the Court must judge of the agreement between the parties from the documents by which it was sought to be proved, and these (being the letter of application and allotment) shewed that the agreement was respecting "shares," not "scrip." If this were so, then the agreement had been satisfied, for shares had been allotted; the bare fact that the letter contained directions as to where the deposit was to be paid, and as to obtaining scrip, could not make the provisional committee-men liable for not delivering scrip, when they had no power to do so, and they had done all they promised to do by allotting the shares. Then as to the second count, it is submitted that there was here (the moment the money was paid) a quasi partnership; the money went into one common fund, was liable to the legitimate expenses, and the moment any part thereof was properly expended, this action for money had and received could not be maintained; there was no earmarking of the money, but it was all paid in to a common fund, properly applicable to the legitimate expenses; on the other hand, if this be not so, and the parties are not quasi partners, then they stood in the position of separate contracting parties, vendor and vendee; the contract is for the allotment of shares; that contract has been satisfied by the allotment, and the money cannot be recovered back; for this Court will not enter into the question of whether the party has made a wise or foolish bargain; and it is admitted that the undertaking in question was a bond fide scheme. Then, thirdly, it is contended that there is no evidence that the undertaking was abandoned, so as to bring the case within the principle laid down in Nockells v. Crosby; it is clear that there is no necessity to go to Parliament in the first session after the company is formed, and any one of the promoters may insist on the scheme going on; the company is provisionally registered, and that registration lasts for twelve months, which time has not yet expired; and it is submitted that no one subscriber has a right to withdraw his name at any time, and call on the others to pay him back his money; he has no right to do this as long as the provisional registration lasts. [ALDERSON, B.—But here the plaintiff is not an original promoter, but a subscriber to a scheme promoted by A, B, and C; and the question is, whether the external subscribers cannot put an end to the speculation quoad themselves.] It is submitted they cannot, and that the promoters may go on to get the company completely registered. [POLLOCK, C.B.—I think there is sufficient evidence of a statement by one of the directors that they intended to wind up the affairs of the company, pay off the expenses, and return the balance.] But that statement could not bind the other promoters who might choose to go on; now here there were 90 provisional committee-men, who cannot be all bound by the statement of one upon the whole case; then it is submitted that the judgment of the Court must be for the defendant, both on the special count, and the count for money had and received. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C.B. now (June 19) delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was an action of assumpsit. The declaration contains a special count, founded on an alleged contract to deliver scrip; and there was also a count for money had and received. At the trial before me on Friday, the 27th of February last, it appeared that the defendant was a member of the provisional committee of the Direct Birmingham, Oxford, Reading, and Brighton Junction Railway Company, which was registered provisionally, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. The prospectus announced the capital to be two millions, in 80,000 shares of 25*l.* each, and the deposit required was stated to be 2*l.* 12s. 6*d.* per share. On the 7th of October, 1845, the plaintiff applied to the provisional committee for shares, according to the form directed by the committee; which form it is not necessary now to state. And on the 18th of October, she received a letter of allotment in the following form:—"Letter of allotment. Not transferable. Direct Birmingham, &c. Capital, two millions, in 80,000 shares of 25l. each. Deposit, 2l. 12s. 6d. —The committee of management have allotted to you thirty shares in this undertaking, and I am directed to request you will pay the deposit of 2l. 12s. 6d. per share, amounting to 78l. 15s. into one of the under-mentioned banks, or this allotment will be null and void. This letter will be exchanged for scrip, on your presenting it at the offices of the company, and executing the parliamentary contract. The subscribers' agreement will lie at the offices of the company on and after —, of which due notice will be given." This letter was signed by the secretary, and further set out the names of various bankers, to whom the subscription might be paid; and this letter having been sent to the plaintiff, the plaintiff in due time paid the deposit on the thirty shares to the London Joint Stock Banking Company. On the 27th of October the plaintiff applied for the scrip. The time for delivering the scrip was extended by the provisional committee to the 6th of November. On the 12th of November the plaintiff applied again, and after some other fruitless applications at the office of the company, she was told by the secretary that the directors did not mean to issue scrip; and upon the plaintiff's requesting to have her money repaid to her, the final answer given at the office by one of the provisional committee was, that a statement would be made of the concerns of the company, and that the surplus would be divided. It was admitted at the trial that 400,000 shares had been applied for, and that 70,000 shares had been allotted; but on the 5th of October, 1845, the public confidence in railway schemes having been much shaken, the deposit was paid on 4,000 shares only, a number much too small to justify proceeding with the scheme. The plaintiff, failing to get scrip or her money back, brought the present action. At the trial it was contended by the defendant's counsel that the defendant was not liable under either of the counts in the declaration, the special count, or that for money had and received. A verdict was found for the plaintiff under the direction of the Lord Chief Baron, with leave to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit if there was no evidence to support the verdict, all the points raised by the defendant's counsel being reserved. Accordingly Mr. Martin, in Easter Term, moved for a rule to enter a nonsuit, which was argued before me and my brothers Alderson, Rolfe, and Platt, on the 29th and 30th of May last. For the defendant it was contended that the contract, as laid in the special count, was not proved, and that the defendant was under no contract to deliver scrip. The argument, as to the defendant's liability on the count for money had and received, turned on the question whether the alleged subscribers became quasi partners, and whether their subscriptions went into a common fund to be applied to the general purposes of the undertaking; and with reference to the defendant's liability on the special count, the argument was, that the application being for shares, which shares had been accordingly allotted, she had all that she asked for, and therefore had no ground of complaint. Lastly, it was said there was no evidence of the concern being at an end, as the defendant was not bound by what another member of the committee stated; and that unless the concern was abandoned, money had and received would not lie. For the plaintiff it was argued that the special count was proved, and that there was evidence that the concern was at an end. Nockells v. Crosby (3 B. & C. 814) is an authority that the plaintiff is entitled to recover. We do not think it necessary to give any opinion on the special count, as to which some doubt may well be entertained, because we are all of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover on the count for money had and received; and as the plaintiff cannot be entitled in a case like the present to damages upon the first count for not delivering the scrip, as upon a contract broken, and also to have her money returned as upon a contract rescinded, we are of opinion that the verdict for the plaintiff on the count for money had and received ought to stand; but that the verdict for the plaintiff on the first count ought to be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant. With respect to the first point, whether the plaintiff and the subscribers became quasi partners, and the subscription became a general fund to be divided for the mutual benefit of all, so that no one could claim back his subscription, we are of opinion that such is not the true result of the publication of the prospectus, the application for shares, the allotment, and the payment of the deposit. We think in this case no partnership ever actually commenced. In Fitchford v. Davis (5 M. & W. 2) it was decided that, where a prospectus was issued for a speculation to be carried on by means of a certain capital, the subscriber did not become a partner unless the terms of the prospectus were in that respect complied with. That decision, I believe, has been frequently acted upon in this and the other courts of Westminster Hall. In the case of Nockells v. Crosby (3 B. & C. 814), it seems that a precisely similar document had been given. It appears to us that the application for shares, and the payment of the deposit, amount to nothing if the shares subscribed for are so few that the concern cannot be proceeded with, and the scheme must be abortive. With respect to the point that the plaintiff applied for shares, and that shares were actually allotted, it is a sufficient answer to say, that the allotment of shares in an abortive scheme, which does not correspond with what the prospectus held out, is really not a compliance with the application. This scheme has wholly failed, and ceased, even as a speculation; nothing whatever has been allotted. But it was urged that there was no evidence of the concern being at an end. We think the answer given at the office, by one of the provisional committee, that a statement would be made and the surplus divided, was evidence to go to the jury that the concern was abandoned; and, unopposed as this was by any evidence on the part of the defendant, we think the jury were well warranted in finding that the scheme was at an end. If so, we think, on the authority of Nockells v. Crosby, that the plaintiff is entitled, on the count for money had and received, to recover. A question was made, though not much argued, whether there was any difference between one portion and another of the deposit-money on each share, it being, as we think, manifest that the deposit of 2l. 12s. 6d. consisted of 2s. 6d. being 10s. per cent. on the 25l. in pursuance of the 23rd clause of the Act referred to, and the residue being 10 per cent. required to be deposited by the standing orders of Parliament. We think it is clear beyond all doubt that the amount paid in order to be deposited in pursuance of the standing orders, must be returned to the plaintiff. There is no foundation whatever for the claim to that which was paid for a specific purpose, as the concern was abandoned before the money could be applied to that specific purpose, but we think the remainder of the money may also be claimed back. The judgments of Mr. Justice Holroyd, and Mr. Justice Littleale, in Nockells v. Crosby, apply to this part of the case. To use the language of Mr. Justice Holroyd in that case, "the concern was really never set a-going, and the expenses incurred in setting the scheme on foot are not to be paid out of the concern, unless they are adopted when it is actually in operation. All the steps taken were only preparatory to carrying the project into effect, and as it never was really carried into effect, the plaintiff is entitled to have back the whole deposit." On these grounds we think a verdict ought to be entered for the defendant on the first count, and that a verdict for the plaintiff on the count for money had and received ought to stand, and therefore that there must be judgment for the plaintiff.

Jervis, Q.C.—The defendant will have a verdict on the first count on the plea of non assumpsit only.

POLLOCK, C.B.—Yes.

PLATT, B.—That is quite right. The contract laid in that count was not proved.

Rule absolute to enter the verdict for the defendant on the issue raised by the plea of non assumpsit to the first count, and discharged as to the rest. Judgment to be entered for the plaintiff.

THORNETT V. HAINES.

If a vendor, having advertised property to be sold without reserve, employs a puffer to raise the price at the sale, the deposit money may be recovered back by the party who has paid it.

In order to render the sale invalid, on the ground of puffing, it is not necessary to connect the puffer with the principal by direct proof, indirect evidence is sufficient for this purpose.

This case has been already reported in the Law T. for May 2. Cause having been shewn by Byles, Serjt., Robinson and Wordsworth (Tuesday, April 28), against the rule for a nonsuit obtained by Humfrey, Q.C.; and Humfrey having on that day been heard in support of his rule, the Court thought that if it appeared on consideration that the defendant had been shewn, by the evidence adduced at the trial, to have been connected with certain parties who acted as puffers at the sale, such sale was void by reason of the puffing, but they reserved the question of agency for their consideration. The Court now (Friday, June 12) delivered their opinions at length on the point reserved, and as the main question is really one of considerable importance, it has been thought better to give the judgment in extenso. It would be useless to restate the facts of the case, as they will be easily collected from the judgment.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C.B.—This case was tried before me on the 4th of December last, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to a motion for a nonsuit if the Court should think that Robinson's evidence of what passed on the subject in question was not receivable, or if receivable, was insufficient. In the ensuing Term there was a motion made by Mr. Humfrey for a nonsuit, and cause was shewn by my brother Byles on the 28th of April. I am of opinion, and so is my brother Platt, that this rule ought to be discharged. My brother Parke differs from us; and I will shortly state the points which were made in the argument, and the grounds on which it appears to me the rule ought to be discharged. This was an action for money had and received to recover back a deposit paid on the purchase of an estate at a sale by auction, on the ground that puffers were employed, on behalf of the vendor, at this sale; and that such a description of fraud or improper conduct prevents any contract arising out of the transaction, which can be binding on the plaintiff. At the trial, a person of the name of Fry, who had been previously employed by the defendant, deposed, that he had applied to a person of the name of Robinson, to attend the sale and bid for him. He was to bid up to a certain sum, and then Fry was to tell him if he was to bid further. Accordingly, Robinson attended the auction; he sat on one side, and Fry on the other. He bid 1,200l. Fry did not bid at all. Robinson at last bid up to 1,570l. and then he saw a lady and gentleman leave the room; that lady and gentleman were, in fact, the plaintiff and his wife. The lady, he says, came in again. He did not go beyond 1,570l. because Fry shook his head, and told him to go no further. The other circumstances of the case connecting Fry with the transaction were these: it appeared that Fry had been employed by Walker, the real defendant—the auctioneer. Fry was employed by Walker on former occasions, and on the present occasion Fry was the person who had been referred to. A person of the name of Dickinson, a foreman to Walker, stated that persons were frequently referred to Fry while the house was on sale, and that in this way Fry had appeared to be in communication with Walker, who was the real seller of the property, both on the present and on a former occasion. It appears to me that in the present case, either Fry was bidding for himself, or he was directing Robinson to bid for him, or he was directing Robinson to bid on account of Walker; who is, in reality, the defendant, and who has, no doubt, indemnified the present defendant. I think, in this state of things, it was a fair question for the jury, which of the above suppositions was really correct, and the jury having acted upon the evidence laid before them, which, I must say, I think was undoubtedly receivable, I think the rule for a nonsuit ought to be discharged. I should regret to dispose of the rule upon the very narrow grounds upon which, undoubtedly and strictly, it might be disposed of, the question for the Court merely being whether there is any evidence to go to the jury that Robinson, who was at the auction, did, in reality, bid on behalf of Walker. My brother Parke is of opinion, that this is left too doubtful, and that there is not sufficiently distinct evidence of employment by Walker, so as to make Walker, who is the real defendant, responsible for what is done; but I own, it appears to me, that there is sufficient evidence to warrant the finding of the jury; that we ought not to disturb the verdict; and that this rule ought to be discharged.

PLATT, B.—Upon the argument of this case, three questions were raised: was there evidence to connect the defendant with the puffer? Was the evidence properly admitted? And would it be a defence in a court of law, to prove that the vendor employed that puffer? With regard to the third question, the Court are unanimously of opinion, that if a vendor, having advertised property to be sold without reserve, employs a puffer to raise the price at the sale, the deposit money may be recovered back again. Upon the two other questions, it is proper that the grounds of the difference of opinion, existing amongst the members of this Court, should be stated. Now, the evidence which appeared in the case was this. Fry attended the sale. He employed Robinson to bid until he should reach 1,590l. The plaintiff and his wife attend the sale; they leave the room after a bidding up to 1,570l.; they return, and the wife, not the husband, makes another bidding, advancing to 1,575l., upon which Fry nods to Robinson, importing, as he understood, that he was to stop. It is clear, therefore, what the object of Fry was upon that occasion, in employing Robinson. It was to raise the price if he could to 1,590l.; and when he found a solitary bidder, flagging in the bidding, and there was a danger of not arriving at that sum, and of not getting beyond 1,575l. then he stops the authority, and the premises are knocked down to the purchasers at 1,575l. Would any jury doubt, taking those facts together, that Robinson was a puffer? Well, but that is not enough; you must connect that puffing with the defendant. Suppose Fry had been called, and he had stated, upon his oath, that he was desired to employ a man so to act at the sale, there would be no doubt that he would then be directly connected; but it is not necessary to connect by direct evidence, if you can arrive at facts from which a jury, reasonably considering those facts, might come to the conclusion that Fry was employed by Haines, why then the whole case is proved against Haines. Now what is the evidence to connect Fry? Why, the evidence is this. Fry had been employed by the defendant in purchasing that very house, as his agent, which he was then selling; particulars of sale, published to the world, referred to the house for information, and when the parties went to the house, they were referred to Fry. Well now, taking those two facts together, and coupling it with his conduct at the sale, immense as he could not have any interest at all in raising the price, except he was employed by a person really interested in the price; taking all those facts together, is it not reasonable to conclude he could not so have acted without being employed by Haines to act as he did? It seems to me, on the whole, that the evidence was altogether admissible, and that the jury have given a very proper verdict, by which they fix Haines with the privity of Fry's employment of Robinson to bid.

ROLYE, B.—I only heard part of the argument on one side, and therefore, of course, I can give no opinion. Rule discharged.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Wednesday, June 10.

STANLEY P. LOGIE.—In this case, which was an action on a warranty of potatoes, and in which a verdict was found for the plaintiff, Bumfroy, Q.C. moved for a new trial on the ground of surprise and of misdirection. The first count in the declaration alleged that the sale of the potatoes was by sample, and that the bulk did not correspond with the sample; and the second was framed on the warranty. The learned judge told the jury that there was no evidence on the second count, but left the first to them. The Court, after referring to the evidence, thought that the direction of the learned judge was correct, and refused the rule.

Rule refused.

NEWTON P. THE GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAY COMPANY.—Martin, Q.C. showed cause against the rule nisi obtained by Jervis, Q.C. in this case. The rule called upon the plaintiff to show cause why the date of the entry of judgment should not be altered, and why proceedings should not be stayed on payment of costs. Jervis, Q.C. having been heard in support of his rule, the Court took time to consider.

Cur. adv. vult.

Friday, June 12.

In the matter of GEORGE SALTER.—Jervis showed cause against the rule obtained by Jones in the matter of the above-named George Salter, an attorney, which was shortly mentioned in a recent number of the LAW TIMES.

Rule discharged with costs.

WILSON P. GRAY.—Butt showed cause against the rule for a new trial granted in this case, which turned entirely on the sufficiency of the affidavits on which it was moved, and presented no feature of interest. The Court made the rule absolute on payment of the costs of the trial, and of the present application within a week after taxation, and such sum of money, if any, as a Judge at chambers should order on the plaintiff's application; otherwise the rule to be discharged.

Rule accordingly.

Thursday, June 11.

MIDDLETON V. LEVY.—This was a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence. Whitcomb, Q.C. showed cause.

Rule absolute.

DON DEM. WOOD V. WATKINS.

Referred to the Master.

CLARK V. LEVY.—This was a rule calling on the plaintiff to show cause why the defendant should not have leave to add a plea. Barstow appeared to show cause, and stated he could not resist the rule being made absolute.

REG. V. ROBERT WORTLEY AND JOHN ALLEN.

Larceny in a church—Box affixed to pew—

Statement of property.

Upon an indictment for stealing a box and coin in a parish church, it appeared that the box was an ancient box, fixed by screws to a pew in the middle aisle, with an inscription on it, "Remember the poor;" and that there were two locks to the box, but there was no evidence to show who had the custody of the keys, or that the churchwardens or any other person had ever taken out the money for distribution. Held, that the property was well laid in J. N. and others, it being proved that J. N. was the vicar of the parish.

The two prisoners, together with another person not in custody, were indicted before Tindal, C.J. at the last assizes for the county of Northampton, for feloniously and sacrilegiously breaking and entering the parish church of Oundle, in the county of Northampton, and stealing a certain box and a quantity of silver and copper coin, in the said church being found and being. The property in the said box and coin was laid, in the first count, in Charles Thomas Wilson and another; in the second count, in Joshua Nussey and others; and in the third count, in Samuel Tibbetts and others.

The jury acquitted the prisoners of breaking and entering into the church, and found them guilty of stealing only.

Whereupon an objection was taken by the prisoners' counsel, that the box was fixed to the freehold of the church, and formed part of the freehold; and that there was no count in the indictment properly framed under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, ss. 3, 4, and 44, to warrant a conviction for "stealing a fixture fixed in or to any building" (see Res v. Nixon, 7 C. & P. 442); and further, that the box, being a fixture to the church, formed part of the freehold of the church; and there was no count stating the property to be in the vicar or rector, in whom the freehold of the church was vested by law.

The box was a very ancient box, firmly fixed by two screws at the back to the outside of a pew in the centre aisle of the church, and by a third screw at the bottom to a supporter beneath; and over the box was an ancient board, with the inscription painted thereon, "Remember the poor." There were two locks to the box, but no evidence was given to show in whose custody the keys of such locks were kept, nor was there any evidence that the money had ever been taken out by the churchwardens, or any other person, for the purpose of being distributed, although it was proved that both silver and copper had from time to time been dropped into the box.

It was further objected that the property, as to the money, was improperly laid in each count of the indictment.

In the first count, in which the property is described to be in Charles Thomas Wilson and another, Charles Thomas Wilson was one out of two churchwardens of the parish; in the second count, in which the property was laid in Joshua Nussey and others, Joshua Nussey was the vicar of the parish; and in the last count, in which the property was described to be in Samuel Tibbetts and others, Samuel Tibbetts was one out of many parishioners.

It was contended that the churchwardens could have no property, as churchwardens, in this money; that in no view of the case could the vicar and any others have the property; and that even if it belonged to the parishioners, which it was agreed could not be the case, such property should have been laid in them by the description of parishioners.

The learned judge thought there was sufficient difficulty in the case to reserve the judgment, and to request the opinion of the judges; intending, if the conviction should be supported, that the prisoners should be sentenced to seven years' transportation.

Flood, for the prisoners.—First, There is a general objection to all the counts; the property is laid in certain persons by name, but there is no description of the office by virtue of which they hold the property. This is contrary to all the precedents. (R. v. Barton, 1 Ry. & Moo. C.C. 237; R. v. Went, Russ. & R. C.C. 359.) [TINDAL, C.J.—That shows that churchwardens may be described by their name of office, but does it follow that you must so describe them? There is no decision on the point; but the precedents are uniform. [TINDAL, C.J. referred to stat. 59 Geo. 3, c. 17.] That makes churchwardens a body corporate, and authorizes the description of them in any action or indictment by their corporate name. In the case of R. v. Beacall (Ry. & M. C.C. 15), an indictment under a local Act was framed in the way now contended for. Churchwardens must so describe themselves when they sue as churchwardens (Hadman v. Ringwood, Cro. Eliz. 146), and if, in an indictment, property is laid in them because they are churchwardens, it must describe them as churchwardens, otherwise the indictment would be satisfied by evidence that the goods belonged to parties who were not churchwardens. A conviction or acquittal upon an indictment laying the property in certain persons not described as churchwardens could not be pleaded to an indictment laying it in them as churchwardens, because in the latter case it is ad damnum parochianorum, but not in the former. (Hadman v. Ringwood, Cro. Eliz. 179.)

[CRESSWELL, J. referred to Taylor v. Parner (1 Vent. 88).] Secondly, the box and the money could not be the property of the churchwardens; churchwardens have no property in things found in the church, unless they are things with regard to which they have some concern in the discharge of their duties as churchwardens. For example, they have a property in the bell-ropes, because it is their duty to provide and repair them; and in tools left by workmen in the church, because the reparation of the church is within the scope of their duty (Jackson v. Adams, 2 Bing. N.C. 402); but it is no part of the duty of churchwardens to fix boxes to the pews in the church. It is said in Barn's Justice (citing Year Book, 12 Hen. 7, 29 a), that gifts to the church are gifts to the churchwardens; but there is no evidence that this box or money were gifts to the church. [TINDAL, C.J.—Stat. 27 Hen. 8, c. 25, expressly requires a poor-box to be kept in the church; and one of the canons directs the churchwardens to keep a strong chest, to which there were to be three keys.] This box had not three keys, but only two. and the offertory-money was not put into it; but at all events, if this box had been put up under that statute, then the churchwardens for that purpose are a corporation; and R. v. Beacall shows that they must be described as churchwardens. [TINDAL, C.J.—But the box and money were in the custody and care of the vicar and churchwardens, and the question is whether, nobody else appearing, the property is not theirs.] The statute (59 Geo. 3), which gives to the churchwardens and overseers a corporate character, and provides that they may be described by their corporate name, affords an argument against this indictment, which gives the names of the individuals but not the office. (Ward v. Clarke, 13 Law J. N.S. Exch. 229.) Lastly, it appeared that the box in question was affixed to a pew facultied to a particular hospital; and there being no evidence who had the key of the box, the prima facie presumption is, that the box belonged to that hospital. [PARKE, B.—Would it not rather belong to the rector? If so, there is no count laying the property in the rector.

Cur. adv. vult.

Afterwards the judges assembled to consider the case, and held that the property was well laid in the second count. Conviction held right.

MAIL COURT.

Thursday, June 11.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

BOULTON V. FRITCHARD.

When, upon the trial of a cause, evidence is improperly rejected, which, if admitted, must have been decisive of the case, and the jury, notwithstanding this, find a verdict for the party tendering it, there being no other evidence produced by him, the Court will not disturb such verdict if it is satisfied that substantial justice has been done, and that the result must be the same if a new trial were granted.

Greaves showed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the defendant obtained on the trial of this cause before the sheriff of Gloucestershire, and for a new trial. The action was on debt by the plaintiff, who was a drover, and the particulars delivered were as follows:—

"This action is brought to recover the sum of 8l. 11s. 11d. being the balance due from the defendant to the plaintiff on the following account:—

1845
Aug. 1 to 9	} To 9 days, at 3s. 6d. per day	1	11	6
Oct. 10 to Dec. 22
	To 74 days, at 3s. 6d. per day	12	19	0
	Paid for feed of cattle, pikes, and men to assist during these periods, at plaintiff's request
		30	16	5

Balance due 8 11 11
"Above are the particulars," &c. &c.

A summons having been taken out by the defendant for a better particular of the third item of 30l. 16s. 5d. in the plaintiff's demand, an order was made upon the plaintiff for "a further and better account in writing, with dates and items, of the particulars of the plaintiff's demand for which this action is brought, as to the last item," &c. In pursuance of this order, a fresh particular was delivered, not only of the said item of 30l. 16s. 5d. but of the two preceding items of 1l. 11s. 6d. and 12l. 19s. but no mention was made in this second particular of "By cash at various times 36l. 15s." The defendant pleaded one plea, viz. "never indebted." An order for a trial before the sheriff of Gloucestershire having been obtained, the writ of trial was sent down, attached to which were the particulars last delivered only, and which contained no admission of the payments by the defendant, as in the first particulars. At the trial, the plaintiff proved a debt to the amount of 22l. odd. The defendant's attorney then cross-examined the last witness as to certain payments made by defendant to plaintiff, which course was objected to by the plaintiff's counsel; the under-sheriff, however, permitted the witness to be cross-examined as to moneys advanced to the plaintiff for expenses incurred by him on the road with the defendant's cattle, but not as to money paid by defendant to plaintiff generally, as there was no plea of payment, and the particulars gave no credit for payments, and although, therefore, the defendant proved that he had advanced to the plaintiff more than sufficient to liquidate his claim, the under-sheriff would not allow any portion to be set against the plaintiff's claim for wages. The defendant's attorney then tendered in evidence the particulars of demand as at first delivered, and wherein there was an admission of the payment of 36l. 15s. which, however, was rejected by the under-sheriff, who, in his summing up, advised the jury to find for the plaintiff to the amount of 8l. 1s. the sum proved for wages. The jury, however, gave a verdict for the defendant, whereupon this rule was moved as a verdict against evidence. It was now contended against the rule, that the under-sheriff was wrong in rejecting the evidence tendered of the first particular, wherein credit was given for 36l. 15s.; and that, inasmuch as substantial justice has been done by the verdict, and the result on a second trial would inevitably be the same, the rule ought to be discharged. (Kenyon v. Wakes, 2 M. & W. 764; Booth v. Howard, 5 Dowl. 438; Eastwick v. Harman, 6 M. & W. 13; Booley v. Moore, 8 Dowl. 375; Townson v. Jackson, 13 M. & W. 374; Rowlands v. Blakley, 1 Q. B. 403; Morgan v. Harris, 1 Dowl. 570; Smethurst v. Taylor, 14 L. J. Ex. 86; Bright v. Eyrton, 1 Burr. 395; Smith v. Brampton, 2 Salk. 644; Macrow v. Hull, 1 Burr. 11; Edmonds v. —, 2 Jurist, 4; Farewell v. Chaffey, 1 Burr. 54; Wilkins v. Payne, 4 T. R. 468; Fascroft v. Devonshire, 2 Burr. 936; Greave v. Barrett, 5 Tyrw. 475; Doce dem. Rutzen v. Farr, 4 Ad. & Ell. 53; Wright v. Tatham, 7 Ad. & Ell. 313.)

Peacock, contra, contended that whether the under-sheriff was, or was not, right in rejecting the evidence, the verdict as it stood was wholly unsupported by any evidence; and that there was no instance in which the Court had refused a new trial under such circumstances, and that if the case went again down to trial, the plaintiff might be enabled to prove a greater demand.

WIGHTMAN, J.—This case undoubtedly differs considerably from any that have been cited, and for some time I had considerable doubts whether or not I ought to grant a new trial; but upon the whole I think it is within the principle of the cases that have been referred to, and that I ought not to grant a new trial, since it is clear that the jury have come to a correct conclusion, although upon insufficient evidence, for, taking the evidence of the defendant as it ought to have been received, it appears that credit was given for money, as shown by the particulars, more than sufficient to cover the plaintiff's demand, as proved at the trial. But it is said that, notwithstanding this, as there was no plea of payment on the record, the defendant was not entitled to give these payments in evidence; but it must be remembered, that the reason for dispensing with a plea of payment is, because the particulars admit it. Now it appears here, that in the first particulars credit was given for payments, and then a summons was taken out for a better particular of one of the items of the plaintiff's demand, and then he makes out a fresh particular of his whole claim, omitting altogether the payments for which he had before given credit, and annexes these latter particulars only to the record. Now it is clear that he ought to have annexed the first particular as well as the amended one, and it would be letting the plaintiff avail himself of his own wrong to grant this rule. If, then, upon the whole case it appears that this verdict which has been given, will be again given, to what purpose shall I send the case down for a new trial? No doubt, if the evidence of the first particulars had been received, the verdict would have been right; and, indeed, if the evidence had been in fact received, and the verdict had been returned for the plaintiff, the defendant would have been justified in applying for a new trial. Without, therefore, laying down any strict rule upon the subject, it certainly seems to me that if a new trial were granted, only the same result would be come to, and therefore that I ought not to grant it.

Rule discharged.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Thursday, May 21.

(Before Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD.)

Re MACDONALD.

An insolvent must describe himself in his petition by the names by which he has been known. Thus, where he had been christened in Spain as "Juan," and here had in some Chancery proceedings styled himself "Juan, otherwise John": Held, that "John" alone was insufficient, and that the petition must be dismissed.

Although the petition is dismissed, the insolvent is still a suitor of the Court until his return home, provided he use no improper delay, and therefore is privileged from arrest.

The petitioner had, in his petition for protection, described himself as "John Macdonald." On his application for the interim order, it appeared on his examination, that he was a native of Spain and had been baptized by the name of "Juan." He had also in some Chancery proceedings styled himself "Juan, otherwise John Macdonald."

Steele, for the opposing creditors, contended that this was a misdescription,—that the petition must be dismissed.

Buchanan, as attorney for the insolvent, argued that as "Juan" and "John" were both the same name in fact, only in different languages, the insolvent, when in England, was rightly called John.

His HONOUR, however, considered the objection fatal. The petitioner had recognized his name of "Juan" in England. Could he have sworn that he had never used it, the case might have been different. This petition must be dismissed, but the insolvent might file another.

It appeared that immediately upon this decision a ca. sa. was placed by Mr. Steele in the hands of one of the sheriff's officers against the insolvent, with directions to execute it.

The officer applied to the Court for advice under the circumstances, whether the defendant was privileged.

His HONOUR considered that while the insolvent was engaged in coming to the court, or going from it, he was a suitor, and as such privileged from arrest, provided he used no undue delay, or went out of his proper road.

The officer said that he should decline to execute the warrant.

Wednesday, June 17.

(Before Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN.)

Ex parte SHEFFIELD.

Important rule—Costs of fiat on bankrupt's own petition.

As a general rule, the Commissioners will allow to the solicitor to a trader suing out of a fiat against himself, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 41, the same costs as to the solicitor to a petitioning creditor under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 14, unless it be shewn that he had been previously paid, or that there was ground to suspect fraud or collusion between him and the trader.

Mr. Commissioner GOULBURN, on the appearance of Mr. Lawrence in court this morning, stated that he had submitted the question raised by that gentleman on Friday, the 12th ult. to his learned brothers of the Subdivision Court, and they were agreed in the rule upon which they proposed hereafter to act in such cases. The question raised was, whether the solicitor to a trader suing out a fiat against himself under the provisions of the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 41, stood in the same position, as to the costs for suing out such fiat, as the solicitor to a petitioning creditor under the 14th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, and whether the Court were equally bound in the first case, as in the last, "to ascertain such costs at the sitting for the choice of assignees, and direct the assignees, when chosen, to pay such costs out of the first moneys got in under the fiat." Mr. Lawrence had strongly insisted that the latter part of the 41st section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, which ran in these words, "And all further proceedings under such fiat shall be thenceforth prosecuted and carried on in like manner as if such fiat had been issued and adjudicated upon on the petition of a creditor of a bankrupt," was sufficient to place a bankrupt petitioning and a creditor petitioning precisely on the same footing, and bring them equally under the provisions of the 14th sec. of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. His Honour said, that his brother Commissioners and himself were not disposed to go to the full length of such a proposition, nor did they consider it imperative on them to award such costs under the statute; but, treating the question as one in which a discretion might be exercised according to the facts of each case, the general rule would be to allow such costs to the solicitor suing out the fiat, unless it could be shewn that he had previously been paid, or that there was ground to suspect fraud or collusion between him and the trader seeking relief through the Court.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE only legislative proceeding of the week having any interest for the Profession, is the passing of the Railway Companies' Dissolution Bill, which all companies involved in litigation ought to lose no time in adopting; and if the directors decline, the shareholders should proceed without them. The Bill for the establishment of Small Debts Courts has been laid upon the table of the House of Lords. We hope to present our readers with an abstract of it next week.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

COUNTY LUNATIC ASYLUM ACT.

MONDAY, June 15.—The Duke of RICHMOND inquired whether the government intended to bring in a bill explanatory of this Act?—The Duke of WELLINGTON's reply was all but perfectly laudable in the gallery. The impression prevailed, however, that it was to the effect that the subject would come under the notice of Parliament.

HOUSES OF REFUGE FOR DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

The Duke of RICHMOND asked whether government had any intention of instituting inquiries as to providing houses of refuge for persons discharged from prison.—The Duke of WELLINGTON had made inquiries upon the subject. He hoped that a measure would be brought forward, but its introduction depended in no inconsiderable degree upon the course adopted by Parliament with reference to a bill now under discussion in the other house, providing for the transfer of criminal prosecutions from the county rates to the consolidated funds.

SMALL DEBTS.

The Duke of BUCKLEIGH laid on the table a bill intended to facilitate the recovery of small debts in England.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

RAILWAY COMPANIES' DISSOLUTION BILL.

FRIDAY, June 12.—On the motion that this bill be read a third time—Mr. HUDSON moved the insertion of the two clauses of which he had given notice. The clauses were agreed to, and the bill was read a third time and passed.
